Members of the Puerto Rican community in Florence Heights are making their demands known through the Tenants Organization which involves other working class sectors of Northampton. Among their real, gut needs are security protection (see the women's case), sanitary standards (tenants presently must save all their garbage in their apartments for a week awaiting collection day), and recreation facilities (in such tight quarters, the children can only play along the grassless and glassful pavements while adults and youths "hang out").

The black college student must make the black college a base for revolutionary black nationalist thought. The college must become the black freedom figher's haven, where he is protected and defended. The college becomes his office. The black college student's main emphasis should be to bring the skills he is acquiring back into the community by establishing black community institutes and new schools for black thought and by setting up liberation schools and adult education classes. At the same time, the black student should be active in community projects that help build local community power. He should be helping the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party, the National Democratic Party of Alabama, the Republic of New Africa, the Student National Coordinating Committee, and other community projects. The black college student must form institutions in the community uniting their efforts with community youth to establish permanent bases in the community.

At the same time, many black college youth should be thinking of re-orientating the black middle class by infiltrating and becoming part of the black middle class, obtaining positions of power and respect. In a revolution, it is necessary for all revolutionaries to be known as such. We must use wisdom. There is a great need for more Julian Bonds. More and more black college students should think about running for public offices challenging those who do not represent our interests. Black high school and junior high school students must actively push their parents, re-educating them, shaming them if necessary, to becoming active in the community-control-of-schools struggle. Black high school and junior high school students are in the vanguard of the struggle; therefore, they must constantly work on their parents, teaching them the realities of the black revolution. It has been said: "In the last days the children shall be the teachers."

Black students must push for black parent-teacher associations to back up their student unions. After developing strong local student unions, black students should encourage their mothers and fathers to form black unions in their jobs. Black youth can play a catalystic role in politicalizing the black community. In every home there should be a liberation school. The cultural revolution is a revolution of values that can be transmitted from this youth generation to the adult generation, closing "the generation gap." Black youth must begin to structure themselves as a nation; be active in forming black community government, parties, and functioning as part of the black liberation army. Finally black youth can play a unifying role by pressuring leaders to form a national black united front.

As the legal means of protest begin to be exhausted, more and more black youth will begin to see that the only solution is self-determination. With Robert F. Williams back in the country, black youth now have a symbol which they can rally and unite around.

Black student rebellions have not been as effective as they could because they are still uncoordinated and spontaneous in character. In order to reach a revolutionary perspective, black students must see each campaign they engage in as part of the overall liberation struggle and must see each demonstration as a guerrilla action.

Student demonstrations must serve as "Black Offensives," helping to dislocate the enemy's system, helping the brothers in the street in the protracted war. The student community must be seen as a part of the total community. Effective action must be national in scope. The reason the sit-in movement had so much effect was because of its blitzkrieg character, hitting different communities in rapid sequence, dislocating the entire nation.

Black students must try to word their demands where their demonstrations will really touch, reach, and affect their mothers and fathers. In this context, black students, after developing a national organization, could be very helpful to the black liberation struggle. For instance, if hospital workers in Charleston, S.C. should go on strike, black students across America should strike in support of them and call on their mothers and fathers and black workers at large to strike in support of them. In this way, black students would be playing a direct role in the liberation struggle.

One of the first attempts at national organization was the convening of the Black Youth Congress held in Cincinnati, Ohio, May 30 of this year. But if black students are to be effective, they must develop local community-based youth organizations that can mobilize their area on a moment's notice. Black youth have the power of causing dislocation in a sensitive part of the system. Social or community dislocation has long been a tactic of the struggle. Black youth must explore new means of community dislocation.

Black people have more power than we realize, but what hinders us from having power is our lack of organization. Black workers, forming 90 per cent of our people, are the base of our people's movement. Therefore, the key question for black youth, students, and revolutionaries is the organization, coordination, and unity of black workers. If black workers should go on a national strike, all of America would be dislocated. This must become one of the organizational goals of black youth: the National Black Strike.

With the enemy preparing to put black militants in concentration camps, black youth have only one alternative, to unite or perish.

Our tasks are these:

1 — Educate the Afro-Americans to the economic, political, social, and cultural bases of the racial situation in the United States and the world.

2 — Develop unity with Africans and other peoples of the world.

3 — Unite and organize Afro-American students to become the active leadership in the Afro-American national liberation struggle.

Our purpose calls for the development of caste and class consciousness of the black youth of the United States, to arouse them to see the true nature of its racist society. We must become imbued with the determination, ability, and readiness to unite and organize our forces for liberation. We must transform the will of millions of people otherwise disunited, dispersed, and scattered over the country, into a single will, dedicated to liberation. When a child is murdered by bombs in the Congo or Vietnam, it is the same as a child murdered in a church bombing in Alabama or Harlem. Bloodshed is the same everywhere and so is freedom and justice. Young people over the world oppose injustice. We should not let any barrier be placed between us in our struggle to obtain freedom and justice. We have the whole world at stake, so we must not fail. We must unite, we must struggle together for freedom, and build the world anew.

Black Dance Is What's Happening

By SANDRA JACKSON

Lori Cabrera, dancer, is currently featured with UNITY ENSEMBLE and has a few thoughts on the art form in America.

In an interview with 'Padmore Omard' (Wadada Tzake), of NUMMO, Lori says "I see black music as being a reflection of the reality of the black experience in America," but she also feels that due to the European indoctrination in dance which expresses itself in abstraction, "dancers do not dance with the music".

Lori is a young sister. Young but with a wide background in dance. She schooled in the famous High School of Performing Arts in New York City and is presently in her sophomore year, majoring in dance at Purchase University (New York). A vocal and articulate sister, she has definite opinions about the direction dance is taking and its special relevance to black folks.

Lori is also vocal with her body, which was saying at the Steak-Out on Saturday night exactly what Brother Wadada heard from the sister on Sunday morning. She believes in improvisation. Most dancers, she feels are incapable of moving spontaneously "where you no longer concentrate on the technique but on the expression of the reality" with the music.

Improvisation she feels is essential on an artistic level because it has the potential for the creation of a new culture in American society. She disagrees with the standard concept of choreography because it does not allow dancers to express themselves.

What about the black dancer and American dance?

"More contemporary black music" Lori says "needs to be used in the dancing profession."

She also says that creative dance is very meaningful to her as a black dancer.

"It's what's happening but professional dancing has become too money-oriented".

The black dancer in America has to be versatile in order to get over in a highly competitive field. Lori's movements in performance with the UNITY ENSEMBLE reflects both the versatility of her training and that special something that makes a dancer a performer — talent.

SHADOW AT THE STEAK OUT

By SANDRA JACKSON

The Steakout over on Route 9 was transformed last week. And I think the echoes of what went down are going to linger on for a little time to come, put a little life into the place.

From Wednesday, November 3 through Sunday the 7th powerful music, in the form of UNITY ENSEMBLE was rumbling in the ears of the crowd, and on Saturday night it was a full house. It has been over a year since I've checked the brothers out and all I can say is the cats is — sho'nough moving. They've acquired that polish that comes from growing, working together and the arrangements have become tighter and stronger.

They've also branched out, bringing a dancer into the act in the person of Lori Cabrera.

Bringing in another art form was a good move, it opens up another dimension in experiencing and appreciating the music. Sister Lori prove adept in the art of improvisation and although there were one or two technical problems, (the sister hasn't done much work with UNITY and I saw a little hesitation, a tuning in to the feel of the music. Lori's interpretation of the music to dance and especially the "duet" with drummer-percussionist Chris Henderson was both rootsy and abstract at the same time. She has obviously had some background in African dance of which was present in (though not laid on to) her improvisation.

It's good news when black artists from different genres get together and double-hip when they can make the relationship a successful and creative. Hope they continue opening up in this positive direction.

Another treat for the night was Sister Semenya McCord, doing some vocal numbers. Semenya started out as vocalist with UNITY some 1¼ years ago, and is now working with another local group SUNLIGHT N' SHADE.

It was good to hear them together again Semenya was really shining on her rendition of "Love Dreams", an Art Matthews composition.

I caught the second show on Saturday night. In addition to the consistently strong work of saxophonists-reeds man, Sulaiman Hakin and the collective performance of the UNITY personnel, we had Chris Henderson doing some very interesting things on drums and percussion and a solo by bassist Alex Blake sent the audience wild with applause.

Other UNITY members were Art Matthews on piano and guitarist Butch (I'm sorry I don't know what your last name is brother). And they were jamming.

Being as how I personally haven't had access to much classical (otherwise known as jazz) music in the past year getting back into UNITY ENSEMBLE last Saturday was a nice homecoming for my ears.

I want to say a little bit about the situation of Black support for Black Arts in the area, which I can say I think the state of affairs is some what improved. There were a good number of bloods at the Steak-Out on Saturday night (although it could have been better). And I understand that the black turnout to some per cent happenings has been good. There's still however, long road to travel before we can say that black folks in the valley are supporting that stuff.

I've been told that local artists UNITY ENSEMBLE gig on the average of once every three months which, although it may be a little more play than they been getting, it ain't hardly enough to say hey when you about being an artists an that's your livlihood. Their playing at the Steak-Out is cool, and sho'ly hip that the white folks are getting into the music. However Black folks around here have enough know-how and resources to be sponsoring such things on our own, if you dig where I'm coming from the Carlos Garnett concert (which I heard was baa-ad!) downstairs in New Africa House is proof right there.

Another thing is this, I think that there needs to be some education process going on, as we are in an educational environment. We need to learn more about our culture. Like I was talking to Brother Sulaiman the other day and he was talking about an "out" situation that's we got here. Not only he says do we have a lack of support for the art but "some brothers have actually told me that the music we're playing is white folks music."

There is some for real ignorance going on in the black community. Hey black musicians, dancers, artist out there how about us some "Culture Appreciation' classes? I know it sounds kind of sub-basic, but I think we need it.

And for the brother who made that remark about 'white folks' music, and for people who feel that way, I bet you ain't never checked the brothers out. There's really no excuse to out here, because look they're bringing the stuff to you putting it right up under your nose so you ain't got no excuse not to check it out. Maybe in the city you would never have thought of going to hear some so-called "jazz music." But now you here you might as well take advantage of the situation because chances are you will never again witness the explosion of talent you got coming through the place.

And finally to the bloods who been in their steady on the case, keep it up.

SOUNDS IN MOTION

By ANNIE CARPENTER

On Saturday October 30, 1976 at 8:00 p.m. the University of Massachusetts Arts Council presented Sound in Motion at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

Sound in Motion is a company of black dancers and musicians under the directions of choreographer Dianne McIntyre. The intent of the Company is to present the life 'experience of blacks, past and present, and to explore a contemporary mode of expression through the collaboration of the choreographer, black musicians, poets and designers. The dance style, therefore, evolves out of the intent of the work, rather than depending solely on previously established dance techniques.

Dianne McIntyre, a native of Cleveland, did undergraduate and graduate work in dance at Ohio State University. She has also been on the dance faculty there, as well as at the University of Wisconsin in Milwaukee, the dance theatre of Harlem, and New York's High School of Performing Arts, who is now based in Harlem, New York.

Ms. McIntyre and her dance company displayed and advanced form of concentration where the performance of the body moves were the results of separating the physical body from the spiritual body. The spiritual body then goes off collecting data and feeding the collected data to the physical body so that it may perform and relay the most powerful message of soul to the people. Through performance and skill the dancers are taken to levels beyond what they thought they could do states Ms. McIntyre.

She then stressed the importance of commitment to self in order to enhance concentration of stepping out from the body to set self free of the pain that the dance moves may induce.

She then said that dance for her is a way of life. Where her intent is that of enlightenment rather than that of a financial matter. She also feels that in the field of dance regarding black people is the fear that they will not make the connection of themselves with the dance. "There are things that I am trying to say in the dance that have to do with the essence, the truth and the history of black people. It's something that I try to communicate through the dance in a way that might be easier for people to receive then it someone stood up and just told them about it," states Ms. McIntyre.

Dianne McIntyre is a young black woman who is surely out of another time and who has found a way to use her natural beauty to break ties of slavery. Yes, indeed Dianne McIntyre is a free woman.

THE FISK JUBILEE SINGERS

ANNIE CARPENTER

On Wednesday, Nov. 3, 1976 the University of Massachusetts Arts Council presented the Fisk Jubilee Singers under the director of Matthew Kennedy.

Mr. Kennedy states that the Fisk Jubilee Singers started with a group of nine persons who sat out on a tour to raise money to save Fisk University as it was in poor financial condition and appeared that the school might be lost.

Since 1871 when the singers first started their tour to save their school. They have traveled extensively both at home and abroad.

Today the singers are from all parts of the country. They combined in their programs the pure spiritual with folk songs from other countries and the music of the masters.

The singers not only kept a land mark out of history going, but just the scund of their voice make one feel good all over.

Bottle bill recount sought

By RICK GUREGHIAN
Collegian Staff

Still reeling from their defeat at the hands of anti-Bottle Bill forces, The Committee for a Massachusetts Bottle Bill announced Friday they intend to petition Secretary of State Paul Guzzi for a recount on Referendum Question No. 6.

The question, which was narrowly defeated by a still unofficial count of less than 20,000 votes in the Nov. 2 election, would have required a deposit on all bottles and cans in the state.

Although the unofficial tally is over the .5 per cent margin needed for a recount, Bottle Bill proponents maintain that they have filed, in the event that final official tally falls within the legal margin for a recount.

Susan Kaplan, a Mass-Public Interest Research Group coordinator and UMass student said in a released text "our analysis of the most current and accurate election results document that the Bottle Bill was one of the closest in Massachusetts electoral history, despite our opponents million dollar public relations campaign against Question 6. Thus, we are initiating the recount process. The first step in this process involves the collection of one thousand signatures of registered voters from one or more cities or towns."

The most recent count concerning the Bottle Bill defeat had the Bottle Bill proponents prevailing 1,220,722 to 1,201,579. The National Election Service has stated that nine precincts are still uncounted and the secretary of state's office says they may not have the official tally until mid-month, thereby necessitating the early petition application of the Committee for a Massachusetts Bottle Bill.

Under state law, a petition recount request must be filed within 10 days proceeding an election, and with the official tally not expected for at least another week, the committee was forced to file, although they are still outside the legal number required by law.

Similar bottle bills in other states met mixed reaction. Michigan and Maine passed their bottle bill tests, but Colorado voters defeated their referenda. In Maine, the margin of victory was a scant eight per cent, but enough to join it with Vermont as the only New England states yet to pass such measures.

'Multinationals threaten Third World'

By VVKANIN MAGUBANE
KATHE SANDLER
Collegian Staff

"Unless an undeveloped country controls its own economy it is not really free but a colony of the motherland — of the multicorporation," said Mendi Nsanga, a visiting professor from Zaire, at Moore house last night.

Nsanga, here by personal invitation from Chancellor Bromery, spoke to an interracial group in the first of a series of lectures sponsored by the Center for Racial Understanding.

Nsanga has written ten international articles on the subject of financial capital and the economic development of Zaire.

The multinationals in the Third World countries pose the biggest threst to the nations themselves, Nsanga said.

Nsanga served as head of the department of Earth Science, and Vice-Dean of the School of Natural Sciences, at the National University of Zaire.

He is a field and mining geologist. His field of study includes the utilization of mineral resources and economic development.

Nsanga speaks six languages including French, Swahili, Tshalba, Hipala, German and Enlish.

Nsanga said the multicorporations are an American phenomenon, and cited General Motors as an example of a multinational corporation.

Multinationals go into underdeveloped nations under guise of helping, but exploit rather than help, Nsanga said.

The Center for Racial Understanding will present Acklyn Lynch on Wednesday November 17 on politics in a lecture entitled Toward 1980; Some Stategies for Scientific Process.

Anybody can be a feminist, male or female...some of my best friends are men...

—Charlotte Allen

One woman's voice

By D.A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

For Charlotte Allen, a Collegian columnist, being a campus personality "Sometimes gets me down, and sometimes it's nice."

Allen writes a column in the Collegian once a week. "I don't pretend to represent the womens' community. I speak for myself, my feelings. And feelings are not to be negated," she said.

Allen is in her fourth year at UMass and is majoring in Womens' Studies and Communication Studies. She was born in Connecticut, but "my heart is in New Hampshire," she said. She has also lived in Wellesley and Rhode Island.

"Anybody can be a feminist, male or female," Allen said. "It is the integration of a philosophy, politics, and an ideology that strives to eradicate sexism in our society."

"Men can't know the intricacies of being a woman, but that doesn't mean that we can't work toward the same thing. Something irksome to sensitive women is a man who professes to be a feminist, who talks that way, but whose actions don't show it. When you call them on that, some of them get defensive."

On being a feminist, Allen said, "I wouldn't have it any other way." Allen said during her senior year of high school, an English teacher introduced her to the book The Female Eunuch.

"I considered myself a liberated woman, although I didn't understand the politics of it, that came with the Womens' Studies Program up here," she said.

"The most important thing feminism means to me is that I'm strong, emotionally strong in terms of self-confidence. Knowing you can go out and do something. Being intellectually strong is another thing, and physical strength, being healthy. I don't think you can have a healthy mind without a healthy body."

"Womens' Studies can be very enlightening," Allen said, "and frustrating in that the more learned about sexism, how and why it continues, is very devastating. Sexism is a paradigm."

In terms of the Womens' Movement, Allen said, "There are visible signs such as women equalizing the legislation, women organizing daycare, eliminating sexist books in schools and stopping sterilization of Third World Women. You can't determine the strength and weakness of the movement. There is a sense of solidarity that women have among themselves. It is hard to have a close-knit organization in a movement which encompasses half the population. Women are starting to do things and realize that perhaps they are now what some men have been telling them they are.

"In terms of this campus, it's hard to weigh the strength of the movement. On one hand you have Women's centers on campus, and dances at Farley, and a lot of dynamite programs given by and for women, but rapes have increased.

"I didn't just become a feminist, I just realized it," Allen said. "It's not something that just happens overnight. It is finding out who you are, your strengths and weaknesses, finding your potential, and building self-confidence."

Allen is an only daughter with two younger brothers. "My mother is very strong, I learned a lot from her about being strong in the face of crisis. Being a rape victim was crucial in my development as a feminist. I felt

Central caucus formation urged

By ROSEMARY CONWAY
Collegian Staff

Through a Central Area Caucus formed from area senators, the Central Area can be better represented as a block in the senate, said Paul Cronin.

Cronin and Jay A. Martus, co-presidents of the Undergraduate Student senate spoke last night at the Central Area Government meeting.

Cronin said Central Area residents could be better represented in the senate if senators from Central met and acted as a caucus on issues affecting the area.

"Senators from Central must become a real presence at both the senate meetings and the Central Area Government," Cronin said.

Cronin and Martus said they consider the senate and area governments to be of equal standing within the Student Government Association (SGA).

They recognized though that "a lot of people (in the senate) look down on area governments."

Central Area Government Treasurer Anthony Burts said he felt area governments are placed in a subordinate position to the senate, because it has to provide rationales to the senate for its funding.

Charisse Williams of Butterfield dormitory objected to the proposed zero-based budgeting system, by which money is allocated to Recognized Student Organizations (RSO) on the basis of past productivity.

Williams said the system resembles a "big brother" presence and questioned how "productivity" would be determined in the evaluations.

Cronin said he felt the rationales and purposes of all RSO groups would be taken into consideration.

A motion to allocate $125 to the New World Center for a party to be held Saturday, November 20th was tabled until next week. The party will be in Butterfield dormitory to complete the Third World Cultural Weekend.

The party will start about 12:30 a.m., and is open to Central Area residents. "Be prepared to stay up all night," said Nkrumah Olinga from Butterfield.

President Janice Perry told the government there was a meeting of the Presidents' Council last Thursday night, where the fee increases and zero budgeting of the senate was discussed.

One result is that petitions will circulating next week to protest the Residence Hall Telephone Trust Fund fee increase of $6 for next fall, and to request that the Administration act on the students' behalf in this matter with regard to New England Telephone company.

Elevator electrocution avoided

By ROBERT LESLIE

A Physical Plant employe escaped probable electrocution yesterday in Kennedy Tower when he was forced to leap from the elevator where he was working on some high voltage wires. The employe noticed water pouring down the elevator shaft and escaped injury by jumping through the elevator doors to the seventh floor.

Robert G. Joyce, Capt. UMass Dept. of Public Safety said the elevator door on the sixteenth floor was probably the place where the water was poured from because of evidence that the door latch and guard had been forced open. The case is currently under investigation by the police.

Arrests

Scott T. Ardiff, 17, of 17 Webster Ct. Amherst, Timothy S. Fiske, 17, of West Pelham Rd. Shutesbury, and a juvenile were arrested early Sunday morning when they were observed attempting to load some sawhorses into a vehicle in Lot 11, near the stadium police said.

Bruce E. Leaver, 18, of Brett House was arrested Friday evening after he was observed throwing a bottle through the window of 236 Morrill.

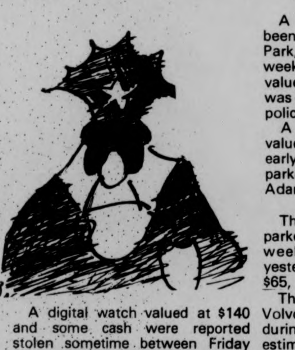
Friday afternoon, police arrested Richard M. Drake, 23, of 206 School St., Westwood, for operating a motor vehicle with a false inspection sticker, police said.

Thefts

A flute, trumpet and pocketbook, with a total value of $500, were stolen from the uniform room of the Old Chapel. The thefts occurred during a 15 minute period while the owners were practicing in an adjacent room.

A color television set, valued at $350, was reported stolen from the main lounge of Prince House, Saturday afternoon. The case is currently under investigation by police.

A dictaphone valued at $150 was stolen from 307 Whitmore, Saturday afternoon. Two subjects were observed in the area about the time of the theft. The case is currently under investigation by police.



A digital watch valued at $140 and some cash were reported stolen sometime between Friday and Sunday from a room in Mackimmie Dorm.

A 1970 Buick, valued at $1400 was stolen from lot 64 Saturday night. The vehicle was locked and the owner had the keys.

A ten-speed bicycle worth around $120 was reported stolen from an apartment in North Village early Sunday morning.

A 1968 Chevrolet, which had been parked at Fraternity-Sorority Park, was broken into during the week and a tape deck and speakers, valued at $130, were stolen. Entry was gained through a vent window, police said.

A cassette deck and cassettes, valued at over $250, were stolen early Saturday evening from a car parked in Lot 50, adjacent to John Adams.

Damages

The rear tires of an automobile parked in Lot 32 were cut this weekend, it was reported yesterday. Damage is estimated at $65, according to police.

The entire left window of a 1968 Volvo parked in Lot 13 was stolen during the weekend. Damage is estimated at $100. Also during the weekend in Lot 25 a spare wheel and tire mounted on the back of a 1974 Dodge were stolen. Value was placed at $57.

A 1975 Chevrolet which was parked on the first level of the Campus Center Garage received $100 in damages. Damage on the hood of the car appeared to be a result of repeated jumping on it.

Grad Senate backs rent, child issues

By GARY McWILLIAMS
Collegian Staff

Rent control, child care and an alternative school in Amherst were issues supported last night by the Graduate Student Senate (GSS).

The GSS voted to endorse a rent control referendum in a forthcoming special town election and voted to allocate money to the Che Lumumba School, an alternative school emphasizing multi-cultural education.

The senate also voted to "deplore" the suspension of two area child care centers from state support.

Representatives of the Che Lumumba school asked to address the senate after the Graduate Senate Finance Committee denied their request for funding.

Kenneth Ross, a member of the GSS Finance Committee, said the committee voted to deny funds after considering the school's number of enrolled children of graduates students and the senate's remaining money left unallocated.

The school received enthusiastic support from several senate members after detailing the school's parent designed curriculum and the school's need for money to purchase books and supplies.

The senate then voted to allocate $500 to the school.

Jamila Gaston speaking for the school, said the need for the teaching of Third World perspectives in education and the achievements of Third World countries which were not taught in local public school prompted the establishment of the school.

"It's very important for this school to exist for all Amherst school children," said Gaston.

The senate also heard a request from Amherst Tenants Association (ATA) member Vincent O'Connor for their support of the upcoming special town election.

The newly established ATA collected 13,000 signatures after a rent control motion failed at Amherst Town Meeting this fall.

The group hopes to win voter approval of the rent control referendum before the Nov. 16 election.

O'Connor asked the senate for their "individual" participation in turning out voters for the election.

"I'm asking not only for the institutional support of the GSS but also for the personal support of individual senators," said O'Connor.

Senator Robert Biagi, a member of the GSS child care Advisory Board, moved that the senate condemn the "intolerable situation" resulting from the state's cutoff of funds to the Family Day Care and Day Care Center, two area child care facilities.

The motion, which passed the senate unanimously, condemned the state Welfare Department for its "bureaucratic, incompetencies, as a result of the suspension of the two agencies.

Senate President Michael R. Federow said the Faculty Senate designed Extension Council, which will encompass the University's public service functions, moved to accept graduate and undergraduate

TM— building minds and bodies

By DARLENE LORKIEWICZ
Collegian Staff

Increased awareness, improved concentration, lessened fatigue, increased endurance, all this and more are achieved through the simple technique of transcendental meditation (TM), according to David Thebodo a teacher of the technique.

TM is a technique which is practiced for 15 to 20 minutes twice a day. During this time the mind and body experience increased quietness and relaxation. After meditating the body and mind are better able to return to everyday activity with more clarity, creativity, and awareness, said Thebodo.

The results of studies done on the effects of meditating show that certain physiological changes take place during meditation. Metabolic rate and oxygen consumption are greatly decreased, while meditating, much more than during the deepest stages of sleep.

Other studies show that meditation speeds up reaction time and improves auditory ability.

Thebodo pointed out that TM is not a religion or a philosophy but simply a technique of relaxation and no change in lifestyle need be made. Although TM is easy to learn, it requires specific personal instruction, which can be obtained at the Amherst World Plan Center, at 327 Lincoln Ave., Amherst, he said.

The actual technique takes about a half hour to learn, but with the personalized attention and preliminary lectures the period is extended to four consecutive days. Thebodo said there is a follow up program to check the process, and intermediate and advanced lectures to explore aspects of growth gained through TM.

According to Thebodo there are about 900,000 meditators of all ages and lifestyles, world wide. There are many social benefits to practicing TM, crime rates and hospital admissions were down in areas where there was a concentration of meditators, he said. "If you feel better, you radiate better," said Thebodo.

To teach transcendental meditation there is a 10-month training period. All teachers are trained and qualified by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, founder of TM, said Thebodo.

The International Meditation Society is a non-profit educational organization. The Student International Meditation Society is a recognized student organization on campus.

There will be a lecture on transcendental meditation tonight at 7:30 in Herter 222.

Honors program tough but helpful

By ALEXANDRA CONANT
Collegian Staff

"What advantages are there to joining the University Honors Program? Small classes, a good counseling system, and exemption from all University and college core requirements," said Lynn Santoro, assistant to the University Honors Program director.

Enrolling in departmental honors enables a student to graduate with magna cum laude or summa cum laude degree. As of the class of 1977, no student may graduate with these two degrees unless they are in departmental honors. Departmental honors students, according to individual department requirements, must either write a senior honors thesis or take additional honors courses.

In a survey taken by Project Pulse of the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Organization, it was found that 77 per cent of non-honors students were aware of the Honors Program but only 31 per cent knew that in order to graduate magna or summa cum laude a student must be enrolled in a departmental honors Program.

"We have 399 students enrolled in University Honors, about 94 in Departmental Honors and 37 enrolled in both programs," said Santoro.

Under the University Honors Program all core requirements are waived. A student who is enrolled in the University Honors Program is a Commonwealth Scholar. Enrollment in the University Honors Program and-or a 3.2 cum allows a student to graduate cum laude.

Enrollment in the University Honors Program requires a student to take one honors course each semester he or she is enrolled in the honors program with a minimum of six honors course taken before graduation.

The Departmental Honors Program has been developed because "large numbers of students were graduating from the University with high honors. The Faculty Senate felt the requirements for graduation with high honors were not strict enough, so that degrees with high honors from the University were not carrying enough weight." said Santoro.

A student enrolled in a Departmental Honors Program becomes eligible to graduate magna or summa cum laude. University and college core requirements are waived but there are departmental honors requirements that have to be met. The requirements vary from department to department so a student should check with the honors coordinator in their department to find out the requirements.

To get into the Honors Program, a student must have taken an honors course previous to applying. The student's performance in the course is evaluated by the professor. The Honors Office also evaluates the student's transcript before the student is allowed into the program.

In the case of transfer students, a letter of recommendation from a faculty member involved in the Honors Program from his former school supporting his entrance and transcripts will be accepted. If there was no Honors Programs at the school transferred from the honors department will accept a letter from a faculty member in his major department or from a professor whose course the student is taking during their first semester at the University.

"People interested in the Honors Program can apply at any time, if they have taken an honors course. We would like people to apply by their first semester of junior year," said Santoro.

The Honors office also has funds available for seniors writing an honors thesis.

"This year we were allocated $4,000 and received requests amounting to $5,000," said David Fredenburg who coordinates the funding. "We used $3,000 this semester, so there will be money available next semester. The deadline to request money will be the beginning of March."

Students interested in finding out more about the University Honors Program should go to the Honors Office in E-23 Machmer or call the office at 545-2483. Students interested in departmental honors should contact the honors coordinator in their department or the Honors Office.

Registration for blood drive on CC concourse this week

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

Registration for the annual Fall blood drive at UMass will be held on the Concourse area of the Campus Center today, tomorrow and Thursday from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m.

The drive will be held next Monday the 15th, to Thursday the 18th, in the Campus Center Auditorium from 10 a.m. until 3:45 p.m. on Monday, and between 9:30 a.m. and 3:15 p.m. Tuesday through Thursday.

Anyone of normal health, over 110 pounds, and between the ages of 18 and 66 is qualified to donate blood, People 17 years old may donate with parental permission.

For their convenience, donors are encouraged to make appointments, either in person during registration week or by contacting Mrs. John Conlon at 549-0170. In past years, donor time has been booked very closely but walk-ins are welcome.

This drive has developed over the years from a one-day drive yielding a few hundred pints to a four day drive held bi-annually which last year netted 1547 pints.

The drive is the result of a cooperative effort by many community organizations. Gamma Sigma Sigma and Alpha Phi Omega, two service oriented student groups will help registering the donors, setting up the Bloodmobile equipment, and serving as aides.

Amherst Senior Citizens, coordinated by Mrs. Arnold D. Rhodes, will prepare food to be served in the "Canteen".

Many members of University Women will contribute hundreds of hours as nurses, nurse's aides, and clerical assistants.

Though the drive is held on the UMass campus and depends partly on student, faculty, and staff support, members of surrounding communities donating time and blood help create a total community effort.

If you have a few hours during which you can work in a clerical, nursing, or general capacity, please contact Mrs. Donald Progulske at 549-6103, or Mrs. Stanly Plagenhoef at 549-1061.

Aids and abets crime in Combat Zone

Boston Police unit charged with corruption

BOSTON [AP] – The Boston police unit that covers the city's "Combat Zone" and downtown area was charged yesterday with "incompetance and corruption" following a 33-month internal police investigation.

The 572-page report by the Special Investigation Unit says gambling, prostitution and underworld activities run rampant in the dault entertainment district, aided and abetted by "corrupt inattention" by police.

"It is inconceivable," the report said, "that any common superior officer would change a charge of incompetence and-or corruption without being duly rewarded by those benefiting from purposeful police inaction; such gross neglect of any crime condition for any kind of reward is corruption."

The study pointed out that within the district, which includes the largely Italian North End, more than 60 locations and 78 persons are suspected of organized crime activities. It also said that the North End serves as headquarters for the New England organized crime family headed by Gennaro Angiulo.

The report charges that police personnel in District 1:

–Allowed known member of organized crime groups to see confidential police information.

–Allowed gambling to continue to grow "thus further generating police incompetence and-or corruption."

–Failed to act against illegal sexual activities which "enhanced the business prospects of the bars, hotels and other adult entertainment facilities."

The investigators identified at least 108 bookie joints in the district including some in City Hall, the John F. Kennedy Federal Building, the South Boston Postal Annex and the Registry of Motor Vehicles.

The suspected bookie operations also included a North End coffee shop frequented by police officers from District 1 and other members of the Boston Police Patrolman's Association.

The report recommended the transfer of all personnel including civilians assigned to the district before June 11, 1975; reducing the deputy superintendent who once served in the district to the rank of captain, and investigating command staff members and their financial backgrounds for evidence that might warrant criminal prosecutions.

In dealing with problems of the Combat Zone, the so-called adult entertainment district, the report recommends adopting a policy of containment rather than all-out enforcement.

It calls for issuance of "an unwritten policy defining the perimeters within the district in which any criminal activity such as illegal sexual activity, alcohol law violations and related criminality have traditionally been tolerated."

Offenses beyond those boundaries would be met with maximum punishment, if some agreement could be reached with court officials.

Mayors urge Carter to back plans for new urban strategy

CHICAGO [AP] – The deterioration of the nation's troubled central cities can be stopped dead if Jimmy Carter puts the full weight of Washington behind a new urban strategy, big city mayors said yesterday.

Keys to such an effort, which the mayors support, would be creation of an Urban Development Bank and federal reorganization to reduce the paperwork that now ensnarl city halls. And more money.

Representatives of President-elect Jimmy Carter and Vice President-elect Walter Mondale said Monday the mayors' shopping list was in line with much of Carter's thinking.

The U.S. Conference of Mayors on Monday concluded a two-day brainstorming session here on priorities to present Congress and Carter. Conference officials said they are seeking a meeting with Carter to discuss their urban plan.

Several mayors yesterday attacked what Mayor Coleman Young of Detroit called "the doughnut syndrome."

"That's where the central city is the hole and everything around us is sugary and nice," said Young. He called for a reordering of federal muscle "designed to make the cities as healthy and attractive as the suburbs."

Conference President Kenneth Gibson of Newark, N.J., said the proposed National Urban Investment Program earned its title because of "the return" the nation would receive through urban recovery.

The Urban Development Bank, part of the plan, would be modeled after the World Bank, which extends low-cost aid to foreign nations. It would provide loans to businesses and to cities for economic projects.

The Conference also called for a new anti-recession jobs program, as well as government reorganization to scale down the number of grant applications necessary for the wide range of federal aid now provided.

Gibson steadfastly refused to put a price tag on the urban plan, but said it was "fair to say we're talking about a lot of money."

The bank alone could cost tens of billions of dollars, but Gene Gatley, an aide to Mondale, noted that in no area did the mayors, "tie their proposals to any specific job figure." He speculated that sort of flexibility would be a plus when Carter considers the mayors' recommendations.

Republican mayors joined with the heavily Democratic majority in personal endorsements of the urban strategy, and several mayors from healthy cities also endorsed the "help-the-needy" theme.

"I come from a city that is doing well, and I come to help," said Houston's mayor, Fred Hofheinz.

Deadlock threatens Rhodesia talks

GENEVA, Switzerland [AP] – British chairman Ivor Richard flew home to London yesterday to consult on how to prevent stalemated talks on the future of Rhodesia from collapsing into a guerrilla war solution.

Richard told a reporter at the airport that he was "not at all despondent". But the conference appeared locked in a hardening black-white confrontation 11 days after its formal opening.

A spokesman said Richard would return Tuesday to try to set up another working session with black and white delegations.

"Obviously, we have reached a stage where there are difficulties and it would be absurd to hide them," the spokesman said. On the other hand, he said, "we believe some useful progress has been made."

Richard met separately over the weekend with leaders of the five delegations. But he failed to win support for a proposed March 1, 1978, deadline on achieving black majority rule in the rebel British colony.

On Monday, Richard was rebuffed by observers for the five black African presidents who have been the major backers of the black Rhodesian nationalists.

A spokesman said Richard could not make contact with representatives of Angola, Zambia, Tanzania, Botswana and Mozambique. The presidents of those five countries met in Dar Es Salaam over the weekend and issued a statement saying the only way for Rhodesian blacks to gain power was through continued guerrilla war.

The black Rhodesian nationalist leaders refused to consider the proposed British deadline or to sidestep the issue and go on to other matters. The blacks maintain Rhodesia's 278,000 whites must give up power to the 6.4 million blacks in no more than 12 months. The Rhodesian whites have refused to compromise much below a two-year minimum transition period.

Fighting erupts in Angola

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa [UPI] – Fighting between Cuban-backed Angolan forces and antigovernment guerrillas raged in Angola near the border with South West Africa Namibia yesterday in battles that have claimed several hundred civilian lives, the South African radio reported.

The South African Broadcasting Corp. correspondent in Oshakati, 25 miles from the border, said artillery and small arms fire could be heard from the South West African side of the frontier.

"From observation posts on the border burnt houses and kraals tribal huts could be seen in Angola. Observers could clearly see the Cuban soldiers in their distinctive uniforms throwing hand grenades into houses and destroying them," he said.

At least 3,000 refugees have crossed the border since the weekend and were in the care of South African security forces. They had fled from the fighting in the Cunene province in Southwestern Angola.

The radio quoted refugees saying the Angolan government troops, Cuban soldiers and members of the South West African Peoples Organization.

Carter remains in seclusion, Ford hits the golf course

ST. SIMONS ISLAND, Ga. [UPI] – President-elect Jimmy Carter was secluded from reporters and the public yesterday as he rested and worked. His press secretary cancelled a scheduled news briefing.

President Ford swam, golfed and sun-bathed in splendid seclusion yesterday leaving the world outside the guarded gates of millionaires' retreats.

"I couldn't feel better," Ford called to reporters as he left his rented villa in brilliant morning sunshine, climbed into a tan limousine and sped off for a round of golf at ultra-private La Quinta Country Club.

Carter and his family, in the third day of a "working vacation," arranged a private picnic on a small island that is part of the 1,300-acre Musgrove Plantation on this historic "Golden Isle" off the Georgia coast.

Reporters, who are staying at nearby Jekyll Island, went to the hotel where Carter's staff is quartered after press secretary Jody Powell cancelled the briefing.

"When we came down here we said it would be an opportunity for him to study and rest," Powell told the reporters. "We said we don't intend to make major announcements down here."

Powell had not talked to Carter but said it was his guess that the president-elect would conclude his vacation on Thursday and return to his home in Plains, Ga.

The President, Mrs. Ford and three of their children flew to this desert resort Sunday for a week of rest and reflection on what the future should hold for a chief executive who will, soon, become a fairly wealthy, well-connected federal pensioner.

The White House said in advance Ford meant this retreat to be largely a private affair and the truth of that was clear yesterday.

The President, wife Betty and daughter Susan stayed along with servants and Secret Service guards in a walled, 14-room beige stone villa on the Thunderbird County Club grounds in nearby Rancho Mirage. Sons Jack and Steven lodged at the club itself.

Israel says atomic facility off-limits for senators

TEL AVIV, Israel [UPI] – Israel has barred a group of 13 U.S. senators from visiting its secret atomic facility at Dimona where enough plutonium is stored to build an estimated 20 atomic bombs, delegations sources said yesterday.

The senators, on a visit to Israel, Egypt and Iran to check safeguards for promised U.S. nuclear reactors, are expected to make a new effort to visit the nuclear site, but the sources said Israel is unlikely to change its stand.

The sources said the senators had made repeated requests to visit Dimona, located in the Negev Desert 50 miles south of Jerusalem, where Israel is estimated to have produced enough plutonium for 20 atomic bombs.

The senators arrived in Jerusalem Sunday on a four-day visit to investigate safeguards for two U.S. nuclear reactors promised to Israel. The delegation also plans to check safeguards for reactors promised to Egypt and Iran.

Sen. Howard Baker, R.-Tenn., said the United States wants to make sure "adequate safeguards are built into the agreement to prevent diversion of material for non-useful purposes in any country."

Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D.-Conn., said President-Elect Jimmy Carter is greatly concerned about the misuse of atomic power and "will institute policies to try to prevent the spread of nuclear proliferation."

Paul Leventhal, staff counsel to the Senate Government Operations Committee, said last week Israel's "unsafeguarded" Dimona research reactor phutonium stockpile is "estimated to be enough for 20 bombs."

Leventhal suggested the agreement for the two American reactors should provide for Israel to open Dimona's future operations to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency.

The Tel Aviv newspaper, Ma'ariv, in an editorial apparently cleared by Israel's censors, hinted that the Jewish state is engaging in nuclear research for military as well as peaceful reasons.

Hikes in oil prices to greet new year

[AP] – The oil cartel seems sure to raise oil prices in the new year, a move that will probably mean higher prices at the gas pump, in heating and electricity bills, at airline ticket counters and many other places.

Ministers of the 13-nation Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries meet Dec. 15 in the Persian Gulf sheikdom of Qatar to discuss oil prices, but the most influential members have already said they want increases ranging from 10 per cent to 25 per cent.

Even Saudi Arabia, the largest oil exporter and the most reticent in recent years to raise prices, has said it wants a "moderate" increase. That has been interpreted as about 10 per cent.

Iran, the second largest oil exporter, is thought to favor an increase in the area of 25 per cent, while Venezuela, another influential OPEC member, wants at least 15 per cent.

The spokesman at OPEC headquarters in Vienna, Ahmed Zaheri, said last month he believed the price would be "adjusted", which in oil talk means increased.

The present OPEC price of $11.51 for a 42-gallon barrel of standard grade crude has been in effect since Oct. 1, 1975. Oil ministers considered raising prices at their meeting in Bali in May, but took no action, largely because of Saudi opposition.

Each 10 per cent increase in the price of OPEC oil, if passed along entirely to consumers, would add about a penny a gallon to the price of gas in the United States.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Court delays Utah execution

UTAH [UPI] – The Utah Supreme Court Monday stayed next week's execution of condemned killer Gary Gilmore after his fired attorneys asked the justices not to become "part of a suicide attempt."

By a 3-2 vote, the court rejected Gilmore's latest plea that he be allowed to die "with grace and dignity" before a firing squad at Utah State Prison yesterday.

"Let's do it," requested Gilmore in his second letter from prison. "I have been sentenced to die. I accept that."

But Craig Snyder and Mike Esplin, the two lawyers who defended Gilmore and were fired by him when he decided not to appeal the death sentence, arrived at the court a few hours later to seek a judicial review of both the trial and sentencing.

The justices issued the stay a few minutes later. It will delay the execution until after the court considers an appeal.

Crucial vote in Britain

LONDON [UPI] – Britain's Labor government yesterday won a critical vote in Parliament by a one-vote majority, summoning both sick and "walking wounded" members to turn out for the vote Labor needed to ensure its survival.

A defeat might have resulted in Prime Minister James Callaghan having to resign and order a parliamentary general election.

The voting on a motion to cut short debate on a controversial government bill to nationalize the aircraft and shipbuilding industries was 311 to 310. The voting was held earlier than expected.

The government won two other votes – also to "guillotine" or cut short debate on other nationalization bills – by only slightly larger margins.

It won the first by 312 to 296, and the second by 310 votes to 307.

Gunmen attack in N. Ireland

BELFAST, Northern Ireland [UPI] – Gunmen ambushed four Maze Prison officers in a grocery warehouse near the prison yesterday. One of the officers and a civilian guard were wounded.

More than 1,500 political prisoners are held in Maze Prison at Long Kesh, 15 miles south of Belfast.

British army troops later found the attackers' getaway car abandoned in West Belfast's Twinbrook district, a Provisional Irish Republican Army stronghold.

Authorities said the four prison officers, wearing civilian clothing, were walking among the shelves of the warehouse at Dunmurry, five miles south of Belfast, when several armed men who followed them inside opened fire.

Japan to return Soviet MiG

TOKYO [UPI] – Japan will return a top secret MIG25 to the Soviet Union on Friday despite Moscow's refusal to pay for damages incurred by a defecting Russian pilot who flew the plane to a northern airbase, government sources said yesterday.

Japanese foreign ministry sources said broad agreement on terms of the plane's return had been reached in talks between the Soviet Union and Japan and a final accord was expected to be reached at a meeting between foreign ministry and Soviet embassy officials Tuesday.

The sources said the plane will be returned even though Moscow rejected Japan's demand for compensation for damages caused to the airport at Hakodate on Japan's northernmost main island of Hokkaido when the defecting pilot made a forced landing Sept. 6.

Dept. of Public Utilities calls N.E. Telephone 'arrogant and unfair'

BOSTON [AP] – The way the New England Telephone Co. wields its far-reaching power to hang up on slow paying customers is unreasonable, unfair and arrogant, the Department of Public Utilities said yesterday.

The DPU decision Monday found NET customer relations are infected "with a certain arrogance of power" on the company's part.

Peter Cronin, telephone company spokesman, disputed the findings saying the utility's policies are "intended to protect the overwhelming majority of its customers from subsidizing the very small minority ... who can't or won't pay their bills."

The DPU said it began to investigate the company in July 1975. The Consumer group Massachusetts Fair Share took credit for prodding action.

The DPU decision said the company "controls access to a vital necessity and powerful convenience of modern life and NET is in a bargaining position of overwhelming power.

"The customer has no effective counter-weapon," it said. The state criticized the company's dealings with 10 per cent of Massachusetts customers considered "unknown" or "Poor" credit risks. The agency said new hearings must be held to find remedies.

The DPU said there is a "crying need for an impartial avenue of redress" between the company and customer. The present system of "unilateral dispute resolution by NET" was termed "unjust, unreasonable, and inadequate."

The DPU complained that: – Customers who are not considered good credit risks are treated unfairly and get an inadequate bill paying period – 15 or 18 days, compared to a 45-day period for most customers.

The account classification system, the DPU said, is arbitrary and "prophetically self-fulfilling," giving those least able to pay bills the least amount of time.

– Too much authority is in the hands of service representatives, who have "untrammeled discretion" to cut off or restore service to a customer claiming a personal crisis.

– NET fails to volunteer information that would aid customers, making the company-customer relationship "a one-sided game."

– Service representatives have too much power in deciding which customers must pay a security deposit on one-time charges in advance.

The DPU also charged the company refuses to credit the deposit to accounts in arrears.

– The company has failed to provide bilingual notices of rights to non-English speaking customers.

Flowerpower threatens dam

DICKEY, Maine [AP] – The discovery of a rare wild snapdragon in a remote area of northern Maine could thwart construction of a $600 million hydroelectric project.

Some 30 to 35 specimens of the furbish lousewort, a flower that was believed to be extinct, were found this summer by botanists surveying the Upper St. John River. They were doing the work for a report on the environmental impact of the proposed Dickey-Lincoln hydroelectric project, one of the largest federally funded projects ever planned for New England.

An Army Corps of Engineers botanist, Richard Dyer, revealed the discovery of the fern-like flower in a speech last weekend in Auburn, Maine. He said it could sidetrack the controversial project, which has been in the planning stage for more than a decade.

Dyer noted that federal projects are barred by statute from destroying rare and endangered species of plants and animals. The furbish lousewort is included on an endangered species list scheduled for adoption early next year.

"There will be a definite confrontation with the Endangered Species Act if plans for the dams continue," Dyer told the Maine chapter of the Appalachian Mountain Club.

Both Dyer and University of Maine botanist Charles Richards, who teamed up on a two-week survey of the Dickey area, agreed that the furbish lousewort had little intrinsic worth.

"It has no commercial value. It's not pretty or beautiful," said Richards. "It's scientific, entirely. It's a rare plant that might become extinct."

Dukakis to consider new prison sites

BOSTON [UPI] — Governor Michael S. Dukakis expects to receive recommendations within a month from Corrections Commissioner Frank Hall on possible sites for six new prisons throughout Massachusetts, according to Human Services Secretary Jerald L. Stevens.

Dukakis has put a program to relieve overcrowding in the state's prisons as a top priority, Stevens says. Dukakis will review Hall's suggestions before asking the legislature for permission and funds to build the new institutions.

The Corrections Department has stated its desire for 850 new beds by June 30. On a long term basis, the department feels 2,000 new beds will be needed to accommodate the burgeoning prison population.

Communities under consideration for the possible prison sites have not been divulged by either the Department of Corrections or the Dukakis Administration.

Last September, Hall offered a $14 million capital improvement program throughout the corrections systems to improve conditions in the institutions. He proposed the construction of new medium and maximum security facilities in six communities.

Public outcry was deafening from those communities named by Hall as possible sites for the new prisons. Since the Hall proposal of September, the Dukakis administration has adopted a more discreet selection process which has not yet been finalized.

Voting machines inaccurate

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [AP] — Voting machine tabulators at three precincts here apparently wrote down zero instead of the actual vote totals for some of last week's referenda questions, officials said. The vote totals will be re-checked this weekend.

The secretary of state office conferred yesterday with election officials in 28 other communities where the same type of voting machines were used to determine if other poll workers had made the same mistake.

Apparently there were no others, or very few such incidents in the state. Vote totals would not be affected significantly, according to Marcia A. Molay, deputy secretary of state.

Vote tabulators reading the back of voting machines for totals wrote down figures from columns that had not been used, Springfield Election Commission Secretary Donald Metzger said.

Date set for Saxe trial

BOSTON [AP] — The second murder-armed robbery trial of antiwar activist Susan E. Saxe is set for Jan. 10, and her lawyers now say the the case pits her right to a speedy trial against her right to a fair trial.

Superior Court Chief Justice Walter H. McLaughlin set the new trial date yesterday. The justice, who is retiring in January, also assigned Superior Court Judge James C. Roy to hear the case.

Susan Saxe

Roy is known among courthouse observers as one of the state's toughest judges.

The first trial of Ms. Saxe for the 1970 holdup of the State Street Bank ended in a hung jury. A mistrial was declared after the jury reported it was hopelessly deadlocked.

Nancy Gertner, attorney for Ms. Saxe, said she will argue at the next pre-trial hearing that "two constitutional issues are at war here — the right to a speedy trial and the right to a fair trial."

N.E. wary of flu shots

BOSTON [AP] — Reluctant New Englanders, apparently suspicious of the effects of the swine flu vaccinations, are taking their time about getting the shots.

Public health officials have said immunizations across New England are running between 65 and 80 per cent below expected rates.

"A lot of people are simply afraid the vaccine's going to hurt them," said Dr. Nicholas J. Fiumara, director of the Massachusetts Communicable Disease Division.

Federal health officials said 6.3 per cent of New Englanders who should get the protection had been vaccinated by the end of October.

The deaths of 45 elderly persons across the nation within 48 hours of vaccination have been recorded, but doctors say the deaths were not related to the swine flu shots.

Big, black Bertha, (right) looks despondent after the city officials called her a "mongrel" and a "mutt" in court.

Big, black Bertha begs blue ribbon

DE SOTO, Tex. [UPI] — Big Bertha VII is a big, black prizewinning Great Dane with a blue-ribbon lineage that would make any social climber envious.

But to city officials she's nothing more than a mutt.

Monday the rural Dallas suburb took Sandra Lynn Purdy, Bertha's owner, to court to enforce a recently passed city ordinance which prohibits residents from owning more than two dogs or two cats over six months old.

Mrs. Purdy owns four dogs, including Bertha's mate, her son's hunting dog and a 14-year-old "half-blind rabbit hound with cataracts that I just love."

"I don't know if we won or lost," Mrs. Purdy said following the hearing before District Judge Charles Long.

"We compromised," she said. "The city apologized for calling my dogs mongrels and for harassing me and dropped the suit. I promised to get rid of one of the dogs. The judge is going to let me keep my danes and the old family dog but they the city are insisting that I get rid of my 13-year-old son's registered bird dog."

"I don't know how I will explain this to Trent. He doesn't know it's coming and he loves that dog."

City officials claim the ordinance was passed to crack down on strays and a proliferation of dogs on residential premises. There was no distinction for showdogs.

"We haven't had too many problems," said Tommy Kerby, administrative assistant to the city manager. "This Mrs. Purdy's case is the first real case that has gone to court."

Mrs. Purdy once had six dogs, but she gave away two after passage of the ordinance to "cooperate". But she balked at giving up anymore.

"They haven't run me out of town yet. They promised the judge they would not bother me any more but we will have to see if that's true," she said.

Bertha is reportedly the only living Great Dane that holds a first degree title for protection, obedience, tracking and retrieving. Dog trainers say the giant canines are usually too big and clumsy to place in competition.

Before Monday's hearing, the city also said Mrs. Purdy could not exercise her danes or train them in the front yard. The judge said the city could not restrict that activity.

"I now can, and you bet I will," she said.

Drinking precedes spouse assault

KALAMAZOO, Mich. [UPI] — Drinking of alcohol frequently precedes assault on a spouse, says a professor who recently concluded a study of family violence.

John Flynn, a professor of social work at Western Michigan University, reported his findings to the Michigan Council on Family Relations during a weekend conference on "Violence in Families."

He said his study, conducted in May and June of 1975, concluded that as "a conservative estimate," 10 per cent of Kalamazoo County's 47,586 families have had a least one serious incident of spouse assault.

"The evidence is compelling that spouse assault becomes known in a minimum of 500 to 600 Kalamazoo County families per year," Flynn said.

"This figure probably represents only the tip of the iceberg because of the stigma attached to the problem and the barriers to its becoming known."

Flynn said, in at least half of the cases, victims reported there had been heavy verbal abuse and the husband had been drinking prior to the assault.

"It looks like a pretty high association between alcoholism and spouse assault," Flynn said.

He said in many cases, the abusive husband had either been abused as a child or had witnessed parental fighting. The abusive husband was also generally found to be abusive toward his children.

Flynn said more than half of the victims in the study were of middle or upper level of income, employment and education. While spouse assault occurs in couples of all ages, Flynn said, "the average age of both the victims and the assaulters in the study was early and middle thirties."

Half of the professionals interviewed for the study knew of instances of spouse assault where the victim was pregnant, he said.

Flynn said many of the victims indicated that while they viewed the assaults as a problem, their husbands did not. He said 21 of the 33 victims interviewed had separated from their husbands at least once and 15 are now divorced or seeking divorce.

Nelson Rockefeller: R.I.P.

By THOMAS MAJOR 6-9202

Nelson Rockefeller seems to be enjoying himself lately, probably because he has reached a point in his career when, for the first time in decades, he will not be running for president and does not have to go through the charade of trying to please all the people all of the time.

So Rocky occupies a very pleasant position in American politics; he has the freedom to do what he wants to do and say what he wants to say, including giving the finger to demonstrators, a gesture that is and remains the most unequivocal and clear statement made by a politican this year.

His power has shrunk from nationwide scope down to New York state, but having political domination over one of the country's biggest, richest, and most powerful states will make sure that Rocky won't have to put Pocantico Hills up for auction after his term as Vice-President expires.

If Nelson Rockefeller hadn't wanted so badly to be president, he probably would have stayed in New York as power broker while expanding the family fortune.

Nelson Rockefeller wanted to be president badly, very badly. After all, when you're governor of New York, the baron of your state's politics, and worth about $74 million dollars (a conservative estimate), there is only one office you could possibly want: the presidency.

Looking back on Rocky's career as a presidential aspirant, it is strange to see that despite the $30 million dollars he spent trying to become president, he never came close. In 1960 Eisenhower was president and then-Vice-President Nixon was the heir to the throne. Since the party was happy with Eisenhower and Nixon, it was futile for Rockefeller to run. He ran, got nowhere, and quit, after which he forced Nixon to bend towards Rockefeller's views on certain issues. "The Compact of Fifth Avenue," a joint statement made by Nixon and Rockefeller following their 1960 pre-convention meeting in Rockefeller's Fifth Avenue home, infuriated the party's conservatives, who felt that Rockefeller was an arrogant, liberal troublemaker who was too damned independent for the party's good.

The hostility between Rocky and the conservatives turned to open warfare in 1964. In that year, he came within a hair's breadth of winning the Republican nomination. But Rocky's past came back to wreck his hopes when, a few days before the crucial California primary, his new wife Happy gave birth to a child, reminding voters of Rockefeller's recent divorce from his first wife and swinging the primary and later the nomination to Rockefeller's opponent, Sen. Barry Goldwater.

But even if he had won in California, Rockefeller could never have defeated Lyndon Johnson. 1964 might have been Rockefeller's year, but it definitely was not the Republican's year.

1968 was Rockefeller's last shot at the White House. And it was not his year; 1964 still angered conservatives. Instead, it was the year for Richard Nixon's quiet comeback from obscurity through a quiet campaign to finally win the nomination after quietly burying Rockefeller. If 1964 was Rocky's loudest defeat, 1968 was his most peaceful burial.

When the Republicans won, it ended Rockefeller's chances for the presidency through election. In 1972 Nixon would run for re-election, again blocking Rockefeller; in 1976 Rocky would be 68 years old, too old to be a candidate.

In the period from 1968 to 1974 Rockefeller blindly supported Nixon enthusiastically, even though he felt contempt for Nixon. After Nixon's fall, Rockefeller transferred his affections to Gerald Ford who, at the time, just happened to need an experienced, powerful Republican for his new Vice-President and chose, of course, Rockefeller.

Why did Rocky take the Vice-Presidency? After all, he had money, power, and fame as governor of New York. But by 1974 Rockefeller realized that being Vice-President would be the closest he ever would get to being president and the last chance he had to remain in the national spotlight.

What will Rockefeller do after 1976? The conservatives opposed and defeated any ideas Rocky might have had about being on a Ford-Rockefeller ticket in 1976, but he has mended fences with his old nemesis, Barry Goldwater to the extent that columnist William Safire refers to them as "The Sunshine Boys" of American politics.

He still has the millions of Rockefeller money, the control over New York politics, the power stemming from the family fortune that nobody, no matter how many Atticas, can take away. That would comfort most people, but not Rockefeller. He won all that he wanted in power and politics except the only office he ever really wanted: the presidency.

Carter victory offsets environmental defeats

[Jon Stewart, a PNS editor, specializes in environmental affairs.]

Despite resounding defeats of six anti-nuclear initiatives on state ballots November 2, environmentalists around the nation insist they won the day with the election of Jimmy Carter.

"We won the big one," said Carl Pope, a spokesman for the Sierra Club and League of Conservation Voters. "The White House is so much more important than the individual issues on the ballots, and for the first time we're going to have a sympathetic White House."

Pope predicts that Carter's record and stand on environmental issues — including his public support for Oregon's nuclear safety initiative — presages "some positive action in the environmental area in the next few years."

Pope and others expect strong White House support for stripmine legislation, a strong clean air bill, enforcement of the new Toxic Substances Act, higher funding for park and recreation services and a "tough attitude" toward nuclear power development.

But while environmental advocates rejoiced over Carter's election, the reaction to other environment-related races ranged from disappointment to shock.

The biggest surprises came in the wide margins of defeat for the nuclear safeguards initiatives in Colorado (70-30), Ohio (68-32), Oregon (58-42), Washington (67-33), Arizona (70-30) and Montana (60-40). As recently as two to three weeks before the election local polls in Colorado, Oregon and Washington had shown the measures winning up by to two-to-one.

Coloradans also voted heavily against a ban on non-returnable bottles, designed to force industry to recycle. But similar bottle bills passed in Michigan and Maine and lost by a half per cent in Massachusetts.

Supporters of the nuclear initiatives — which would have halted further nuclear construction until questions of safety, waste disposal and liability were solved by industry — blamed massive opposition spending by utilities and industry for the defeats.

"We feel this election was clearly bought," said Meladee Martin of Coloradans for Safe Power. She contends pre-election campaign spending reports indicate that opposition forces poured some $550,000 into defeating the nuclear initiative, compared to about $90,000 spent by supporters. Roughly 60 per cent of the opposition spending in Colorado reportedly came from out-of-state corporations.

"Our feeling," said Martin, "is that we've got to get a law that says you can't contribute corporate money to a citizens' initiative campaign."

Martin believes that voters refused to consider any of the four controversial measures on the Colorado ballot. "All that got through," she says, "is that you've got to 'vote no for the status quo.' "

Anti-nuclear organizers in Oregon and Washington expressed similar opinions. Chris Thomas of Oregonians for Nuclear Safeguards said his organization spent about $275,000 to back the nuclear initiative, compared to nearly a million dollars spent by opponents. "We just couldn't compete with that," said Thomas. "They killed us in the end."

Dave Howard of Washington's Coalition for Safe Energy echoes those sentiments: "What we learned is that you can buy elections."

Howard claims that an opposition spending blitz in the last 10 days of the campaign pushed spending over $1 million, compared to less than $100,000 by pro-initiative forces. He noted that the combined spending by Ford, Carter, Gov.-elect Dixy Lee Ray and her opponent amounted to a little more than half of what the initiative opponents spent, which broke down to almost 80 cents per vote.

The one victory for opponents of nuclear power came in Missouri, where voters approved a measure to ban the utility practice of raising some of the money for construction of power facilities by hiking their rates to consumers — as opposed to borrowing or floating bonds. The law is expected to have its greatest impact on nuclear power development, which requires more capital than other types of power plants.

Bruce Rosenthal of the Washington, D.C.-based Critical Mass organization, an anti-nuclear Ralph Nader group, says the two most important factors in the defeats were the "massive nationwide utility and industry effort to defeat the initiatives," and the fact that nuclear foes are still "in the midst of a major re-education process."

But Rosenthal sees a silver lining in the clouds of defeat: "The referenda this year have turned the nuclear issue into one that is getting national publicity and one that became a presidential issue, where it was defined in much clearer terms than most other issues."

The Sierra Club's Pope agreed that nuclear power "is a hard issue for the public to grapple with. It takes strong leadership from the White House," he says, "to provide that kind of mass education."

Pope believes that Carter's administration will provide the impetus for anti-nuclear initiatives to pass in 1978.

Two other environmental groups concentrated on electing strong environmental congressional candidates and defeating objectionable incumbents.

Environmental Action's "Dirty Dozen" campaign, which targets 12 incumbent congressmen for defeat in each election, succeeded in knocking off three this year. They included California's Burt Talcott, who headed the Dirty Dozen list, Ohio's Dan Clancy and Pennsylvani's Albert Johnson, all Republicans.

In the last four congressional elections, 24 of the 43 incumbents marked for defeat by the Dirty Dozen campaign have either retired or been defeated. In the same period, the defeat rate for all incumbents was only about 10 per cent, a clear demonstration of the group's influence.

According to Leon Panetta, the Democrat who defeated Talcott in California, "It's clear that the environment plays an important part in voters' considerations on election day. It is an issue no congressman can afford to ignore."

The Washington, D.C.-based League of Conservation Voters, which had rated President Ford "hopeless" on the environment and Jimmy Carter "outstanding," gave endorsements and more than $50,000 to 16 congressional candidates this year, and claimed victories for nine.

By the way, all the names have been altered.

Her coat was draped, haphazard, over a chair in The Office. She had abandoned it and had disappeared. But I had to talk to Her, so I left The Office for the place I knew She would be. Up the stairs, right down the Concourse, through the blue light and past a couple of tables, and there She was. Propped in front of Her was a pitcher of beer and a stack of plastic cups. She laughed and waved me over to sit and drink with Her. It was just a few beers before class, She explained. We talked and as we did, She greeted more people and asked them to join Her. I had to go, so left Her with Her beers and found friends.

Hours after our mutual class, I was walking through the Concourse to the bus stop. And there She was again, hovering outside the Bar looking for people to 'just have few beers' with. She smiled and laughed and grasped out for company.

Scene Two: We were talking, a few of us in The Office, about a minor lack of social contact among staff members, so someone suggested we send in a few cases of beer on Thursday night and make it a party. Someone else suggested just having coffee, tea and donuts and a lounge section always in The Office, but this was vetoed by silence — too old fashioned, I think.

Scene Three, Four and Five go without saying. Where there is a social event, or the planning of a social event, alcohol always figures. To an absurd point, it figures. Perhaps it's the environment. College means drinking. Except that it really doesn't have to, not to the excess that it seems to be now.

When one is out to 'pick up' a little evening company, it's always done in a bar, not in a bookstore, art galery or museum. Don't laugh — it used to happen that way and probably could happen again if we weren't all sold by bars.

Think about it a moment. How often do you drink? Beer does count! How much of that drinking is brought on by a social setting that, when you were younger, was filled with a non-alcoholic situation? People came over to your house, not carrying six-packs, and you sat and played cards or other games and just talked. You had a good time and it wasn't corny, was it? Well, was it?

There are at least nine million alcoholics in America. Are you one of them? Has it every really dawned on you that you might be drinking a lot? Do you really think about drinking, even when you are in a bar, or has it become so natural a social thing that you just do it?

I am sure none of you consider yourselves alcoholics or even worry about how much of your behavior is merely training for your social future.

Now, I am not sitting pretty on my high temperant horse, I drink too. It just upsets me to see my friends get involved in something they can't handle. At first, it never seems like a problem and even later it is hard to recognize, but alcoholism is one of America's major problems and it can start here, now. It can happen to you and the only way to make sure that it doesn't, it to take note, objectively, of your life-style. Try saying "Coke" when someone asks, "What'll you have?"

Ford's nuke policy

By PAULA L. GOODMAN and PAUL FISHMAN

There's been an increasing awareness among the college community that the risks inherent in nuclear power are staggering. The American Physical Society estimates that a moderate nuclear plant accident would cause over 10,000 fatal cases of cancer and up to 20,000 cases of genetic deformities. The Brookhaven National Laboratory has added that such a mishap could kill 45,000 people and blanket a state the size of Pennsylvania with radioactive poisons.

The chance of a nuclear catastrophe has blossomed under the Forld Administration's benign neglect. Last year, the Atomic Energy Commission reported that they'd found major safety violations in over 400 nuclear power facilities. Even committed members of the nuclear industry are beginning to have second thoughts. This past February, three nuclear engineers resigned from the General Electric nuclear program to protest the lack of nuclear safety. They termed the nuclear plants, "a serious threat to the future of all life on this planet" lamenting that, "we can never build them safe enough."

Gerald Ford, with admirable composure, seems to have no such concerns. Ford has pushed for a crash nuclear development program to the tune of $100 billion. While Ford has merely crept forward in the field of solar power (which received only 5 per cent of his Energy Research budget), he has lavished 45 per cent of this budget on nuclear power; $763 million. Showing he means business, in 1975 Ford called for construction of 200 new nuclear plants within the decade. At this rate of Presidential enthusiasm we would be forced to deal with 400 million pounds of plutonium by the year 2000.

Among Ford's pet projects of expansion, he has called for funding the Clinch River breeder reactor. In doing so, Ford has ignored the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's 1975 report pleading that construction of the Clinch River breeder be delayed by 4 to 12 years.

We must understand that fast breeders are in a class by themselves. Smaller than standard reactors, they force neutrons to travel at higher speeds. It takes only seconds for a breeder to suffer a runaway nuclear reaction, rupture its containment shield and disperse its radioactive contents. Each breeder reactor produces hundreds of pounds of plutonium. This becomes important since, according to Livermore Radiation Laboratory in California, a single pound of this polution could cause 9 billion cases of lung concer. To kill a person from massive fibrosis of the lunge, it would take only .001 grams of tasteless, invisible, odorless plutonium.

And the danger of breeder reactors is not merely a theoretical statistic. In Ford's home state of Michigan, the Enrico Fermi reactor raged out of control. The fuel core melted and the plant flooded with high-level radiation; the staff was terrified that the breeder would "run away" and destroy the city of Detroit only 30 miles away.

But Gerald Ford courageously plods on, calling the development of the fast-breeder reactor the nation's "number one" energy priority. Ford continues to carry the ball for Richard Nixon, who declared in his Energy Policy Statement, "Our best hope today for economic clean energy lies with the fast-breeder reactor." Unfortunately, one cannot "heal the wounds" of a nuclear catastrophe with a pardon.

In general, Ford has demonstrated great optimism in the face of reality. He has refused to call for a shutdown of defective nuclear plants, even when shown that they're operating in flagrant violation of government standards. This fits with the rest of his unique environmental record. Ford has twice vetoed environmental controls on strip-mining. He has fought to extend deadlines on industrial compliance with air pollution standards. Ford has refused even to meet with nuclear critics; he has turned down requests to discuss energy policies with Dr. George Kistiakovsky (an advisor to Eisenhower who worked on the Manhattan Project) and Dr. John Gofman, director of the Lawrence Radiation Lab.

Perhaps the most frightening aspect of nuclear power is the potential of "Materials Unaccounted For"; stolen nuclear fuels. In a single plant in Pennsylvania, no amount of investigation could uncover 148 pounds of enriched uranium fuel. It only takes thirteen pounds of uranium from a fast-breeder to make an atomic weapon, and a mere nine pounds of plutonium to make a neat grapefruit-size nuclear bomb.

There is no way of knowing just how much nuclear fuel has been stolen nationwide; estimates range in the thousands of pounds. Yet, Ford has complacently prevented funding for nuclear safeguards. Upon taking office, President Ford cut $69 million from a program to guard against nuclear theft. The Atomic Energy Commission has thus been unable to hire more than 300 guards; it has had to abandon a special inventory system to secure radioactive materials.

Carter's positions on nuclear energy seem to indicate a more reasonable approach. Carter has called for a moratorium on construction of nuclear power plants and for more stringent controls on those already in operation. In contrast to Ford's adamant refusal to meet anti-nuclear advocates, Carter has appointed Gus Speth, an environmental lawyer opposed to nuclear power, to sit on his advisory panel.

Carter stresses coal, solar energy and geothermal power as our most viable energy options. Whereas Ford emphasized developing the breeder reactor, Carter has termed an end to nuclear proliferation a top priority.

Organizing veterans

To the Editor:

I am appealing to all veterans nationwide and those others that have courage and are interested in causing meaningful change in government.

For some 30 years, daily worsening, the government has habitually lied and deceived you, cheated and stole for you, ravaged and raped you to have you serve their purpose of protecting the interests of the greedy rich by shedding your blood, sweat and time, sacrificing your limbs and lives, your bodies. The rich get lousy richer and you get pitifully poorer.

It is only through the veteran [they fear the veteran, the most powerful and lethal force in the country when organized] and those others, the masses of abused poor [the common man-woman who pays the brunt of taxes], the aroused citizen, you and I, that can stop our degradation and serfdom and cause a clean sweep of government from top to bottom. I need your help. We need each other desperately to avoid a collapse in exactness to the Roman Empire and other degenerate empires. I urge you to organize, solicit, do whatever, for a togetherness. Stay clear of all congressionally chartered veteran organizations and conventional cliches [they're the in-crowd].

Let's all work in a brotherhood, form a brotherhood, to change what is destroying us: corrupt government [the tool of the rich], and get back what was taken and stolen: government of the people, for the people, by the people, a true democracy. Let's do what has to be done; let's do what we must.

I have much to say and it is my ambition to speak at universities and colleges across the nation, but I am a poor man and cannot afford the cost. I deeply regret this.

Call me, write me, come see me, but do your thing man-woman for yourself and loved ones. Organize! There is no time to waste. Phone [504] 641-0867, Clarence P. that I had experienced the most outrageous, blatant form of sexism that a woman could experience. There was a lot I had to grapple with in terms of how men and women deal with each other. My favorite quote is from a book called Sisterhood is Powerful by Robin Morgan. 'Being a woman is swinging down the street being happy and being treated like a piece of meat in return', which is exactly what happened to me."

About her perspectives toward men, Allen said laughingly, "some of my best friends are men. We're all people, I'd like to think we can have more compassion for each other. I think separatism is facism. In terms of the Lesbian Separatist Community, it is ridiculous. It doesn't make any sense, as women, to exclude ourselves from men totally, it is not the reason we are here. We are here to learn from each other and share with each other. If you have to be angry sometimes to get your point across, it's good, it's real feeling. I know how it feels to be angry and frustrated as a woman and not know why.

"In terms of being a campus personality, the issue of pornography on campus had a lot to do with it.

"I love criticism and opposition, it keeps me strong. I see anger as a form of resistance. It shows that people are thinking.

"I get more positive support from men than negative. I am getting a lot of support from all over.

"The media objectifies the people, and they have objectified me. Some people think I'm a hard-core castrating bitch. I may be hard-core, but I'm not castrating."

"Everybody needs a shock," Allen said. "I don't feel that most of the things I write and say are that shocking, except perhaps to the people who nave never thought about these things."

In order to change society's sexist attitudes, Allen said, "I would point out the manifestations of sexism, and if I make somebody mad in the process, that's good. As I said before, at least they're thinking."

"I try to deal with people. Just dealing with people honestly has got to change something as long as you're heard."

Allen's other activities include driving a UMass bus and playing on the Ultimate Frisbee team. Allen quit her job as Women's Coordinator at the Collegian "due to lack of time, energy and spirit," she said.

UMass professor presents new book

Emily Dickinson as a modern poet is the subject of one of two new books that will be published by a UMass professor.

Dr. David Porter, professor of English, is completing a study of the Amherst poet's role in the revolution in American literature which she brought about over 100 years ago with her contemporaries Ralph Waldo Emerson and Walt Whitman. Both books will be published by Harvard University Press.

A recluse in her father's mansion in Amherst, Emily Dickinson seems to have been far removed from the flow of important public events in the nineteenth century. Porter's study reveals how she created, despite her seclusion and perhaps in part because of it, a language that first introduced into art some of the qualities that now characterize modern American attitudes and modern twentieth-century poetry.

Entitled "Emily Dickinson and the Language of American Modernism," Porter's book is a continuation of his earlier work, "The Art of Emily Dickinson's Early Poetry," also published by Harvard University. Three chapters of the newer book have already appeared in journals.

Ralph Waldo Emerson, the nineteenth-century poet, lecturer and essayist who lived in Concord, Massachusetts, is the subject of Porter's second new book, entitled "Emerson's Poetics". Emerson's small success as a poet is studied alongside his revolutionary and influential ideas about poetry and art. The chapter which deals with the long poem about the death of Emerson's young son recently appeared in print.

According to Porter, the two books are basically concerned with changes in our language and how they bring about changes in the way we think about ourselves and our experiences.

Cocoa bean price jump to force 20¢ candy bar

NEW YORK [AP] — Candy lovers who watched prices rise during the sugar shortage are groaning at the prospect of more bad news next year: the 20-cent chocolate bar.

This time, the culprit is the cocoa bean.

The Nestle Co. Inc. of White Plains, N.Y. announced Monday that it was raising wholesale prices on a variety of chocolate products. At the retail level, a typical chocolate bar will go from 15 cents to 20 cents, the company said.

The Nestle move was not unexpected since the Hershey Corp., M&M and Peter Paul announced similar price boosts late last month.

Figuring out the percentage of increase gets complicated because the companies tried to sweeten the impact of the higher prices by increasing the size of their candy bars.

A Nestle milk chocolate bar, for example, will grow from 1 to 1¼ ounces; a Hershey milk chocolate bar is going from 1.2 to 1.35 ounces. The Nestle bar is smaller — 1¼ is equal to 1.25.

The smaller, cheaper Nestle bar costs 13.3 cents per ounce; the larger, higher-price variety will cost 16 cents per ounce; the increase is 20 per cent. For Hershey, the per-ounce price increase works out to 19 per cent.

Nestle said the wholesale price increases will go into effect early in 1977, after stocks of the 15-cent chocolate bars are used up. The increase is expected at the retail level next spring.

All the companies blamed higher costs for the increases, noting that cocoa beans which sold for 75 cents a pound a year ago, now are going for close to $1.50. The firms said the chocolate increases would have come sooner if it had not been for the drop in the price of sugar which has declined about 90 per cent from 1974 levels.

Most of the world's cocoa beans are grown in Africa and the crop has been tight for the past two years. At the same time, the demand has been strong, causing the price increase.

Stephen Korsen of Nestle said there is no actual shortage of cocoa beans. He said however, that the producing countries "are regulating the flow" of beans. Political upheavals in some cocoa-growing areas also have interrupted the supply, Korsen said.

The National Confectioners Association said it takes 65 pounds of cocoa beans to make 100 pounds of milk chocolate. The value of the beans in a 1¼ ounce bar last year was about three cents; the value of the beans in a 1¼-ounce bar at the current price of cocoa is about eight cents.

Paint attack

NEW YORK [UPI] — Mayor Abraham D. Beame Monday described as "disgraceful" a paint attack on a Russian violinist by two youths during a Carnegie Hall concert.

"I do not condone the oppression of Jews in the Soviet Union, but yesterday's shameful incident in Carnegie Hall did not advance the cause of Soviet Jewry", Beame said.

The incident occurred during a performance Sunday night by violinist Vladimir Spivakov.

Witnesses said a young man ran down the right aisle during Spivakov's first selection, shouted, "Remember the Soviet Jews" in Russian and threw a bag containing red paint at the performer.

One of 30 security men on duty deflected the bag to the stage floor but another youth later ran down the left aisle and threw a paint bomb that burst over Spivakov's clothes, his Stradivarius violin and a few members of the audience.

Police arrested two youths and charged them with criminal mischief in the attack. They were Martin Laub, 19, and Paul Shatz, 16, both of New York. Police said both claimed to be members of the Jewish Defense League.

"The attacks... were disgraceful," Beame said in a statement. "We will not tolerate attacks on foreign artists that damage the city's reputation."

Dance, flamenco, and ballet Friday feature in FAC

The Ballet Nacional Festivales de Espana featuring a company of 50 dancers, singers and musicians will be performing at the Fine Arts Center of UMass Friday at 8 p.m. in a star-studded evening of Spanish dance, flamenco and ballet.

The company is on its debut tour of North and South America and will be giving over 100 performances in the U.S., Canada, South America, Central America and the Caribbean.

Since starting the tour, the company has played to full houses on both the East and West coast. Reviewers in both the Washington Post and Philadelphia Enquirer have praised the Ballet for its performance.

The Ballet Festivales de Espana is Spain's first National Ballet Company and represents an enormous effort on the part of the Spanish Ministry of Tourism and information to combine all of the finest dance elements in the country into a super Ballet.

The effort began two years ago when the best elements of Spain's Antonio Ballet, Zarzuela Ballet and Festival Ballet were joined into the Ballet Nacional Festivales de Espana. Rarely, if ever, has such a number of Spanish stars been seen together on stage. They include Maria del Sol, Mario La Vega, Aurora Pons, Curra Jimenez, Juan Manuel and Angel Arocha.

The company's repertory is varied and colorful and includes virtuoso pieces such as Bolero and Zarabanda, classical pieces such as Danza Escuela Espanola, and such stunning flamenco and ensemble numbers as Boda de Luis Alonso and Jota de la Dolores and a number by Manuel De Falla with a special set designed by Pablo Picasso.

Tickets for the National Ballet of Spain are now on sale the Fine Arts Center box office and all Ticketron outlets. Ticket prices are: General public, $6, 5, 4; UMass students $4, 3, 3, and other students and senior citizens $5, 4, 3. For more information, call 545-2511.

How Deep the Smile?

By KIT WALKER

The moon is in airy, communicative Gemini, the sun in dark, secretive Scorpio. So today we may feel a little schizoid.

At about 1:00 the moon enters the 8th house of the sun, i.e., she's 8 signs distant. Scorpio rules the 8th house, so the sign that is the 8th house of Scorpio has extra importance for it — and Gemini is that sign. This would say something about our minds (Gemini) being responsible for a lot of our compulsive behavior (Scorpio), and that until we have some control over our minds, we'll have no control over ourselves. Both Gemini and Scorpio are "either-or" signs, but Gemini changes back and forth as quickly as alternating current, while Scorpio is more fixed, and goes one way or the other. So today you may find yourself feeling like a saint one minute, and a devil the next.

This combination also points to sharing ideas and communication as the way to rise about the materialistic muck we're stuck in. And so much of what keeps us stuck is our constant flow of thoughts about what we want — never stopping to count our blessings, we're always wishing we had more. We forget that the silence behind our racing thoughts is the most precious gift of all, and it's free.

A good question to ask ourselves today is if what we think we want is what we really need. Our minds are tricky little devils, and if they work for our small ego they pull the wool over our third eye all the time, to cover up the light of truth so the lord of darkness can use us as his slaves. And all the while we're thinking we're free and independent. It's true we create our own lives, but it's not so easy as watching TV all day (unless you want to lead a TV life). If you don't think Big Brother is watching you, take another look at what you're really watching on TV. The media has such a heavy influence on the minds of the masses that it runs our lives unconsciously. It all seems so harmless, but it's nothing but the blind leading the blind.

Scorpio is ruled by Pluto, the slowest planet, which has its effect on the masses, more than on the single individual. The mass of humanity and its general habits and energy flow is like a primal ooze we're all wading around in. It's comfortable to let someone else control you because then you don't have to exert yourself, make decisions, or face your true destiny. But those people who are running things aren't in control either. It might be a help to find out what really is. It seems a certain self-defeating power has control over our most basic instincts, and time and time again it leads us through the same vicious circle, turning us into haggard ghosts in the process. It's our own fear that has control over us. Our own death is constantly hovering over our shoulder, driving us into more futility. It makes us grasp at life, which refuses to be possessed, so we're lost in no-man's land.

Cleaver speaks at UConn

STORRS, Conn. [UPI] — Former Black Panther Party militant Eldridge Cleaver said the Panthers and other black left-wing groups have been virtually assimilated into the Democratic party.

Cleaver told a University of Connecticut audience Sunday most Black Panthers have been taken into the Democratic party by politicians who "pull into their machine any local black militant they can."

He said after their victories in last Tuesday's election, the Democrats now have the chance to become the establishment party. "The Republican Party is on its way to the garbage can of history," he said.

Cleaver, 41, who faces trial Jan. 24 in Oakland, Calif., on assault charges stemming from an alleged 1968 shootout with police, said the Black Panther Party exists only on paper now.

The former minister of information for the Black Panthers, said the most precious thing America has is its Democratic system and he said the strength of the American military is necessary to guarantee the security of the country.

He said his advocacy of a strong defense posture in the United States was not promoting a military state, but "a sane attitude towards the military."

Until last November, Cleaver was living in self-imposed exile in Paris. He said he became a "born-again Christian" after a mystical experience he had while moon-gazing from his Paris balcony.

"It's been said travel broadens. I've traveled, why shouldn't I change," he said. "Everybody in this room has changed since 1968. If they haven't, they belong in a museum."

A 1968 candidate for president on the Peace and Freedom party ticket, Cleaver said he is optimistic about Jimmy Carter's presidency because he believes the former Georgia governor is more interested in people than business corporations.

Money received from Medicaid services

By CRAIG A. PALMER

WASHINGTON [UPI] — About 2,500 doctors, dentists, labs and drugstores each received $100,000 or more in taxpayers' money last year for Medicaid services to needy patients, the Health, Education and Welfare Department said Monday.

HEW released for the first time the names of those who make the biggest income from Medicaid. The list — which drew an immediate protest from the American Medical Association — showed they range from Harlem to Waianae, Hawaii; from central Indiana to New Orleans to Detroit.

HEW said it issued the names under requirements of the Freedom of Information Act. But organized medicine criticized the public identification of Medicaid's big-income doctors as "nothing less than an attempt at guilt by innuendo."

The 2,533 doctors, dentists, laboratories and pharmacies listed received a total $445.3 million for their services — or 16.3 per cent of the $2.7 billion paid to so-called Medicaid, providers in those categories, HEW said.

The total Medicaid bill to federal and state governments is expected to rise from $15.2 billion in fiscal 1976 to $18.4 billion in 1977.

"The fact that the medical providers received the stated amount from the Medicaid program should not be construed as any evidence of wrongdoing, nor do the amounts listed necessarily represent 'earnings' or 'profits,' " HEW said in a statement accompanying the 346-page list.

HEW released a smaller list a year ago, but it only identified doctors who received more than $100,000 for Medicaid services.

The new list names 1,099 pharmacies, 995 physicians, 312 dentists and 127 laboratories and providers of x-ray services. The most big-income providers, listed were from California, Illinois and New York.

The AMA in a statement accused HEW of trying to embarrass or intimidate doctors by releasing their names.

YOUR BIRTHDAY by STELLA WILDER

Tuesday, November 9 — Born today, you are one of those highly impressionable persons who is influenced, even if unconsciously, by every contact you make, however small and seemingly insignificant. You will have to take great care in the selection of friends and companions, for you will not often be able to assert yourself should what you wish for yourself be different or require a direction different from that chosen for you by others. Qualities that suit you not at all may well rub off on you from the company you keep if that company differs from you in consequential ways. The ease with which you can be led astray should diminish with time, maturity, and increasing self-confidence.

All signs point to a later marriage for you than others, especially family members, may expect. Ultimately, however, you should be able to secure happiness for yourself in a marriage that provides for you and your spouse excitement, interest and, at the same time, peace of mind. Even so, you may always be afflicted with periods of loneliness, periods when you find it difficult to relate to others in ways that increase your sense of well-being. Somewhat inclined to take the shortcut when the long way around would serve you better, you may often find that you have neglected to work through one of many phases of a given endeavor and, in consequence, have forfeited the success you might have had. Chances are good, however, that you will be given fresh opportunities to reach your goals when, for one reason or another, you have failed in those initially given you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — The good traits you see in another may be no more than wishful thinking. Make certain to act on real circumstances, not false ones.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Heed the advice of one older, wiser and more experienced. Children follow your lead in the afternoon.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — What you don't understand, another well may grasp. Don't be surprised should the opposition catch up with you.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Lend charm, as well as truth, to your explanations of recent behavior. Don't expect to win over the entire opposition at once.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Make known your wants -- as soon as possible. There is no time like the present for making a new friend -- and sharing an old one.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Though you may panic momentarily over new responsibilities, ultimately, you should be able to fit everything into your schedule.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — You can be direct at the same time that you are subtle and tactful. Make yourself fade into the background during the afternoon and evening.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Unpleasant surroundings must be put up with, whether you like it or not. Make the best of present conditions as you work toward betters ones.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Unless you can resist the temptation to change horses 'mid stream, you are definitely in trouble late in the day.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — An unpleasant situation need not disturb you as much as you allow it to. Direct your thinking toward gains to made -- in spite of everything.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Make an effort to spotlight the good qualities of another rather than the bad. Character development is vital to your success today.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — The difference you feel between you and another need not make friendship impossible. Play up areas where sameness is demonstrated.

Fines pay for oil spills

PROVIDENCE [AP] — The cost of cleaning up oil spills along the Rhode Island and southern Massachusetts coasts between March and September was nearly paid for by resulting fines, the U.S. Coast Guard reports.

Coast Guard Cmdr. Leon E. Beaudin, officer in charge of the marine safety office here, said the cleanup costs totaled $24,887 for 126 oil spills between March 1 and Sept. 30.

He added that fines totaled $23,025.

The Providence marine safety office covers all waters between Watch Hill, R.I., and Marion, Mass., and includes the ports of Providence, Newport and New Bedford, Mass.

Schembechler gives his Woody imitation

ANN ARBOR, Mich. [UPI] — Subdued Bo Schembechler, smarting from "as big a disappointment as I've had," yesterday barred writers from interviews with his University of Michigan football players a week earlier than usual.

Schembechler and his former mentor Woody Hayes, whom the coach of the Wolverines intensely dislikes being compared to, traditionally emulate one another on the eve of the Ohio State—Michigan season-ending struggle by closing practices and shutting off the normal flows of information.

Michigan was blind-sided from the list of unbeatens by Purdue Saturday, 16-14, and Schembechler has reacted by closing a curtain of secrecy around his players.

"We've had too much of that," Schembechler said when asked if players would be available for interviews Monday as usual. "And it hasn't done us any good at all.

"They've been interviewed, written about, praised... shoot, you guys even had me believing that we were a good football team," he said. "I don't care what you write this week. I'd prefer it if you didn't write anything at all.

"We've gotten more attention by losing once than we did by winning all season," the coach said, noting the higher than usual attendance at his weekly news luncheon. "I haven't seen most of the TV and radio guys for at least a year.

"You've got to understand," Schembechler said as he explained the ban, "these guys are really way down... the players and coaches... it's a matter of placing the emphasis on their coming back."

The intense Michigan coach blamed his offense for frittering away opportunities to get more than 14 points and was harsh on his defense for failing to stop Purdue when it counted.

"That is as big a disappointment as I've ever had," he said. "I really feel — and I'm not taking anything away from Purdue, their effort was super — but this is the first time since 1969 we have lost to a team I feel we should have beaten."

In 1969, Schembechler's first year, Michigan State initiated him into the ways of the Big Ten with an upset of the Wolverines. Since then, no other Big Ten team except Ohio State had beaten a Schembechler-coached Michigan team.

"Alex (Agase, the Boilermakers' coach) was so happy as I looked at him on the field after the game," Schembechler said. "We have beaten him every way imaginable in the past.

Bears, Pardee still hopeful after ref chokes on whistle

CHICAGO [UPI] — A football official "can eat a flag, but he can't eat a whistle," Chicago Bears' coach Jack Pardee said yesterday.

Speaking of the Bears' 28-27 loss Sunday to the Oakland Raiders, Pardee refused to become aroused over the call of referee Chuck Heberling denying the Bears a fourth period touchdown which could have won the game.

The call came when Wally Chambers sacked Oakland quarterback Ken Stabler and he fumbled on the Oakland 39. Roger Stillwell recovered the ball and ran for an apparent touchdown.

But Heberling nullified the score because he had inadvertently blown his whistle at the point of recovery.

"I don't know why he blew it," Pardee said. "He shouldn't have. An official can eat a flag, but he can't eat a whistle. Most violations can be eaten. On a flag you can have a conference of officials, but a whistle stops play and you can't overrule a whistle.

"I couldn't hear the whistle. It's in the record book now and it hurt. We had a touchdown taken away. Usually an official won't blow a call like that, but he blew the play and he admitted it. It took a lot of fortitude on his part to admit it, but it's not going to change the outcome."

Pardee had a sunny look at the future for the Bears even though the Sunday loss gave the team a 4-5 record for the season. "If we do our job," he said, "we can make the playoffs this year.

"Washington has three losses and Dallas and St. Louis to play. San Francisco has three losses and has to play Minnesota and Los Angeles. St. Louis has two losses and has to play Los Angeles, Washington, Dallas and Baltimore. This year I think 9-5 will make the playoffs and usually it's 10-4. So we're not discouraged."

Flyers reprieved

TORONTO [UPI] — Four members of the Philadelphia Flyers were told yesterday they will be able to complete the current National Hockey League season before going to trial on various assault charges stemming from last season's NHL playoffs.

County court judge Walter Martin directed Don Saleski and Joe Watson to stand trial June 1, Mel Bridgman on June 8 and Bob Kelly on June 15.

Both Saleski and Watson will be tried for assaulting a policeman and possessing a dangerous weapon — their hockey sticks. The assault charge against Saleski was dropped in a preliminary hearing Oct. 20 but reinstated by Judge Martin.

Bridgman is charged with assault causing bodily harm to Toronto Maple Leaf defenseman Borje Salming. Kelly faces the same charge for allegedly hitting an usherette with his glove, causing an eye injury.

The charges against Saleski, Watson and Bridgman resulted from a brawling game against the Leafs at Maple Leaf Gardens last April 15 in the quarter-finals of the Stanley Cup playoffs.

Kelly's alleged assault was in a game in the same series a week later.

Crown prosecutor Robert McGee asked that the trials be held in January, but attorney George Finlayson, representing all four players, argued successfully that they be put off until after the current hockey season.

Pitt tops poll

NEW YORK [UPI] — Tony Dorsett's ferocious desire to capture the Heisman Trophy propelled the University of Pittsburgh to the No. 1 ranking today and marked the first time an eastern team has been top-rated since Syracuse won the National Championship in 1959.

Never mind that Pittsburgh became top rated by the UPI board of coaches by virtue of Michigan's surprise loss to Purdue last Saturday. Pitt coach Johnny Majors knew he needed an assist from somebody to reach the top and he got that help when Michigan was bombed after encountering too many Boilermakers.

Dorsett had his own kind of high as he set two NCAA records. The Pitt star rushed for 212 yards and three touchdowns in a 37-7 rout of Army that gave him a career total of 6,192 yards in all-purpose running and enabled him to become the first college football player to have three seasons of 1,500 yards rushing.

Pittsburgh, second in the ratings last week, drew 30 first place votes from the 42 coaches and a 404-point total as it finally emerged No. 1.

UCLA and Southern California, each on two first place ballots, also moved up a notch as Michigan dropped from No. 1 to fourth place. UCLA was awarded 373 points and Southern Cal 286. Michigan received die-hard first place support from two coaches, but it wasn't enough as the Wolverines skidded 71 points to 247.

Gullett off roster

CINCINNATI [UPI] — The Cincinnati Reds yesterday unveiled their 40-man winter roster, which for the first time in seven years does not contain the name of pitcher Don Gullett.

Gullett played out his option and is now a free agent negotiating with the Reds and 12 other teams for his services next season.

Along with the absence of Gullet, the new 40-man roster is notable for the shuffling of several minor leaguers. The Reds promoted seven youngsters from their farm system, while trading three and demoting three others.

Allen declares himself free man, special draft scheduled for him

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] — The Philadelphia Phillies announced they received official notification Monday that controversial first baseman Dick Allen has declared himself a free agent.

Allen will thus go through a special free agent draft which probably will be held the next three days during the annual general managers' meetings in Palm Springs, Calif.

Philadelphia general manager Paul Owens and manager Danny Ozark had said Allen, who reportedly left the team without permission on at least two occasions last season, would not be in a Phillies' uniform in 1977.

The 34-year-old Allen appeared in 85 games in 1976, hitting .268 with 15 homers and 49 runs batted in. He was placed on the disabled list twice with an ailing right shoulder. In his 13-year career, he has hit 346 homers.

Allen, who had signed a 1976 contract on Sept. 2, verbally notified the Major League Baseball Players Association office Friday that he would exercise his option to become a free agent under the new players-owners agreement.

Under that agreement, a player with at least six years in the majors who did not sign a 1977 contract by last Aug. 9 can declare himself a free agent.

On Monday, the Players Association gave the Phillies written notification of Allen's intentions.

Under the complex system spelled out in the new players-owners agreement, if two or more teams select Allen's negotiation rights, the Phillies will receive a draft pick in the June, 1977 free agent draft from the team which eventually signs Allen.

Tryouts biased?

There happen to be several of the same women athletes dominating almost every team sport and not necessarily because of their versatility or skill but because the coaches are showing favoritism.

When I was in high school the same group of women played every sport, but that was because there were only a few women skilled enough and interested in high school athletics then. Here at UMass there are great numbers of women who are aptly skilled for intercollegiate competition, yet many of these women are not given a chance because of the coaches.

At basketball tryouts, it seemed that those women who were lucky enough to be on the field hockey team or volleyball team did not have to try out as many nights as we women not on those teams. Of course we realize that they could not tire themselves before games but this still did not make it fair. We were told "That's just the way it is."

I know someone who did not try out yet she made first cuts because she played JV last year. As you can see, something is rotten in NOPE.

If all of last years' players automatically make the cut, why waste our time and theirs at tryouts? At least be honest about the situation!

In men's basketball the varsity is predetermined, but everyone knows this. Tryouts are held for the JV only. In order to be straightforward, women's basketball should be run on the same premise.

Bias in women's athletics must not be perpetrated by women, if it is, we are only hurting ourselves!

Booters high on three wins; Jumbos next

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

If anything, the last three games played by the UMass varsity soccer team should give the players a psychological lift in their season finals at Tufts today.

The Minutemen are undefeated in their last three games, playing Boston College to a scoreless tie then defeating Springfield and New Hampshire. In their last four games, co-captain Mark Hanks has given up only two goals.

"It definitely should give us a lift," said coach Russ Kidd. "The kids are riding high right now."

One reason for the team's recent success has to be the play of co-captain Mike Parsons, who was moved from fullback to the front line. Parsons scored one of the Minutemen goals in Saturday's 2-0 win over New Hampshire.

"I thought about it last spring," (switching Parsons to the front line) Kidd revealed. "But he was practice teaching then and couldn't devote full time to spring practice," Kidd added. "During the pre-season I felt I couldn't afford to take him out of the backfield, but as the season went on we developed players who could replace him in the backfield, so I made the move.

Tufts is a strong Division II team with a record of 11-2-1 and is looking for another ECAC post-season tournament berth. The Jumbos are coached by Jerry Clinton, a former UMass soccer and lacrosse player.

Tufts won the Greater Boston League soccer championship this year, beating Boston University, Boston College, Brandeis and MIT. The Jumbos were also the only team to beat Southeastern Mass University this year.

The Jumbos are led by senior Bill Schacter, a right wing, who has nine goals and sophomore Majid Mahrez from Algeria, who has six goals. Another top player is junior co-captain Steve Kadish, a fullback who usually covers the opposition's right wing.

Oddly, Tufts wasn't supposed to be good this year because of the loss of its top goal scorer Pat Sullivan. But, as things turned out, the only teams to defeat Tufts this year were Bowdoin and Williams, with both losses coming on the road. UMass will be hoping to hand the Jumbos their first home setback of the year.

"They're tough," Kidd added. They've been involved in around eight one-goal games this year."

The Minutemen, who have been struggling all year, have upped their record to 4-8-1 and would like to close out their season with a win.

"The last two games were real team efforts," Kidd said. "It's a nice feeling."

BOOTER BANTER: Yankee Conference coaches have completed their ballots for the All Star team and although Mark Hanks deserves to be named to the team, he probably won't due to the team's disappointing record. Even though Kidd feels Hanks is the best goalie in the Yankee Conference, he couldn't vote for him because he was not allowed to vote for anyone on his own team ... Freshman Tarek Elnabli, who had a goal in Saturday's game should see more action today.

All eyes are on the ball during a recent UMass soccer game, and of course the Minutemen will hope to be on the ball this afternoon in their season finale vs. Tufts. They will be looking to increase their three game winning streak, and end the season on a high note. (Staff photo by Jim Higgins)

Spikers end season tonight

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The women's volleyball team takes the court tonight for its last regular season play in the tri-match with Keene State and Westfield State at 7 p.m. at the NOPE gym.

UMass coach Dianne Thompson said that Keene St. will be the toughest of the two opponents, but commented, "We probably have the better skills."

Thompson was skeptical about tonight's match because of her team's poor showing at the Rhode Island tournament last Saturday saying "by no means are we going to give up."

Service returns are the spikers' most outstanding flaw, according to Thompson. Poor returns and lack of concentration were the direct causes of the team's downfall at the tournament, she said.

Another major problem confronting the spikers is their degenerating net play. This was particularly evident in the loss to Smith last week. UMass, once an aggressive, powerful team up front, was backing away from net challenges, giving Smith complete dominance.

In general, Thompson said, "We have not been playing our type of aggressive ball game."

However, Thompson said she was pleased with the way the women have improved on their skills since the season's outset, and thus remained optimistic about the match.

"I think they're going to come through," she said.

Last year the spikers were victorious over both Keene St. (13-15, 15-10, 15-12) and Westfield (15-10, 15-6).

Curleyboots, JV gridders win

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

Anyone who might have hoped that the UMass football team could gain some measure of revenge for its Homecoming loss last month to UConn got that wish answered last Sunday.

The junior varsity Minutemen, using the foot of Mark Curley and a stingy defense, came from behind and defeated their UConn counterparts, 9-7, in a game played at Alumni Stadium.

UMass trailed, 7-6, late in the fourth period, before taking over after a UConn punt and marching down to the four-yard line. After the drive stalled, Curley booted his third field goal of the game from 20 yards out with only 1:52 remaining to give the JVs their third straight win and a 3-0-1 record.

Curley had kicked three-pointers from 39 and 31-yards out in the first quarter, but the Huskies took the lead in the second period as Jim Richards hauled in an 11-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Howie Horvath.

"We moved the ball well in the first half, but we just couldn't put the ball in the end zone," said UMass coach Tom Mullen. "In the second half, though, we bogged down."

He added that he felt the offense's ineffectiveness was due to mental errors.

However, quarterback Mike McEvilly had another fine game for the mini-Minutemen. After his appearance with the varsity in Saturday's game against Holy Cross, he completed 10 out of 20 passes for 133 yards and had none intercepted.

Fullback Hank Sareault was the rushing workhorse, meanwhile, as he gained 127 yards in 23 carries.

Halfbacks Cliff Pedrow and Bob Ridley were sidelined because of slight shoulder injuries, and their places were taken by Jerry Flanigan. He gained 32 yards in nine carries in his first start of the season, but more importantly blocked well for Sareault, according to Mullen.

Flanker Kevin O'Connor, the Minutemen's top receiver, caught two passes before being forced out of the game due to a bruised shoulder. His replacement, John Fitzgerald, was on the receiving end of six passes good for 81 yards.

On the negative side of the offense, UMass fumbled six times and lost two of them.

Conversely for the Huskies, their offense lost all three of its fumbles to the Minutemen. But even when UConn didn't give up the ball, it still was unable to move against a rock-hard UMass defense. The Huskies could gain just 99 yards and nine first downs on the day. They amassed only 38 yards on the ground in 22 tries, and completed eight of 26 passes for 61 aerial yards.

"It was a real team effort," said Mullen of his team's defensive play. "The secondary, line, and linebackers, they all played great. They put good pressure on the quarterback."

Blast from the past or past blasted?

Jimmy Carter is President-elect, the greatest athlete in the world is Bruce Jenner, Elizabeth Ray has admitted that she is unable to type, the New England Patriots are threatening for an NFL playoff spot, Patty Hearst is in a federal penitentiary and Bobby Orr is a Chicago Black Hawk.

But the Congress is heavily Democratic, the Cincinnati Reds are baseball's world champions, Michael Dukakis is governor of Massachusetts, and the Pittsburgh Steelers are the NFL's top dog.

Some things have changed in the past year, while others have remained the same. Tantamount to the second claim is this Saturday's football game.

UMass and New Hampshire are meeting for the Yankee Conference title at Alumni Stadium.

Sound familiar? Think the clock has been turned back a year? Well, it has and it hasn't. Sure, the Minutemen and the Wildcats will decide who has possession of the Beanpot for the 1976 season, but the circumstances are a little different.

UMass will be attempting to salvage something out of an off-again, on-again season which has seen no less than 14 of its players sidelined for at least part of a game. The memory of the Minutemen's last home appearance this year must also be an incentive to them this week, as well as revenge.

But last year UMass needed no such negative reason to spur them on. The Minutemen were undefeated entering the contest, and were assured of a bowl bid had they won. National Division II recognition was looming in the distance, as well as a trip to California should they have qualified for the finals.

For New Hampshire a season ago, a Yankee Conference title shot was about as rare as a Buffalo nickel. The Wildcat football program was in danger of being eliminated from the school's athletic program before the 1975 campaign occurred and a running back named Bill Burnham got his hands on the ball. They also entered the game with an unblemished YanCon mark, but were 7-2 overall.

This year, New Hampshire has been just as successful. An identical record follows them around, but a loss to Maine in the mud mars their conference mark. Burnham has gained over a thousand yards and leads the rest of the Yankee rushers by a large margin.

The incentive for the Wildcats is a bowl bid, which several members of the UMass coaching staff and apparently also UNH believe they will receive should a win come their way.

So the Minutemen can play the role of spoiler plus capture their first undiputed Yankee Conference title since 1972 if they come out on top.

So the stage, as they are prone to saying, is set. Two teams with partially clashing goals after this affair with accordingly differing futures. The Minutemen know they have another game left this season, while the Wildcats may be the Northeast representative in the Division II playoffs. Repeating as YanCon champs with a winx is also a reward.

Last season in Durham, Cowell Stadium was jammed with an overflow crowd and many more were watching on public television as the Minutemen and Wildcats battled it out. UMass came out as flat as a day-old opened bottle of ginger ale and couldn't get anything together at all.

As it turned out, UNH never trailed and won the Yankee Conference title over the dejected Minutemen, 14-11. The game was also a comedy of errors for UMass. What proved to be the winning touchdown was set up on an interception. Sub quarterback Fred Kelliher fumbled twice late in the game. In fact, about the only person who did anything at all for the Minutemen was running back Jim Torrance, who gained over a hundred yards. And, perhaps appropriately, the then-sophomore sensation Burnham, who also picked up a few yards over the century mark, iced the win as he picked up a key first down near the end.

So all the cards on the table, as well as the Beanpot. Whoever wins, wins it all. Whoever loses, loses it all. And not only will they lose a game, but a season will go down the chute.

Rent control vote due next Tuesday

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

Rent control proponents are campaigning this week to get voters to the polls for Tuesday's referendum that will decide the fate of rent control in Amherst.

The Amherst Board of Selectmen finalized the Nov. 16 date for the referendum Monday night.

Voters will decide if the town should petition the state legislature for permission to enact its own rent and eviction control laws. If passed by the legislature, the laws would take effect with no further vote needed by the town.

Amherst special town meeting members defeated a rent control proposal last month, 145-44. It was the fourth time since 1969 a rent control proposal has been defeated at town meeting.

The Amherst Tenants Association (ATA) gathered signatures from more than five per cent of the registered town voters, a minimum of 698 signatures, to bring the issue to referendum.

The town Board of Registrars stopped counting after it certified 728 of the signatures last week, according to Estelle M. Matusko, town clerk.

Vincent J. O'Connor, ATA member, said he feels rent control must be open to a vote of all town voters because, "on the question of rent control, town meeting is not representative of the point of view of the town."

The referendum asks the electorate to overturn the vote of last month's town meeting.

The Amherst Rent and Eviction Control Act being proposed by the ATA would roll rent prices back to those charged the occupants in May, 1976. It would also establish a five-member rent control board to regulate maximum rent adjustments "at levels which yield to landlords a fair return on investment," and carry out other provisions of the act.

The polls will be open from 12 noon to 8 p.m. in all seven precincts in the same buildings used during last week's state and national elections, according to Matusko. She said voting machines will be used. A "yes" vote would send the matter to the legislature.

A full-page section-by-section summary of the lengthy, 13-section Rent and Eviction Control Act was presented to the Board of Selectmen by selectperson Diana Romer Monday night. She proposed the summary appear in newspaper ads the board is buying to describe the referendum procedure to voters. The board voted against her suggestion, 3-2, because it felt the summary might be tainted by the bias of the board. The Board of Selectmen has opposed rent control proposals in the past and voted Monday to issue a press release stating its opposition to the upcoming referendum.

Romer and board chairperson Nancy Eddy voted to include the summary in the ad because, as Romer said, "We felt, and I still feel, it's important to let the voters see an actual summary of what the law really contains."

The board is running the ad in the Collegian, the Daily Hampshire Gazette, the Amherst Record, and the Dollar Saver. It includes a brief two-sentence summary of the referendum question, and points out that the full text of the Amherst Rent and Eviction Control Act is posted in each precinct, the Jones Library, and is available at the selectmen's office in Town Hall.

O'Connor said he "deplores" the decision of the board not to publicize the more competent summary in its ad, calling the summary fair and objective.

"We appreciate the hours she put into it," he said, adding, "we're going to use it."

O'Connor said some home-owners and students as well as tenants have formed a new Amherst Committee for Rent Control with the specific purpose of getting the "yes" vote out on Tuesday. Most of the members of the committee belong to the ATA.

The committee will be campaigning in town through Tuesday.

For the referendum to pass, it must be approved by the majority of those voting. In addition, the number of persons voting in favor must be at least 20 per cent of the number of registered town voters.

Matusko said although referenda are typically "low key," a moderate-to-heavy voter turnout could be expected Tuesday.

She said it really depends on the amount of people referendum advocates can get to the polls.

The last time an issue went to referendum in the town was in November 1972. That vote concerned construction of the Boltwood Walk project, Matusko said.

Selectperson Romer says the board opposes the referendum because "potentially, we believe it would adversely affect housing and the general economy of the town."

She said the board feels the act could aggravate the already overcrowded housing situation in town and deter new housing.

Another fear in town, she said, is that rent control would result in a reduction in the town's tax base, increasing the tax burden to residents.

However, she noted that communities near Boston that have recently implemented rent control have found no such effect on their tax base.

George Scheurer, ATA member, said those who fear that town residents will be paying more taxes as a result of rent control are

Journalism committee airs department woes

By BETH PERKINS
Collegian Staff

Paul Mariani, chairperson of the English Department's Long Range Planning Committee, described yesterday's meeting with the Journalistic Studies (JS) Committee as an "amiable" one.

Understaffing and underappropriation have been major areas of concern

"There was a good feeling present," Mariani said, "we are listening to each other."

The JS committee, responsible for overseeing the JS program, had met with the Long Range Planning Committee to air problems and discuss a data report which it had presented to the Long Range Planning Committee regarding the future direction of the JS program.

Understaffing and financial underappropriation have been major areas of concern within the JS program. The program, which currently involves about 250 students, has no secretary, one work-study student, five full-time faculty members and little in the way of supplies. Budget cuts within the English department, and the University as a whole, have limited JS program, while student interest in the program has been increasing.

Mariani said that the long range planning committee had been made aware of the magnitude of the problems and that attempts to solve short range problems, such as a lack of telephones and secretarial staff, were underway.

Decisions regarding long range issues, such as the future structure of a JS major, were not made at the meeting and Mariani said that such issues may have to be addressed at higher administration levels. He suggested the possible creation of an ad hoc committee under the direction of the Provost's office.

Mariani described what he saw as a "split in the JS program." Some members of the program, including Lawrence Pinkham, the new director, feel that the journalism program might better serve the needs of its students if it were separate from the English department.

Gay lit course funded by OHAG

By ANN TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

Orchard Hill Area Government voted to allot the course "Images of Gay Men and Lesbians in Modern Literature" $200 from their budget last night.

The course, which is to be taught in Dickinson lounge next semester, will "discuss homosexuality in a positive, educational manner," Paul Grosslin, an organizer for the course, told the government.

Educational courses are usually funded by McIntyre House. The outline for "Images of Gay Men and Lesbians in Modern Literature" was submitted too late for complete funding by McIntyre.

Grosslin stated that because of this, the $850-$900 necessary for the course is being appropriated through different channels.

Everywomen's Center, the Graduate Senate, the Lesbian Union, and the People's Gay Alliance are being asked to give various amounts of money to the course.

Debbie Love, President of OHAG, gave her endorsement of the course saying it will be an important step in dealing with the "discrimination against gay people."

Before voting to give the course the $200, members of OHAG expressed concern over OHAG's current $1700 budget deficit.

Love reported that a letter regarding additional OHAG funding from McIntyre House had been sent last week but no answer has been received yet.

Scott Weiler, the newly elected treasurer, stated that if OHAG did not receive the necessary $1700 then all programs and categories in the budget would have to be cut 15-20 per cent.

Student input neglected

Martus raps FAC policy

By RICHARD E. BARRELL
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association (SGA) co-President Jay Martus has expressed concern about proposed policies and procedures for the use of the Fine Arts Center, Bowker Auditorium and related facilities administered by the Public Service Education office of the Provost's Office.

The policies, circulated by Dr. William C. Venman, special assistant to the provost, have the support of the Fine Arts Center staff, said James Macrostie, production stage manager of the Fine Arts Center.

"They are a very good idea. They will help clarify who is responsible for what and thereby avoid wasted time and effort," he said.

House manager of the Concert Hall, Barbara Aldrich, also supports the new written policies.

"They are very definitely good," she said. "they will help us maintain our high standards as a show place for the state."

According to Martus, the policies are the product of an administrative decision which does not allow for student input. Martus said several Recognized Student Organizations (RSO) whose names he would not divulge, have complained to him. Martus said he has discussed the groups concerns with Acting-Vice Chancellor Robert L. Woodbury and plans to bring the matter to the attention of the provost.

Presently, Martus and the SGA co-presidents' office are studying the policies to see if further action needs to be taken by the Undergraduate Senate, he said.

The UMass Music Theatre Guild, which is currently engaged in the production of "Kiss Me Kate" at Bowker Auditorium also expressed concern. Karen White, president of the guild, said, "The guild is concerned with how policies will be implemented."

"We plan to meet with Mr. Macrostie and the Fine Arts technical crew to discuss this and any charges for the use of facilities or labor costs we must pay," White said.

Concern over charges for lighting equipment rental costs is a concern of RSO groups using the Fine Arts Concert Hall, said James Reilly, assistant coordinator for Student Activities. Reilly said his office has the proposed policies under study.

"It seems unfortunate that the $150 fee for light and sound rental must be made to all groups," he said.

The lighting rental fee represents a sharing of rental charges incurred because the concert hall was not equipped with lights and sound by the state, according to Frederick Steinway, director of the Fine Arts Center.

Venman said the policies being circulated are in draft form. He said interested students or student organizations may obtain a copy of the proposed policies from his office in 237D Whitmore or 306 Hills North. Input from students is necessary and important, he said.

Initial 'Commuter News' ready by week's end

By JOHN BERGMAN
Collegian Staff

The Commuter Collective busied themselves with the task of putting together the pages of their first newsletter of the year, entitled Commuter News, at a meeting last night.

According to collective member Jim Jordan, the newsletter, which was written by members of the Collective, constitutes "a pilot project to see what kind of response we get" from commuting students to whom Commuter News will be mailed by the end of this week.

The first edition of the eight page paper is a capsule of the organization and recent events relevant to commuter students' lives. Page two contains information about rent control, which will be voted on as a referendum question on November 16th. The placing of rent control as a referendum question, the newsletter says, resulted from the petition circulated by the Amherst Tenants Association. The petition was signed by close to 1,000 people.

Further news in Commuter News concerns the Off Campus Housing Office (OCHO), which makes available information on tenants' rights, day-care facilities, housing codes, model leases, basic rent and utility rates, and has listings on houses, apartments, rooms, people who need roommates. OCHO is also sponsoring a series of films throughout the semester which will focus on rent control. The films are REDEVELOPMENT and COMMUNITY.

Brief notices are included in Commuter News regarding the functions of the Commuter Collective, Outfront and the Easy Rider. One page lists the programs which the Collective supports with money from the Student Activities Tax Fund.

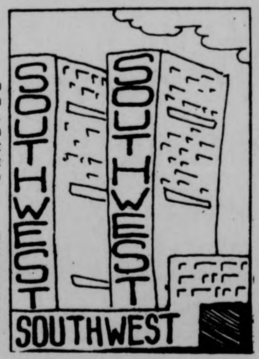
There is a list of phone numbers for such on-campus counseling and referral agencies as the legal Services Office, Commuter Collective, Room to Move, Everywoman's Center and the University Ombudsperson.

African lecturer in Mackimmie

By BARBARA HOFFMAN
Collegian Staff

A psychologist-sociologist from Mozambique will speak in Mackimmie lounge at 8 p.m. tonight on U.S. imperialism in South Africa as a result of last week's decision by the Southwest Assembly (SWA) to finance the lecture.

Dr. William Minter's topic will be "Kissinger and Friends: Revolutionary and Counter-revolutionary Forces in Southern Africa." Admission is free to all members of the Five College community.



Last night SWA President Chris Durkin announced his intention to state, in an open letter to the Collegian, the assembly's position on the Nov. 15 student referendum on pornography.

SWA is urging a "yes" vote on the referendum question which reads:

"Be it resolved: That the SWA not allow pornographic films to be shown in Hampden Student Center because of the sexist and oppressive nature to the men and women of our community."

Albert Sparks, head of Baroque Enterprises, the organization that sponsored such films as "Deep Throat" and "The Devil in Miss Jones" last semester, told SWA three weeks ago that he disagreed with the wording of the referendum and would urge Baroque Enterprises' supporters not to vote.

A 40 per cent turnout is needed to validate the referendum result.

In other business last night, a proposal to allocate some $330 to fund the Arabic Cultural Night slated for Nov. 20 was tabled for a week's consideration by the finance committee and by individual houses.

SWA tabled another proposal that would allocate $225 to the Classics Society for a marionette production of Euripides "Bacchae" in the Southwest Center for the Performing Arts in December.

Joni Mersky, a freshman from Washington, has been selected as the coordinator of Southwest's area newspaper which will appear as a Collegian insert.

The Collegian will not be published tomorrow, Veterans' Day.

Room-to-Move—some answers

By ROSEMARY CONWAY
Collegian Staff

This is the first in a series of features on Room-To-Move to help provide information to the UMass community about the service.

Room-To-Move is a personal counseling drop-in center, which has shifted its emphasis from drug counseling to dealing with personal, emotional and crisis oriented issues as well as alcohol and drug counseling.

This first article deals with the "Stigma of Counseling", or common stereotypes held about those undergoing counseling and about those who provide it.

The people who staff Room-To-Move are making an effort to remove two common misconceptions which prevent people from seeking help when they need it. One is that people are unable to see that they have a problem that counseling could help — they equate counseling for adjustment problems with psychiatric treatment for severe mental disorders. The other misconception is that people consider the therapeutic process as "mystical."

The leading anxiety people have about entering a personal counseling situation, called a "helping relationship" by Room-To-Move staff, is the inability for the individual to view her-or-himself as in need of help when faced with a problem.

When considering counseling, people feel that they are required to admit to themselves or to others that they are weak and cannot handle difficulties, according to the counselors.

People may presume that they will be labeled as sick or crazy, and so decide against seeking help from a counseling service.

Room-To-Move is trying to combat these and other false impressions held by the University community. The service recognizes that "every human being goes through hard times and shouldn't be afraid to ask for help. Counseling is a strengthening process, not one

Pousette—Dart delights

By JIM PAULIN

After having waited over an hour to get in to hear the Pousette-Dart Band, the line of people that extended from the doors of the Hatch to the entrance to the Campus Center, played pinball, talked with each other in the lobby, got in, filled the tables facing the stage, stood in the aisles after the tables were filled (and were complimented by the band for their "endurance"), sat down, stood up, and proceeded to clap, stamp, shake, and dance to the music of the Boston band.

The Hatch is a place where you go to wake up in the morning, to drink coffee. The Hatch is a place to go in the evening to get up again after having spent the morning and afternoon living on that first cup of coffee. Then, in the evening, one gets up and down on beer and mixed drinks such as grasshoppers, high balls, gimlets, bloody marys and the infamous power house. And, "Just like a rock concert," as the band said, the smell of weed was in the air.

This show was sponsored by the Campus Center Program Council Music Committee which has also sponsored Rahsaan Roland Kirk and Gil Scot-Heron, who appeared in the Student Union Ballroom.

Judging by audience appreciation, the event was a success, and may set the stage for similar performances.

TV's picture of reality — Racism, sexism, violence

By ALEXANDRA CONANT
Collegian Staff

"TV is in a position to shape our values and our expectations of reality," said Carl McCargo last night to 15 MacKimmie House residents.

McCargo, a doctoral candidate in psychology, spoke on "Racism, Sexism and Violence in TV". McCargo pointed out that the average American watches two to three hours of television a night, leaving very little time to be in contact with other people or to see any other view of reality than what is presented on TV.

"TV's image of black people is a holdover from the stereotypes of the 19th century. Black women are portrayed as mammies, the black family is broken. blacks are lazy, and black men and women are not able to get along. If you have no basis of comparison, how do you know whether or not this portrayal is accurate?" said McCargo.

McCargo said that TV raises people's expectations about violence. "If you have no idea that TV is not accurate, if you think that there is a criminal in every dark alley, you will expect to be attacked. This could make you over-react in what appears to be a threatening situation."

"TV tends to reinforce the traditional male-female roles — the man as the provider the woman as the homemaker," said McCargo. "TV helps to maintain the social structure as it now exists."

Although there have been many studies on the effect of TV on viewers, there has been little change in the way TV portrays people. "The people who have done these studies are not the people who pay for the programming. The networks listen to what their advertisers want."

"The only way to change TV is to put pressure on the people who pay for the advertising. This would mean organizing consumers. As long as the ratings are high for a program it will not be changed. Hopefully, through the collection of facts on the way TV misrepresents people, we will be able to change it," said McCargo.

Exam prep service offers coaching

By J. MICHAEL MURPHY, JR.
Collegian Staff

"The Educational Testing Service has maintained for years that no one can prepare for their acheivement tests — we prove them wrong every week", said Wayne Jefferson, founder of Test Prep Services, a Boston-based company which opened an Amherst branch recently.

A 1970 UMass graduate, Jefferson started his business two years ago, following a job with a test-coaching service he described as having been "less than honest. One day they just split — without paying the rent, the instructors or teaching the students. I taught my class free of charge, then started my own business."

Of those students who plan to attend graduate school, most must overcome one acronymic hurdle or another — whether it be the GRE (the Graduate Record Exam, analagous to the SAT), the LSAT (L for Legal), the MCAT (Medical), or the GMAT (Business Management), before proceeding further. These tests can be critically important, as the more competitive graduate schools routinely demand scores of 600 or better.

Although ETS claims its tests measure native talent and achievement, Jefferson said, "It is more accurate to say that they are a measure of a student's ability to operate in an artificial situation, where speed is at least as important as accuracy." For those who do not "operate" well under these circumstances, there are coaching companies, like Test Prep.

Jefferson's classes "are very flexible and active," he said. "We concentrate on basics and refining technique. Our classes are limited to ten students or less, and are Issues...

"There is no remembrance of former things, nor will there be any remembrance of later things yet to happen among those who come after."
—Ecclesiastes 1:11

Every so often, some issue or event will capture the fancy of much of the campus community. The Collegian front pages will be filled by it, debates will rage concerning it, and if it's pro-Administration, students will denounce it. Then suddenly, as if by collective consent, it will be dropped, to go the way of hulahoops and skateboards. Some folks, though, are fascinated by dead ends, and so for their benefit, we would like to examine a few of the footnotes of recent campus history.

What ever happened to the University Health Services Investigation? Back in early October, Ellen Gavin, in her ongoing crusade for students' rights, made a diagnosis of various legal ills up at the UMass infirmary. Not being content to merely set the judicial process in motion by going to the District Attorney's Office, she and her crack team of investigators took their case to the people through the Collegian. In an interview somewhat reminiscent of the heroic days of the early '50's, Ms. Gavin revealed that much wickedness had been uncovered in the campus pesthouse and named several UHS officials as unindicted co-conspirators in a plot to defraud students. While she understandably could not reveal her sources for fear of endangering their jobs and reputations, the testimony of those unnamed but forthright UHS employees showed that corruption festered among the highest ranking angels of mercy. What we cannot understand is why those responsible for the infirmary mess still have not been quarantined or blacklisted. Certainly the silence since then has sinister implications. Could it be that Ellen Gavin has been bought off by the Administration??

What ever happened to the Pornography Issue? This dead horse has indeed lain still for some time. But happily, pornography "comes alive" this week with "three big movies" in "three big days". However, while we are delighted to see this issue back out in the open, we also feel that Baroque Enterprises has dealt unfairly with the student body in scheduling only 19 performances this week. If student needs are to be adequately met, at least 23 more showings must be arranged. Instead of the planned children's matinee, we suggest that Baroque commence with a breakfast show, and continue until all campus lust has been satiated. (It is emphatically NOT true that there is currently a shortage of projectionists.)

Who's holding up The Lawsuit? Last Spring, SGA Co-President Jay Martus and five other students, endorsed by the Undergraduate Senate, filed a lawsuit to prevent the Board of Trustees from transferring some $364,000 from a dormitory renovation fund into another account to pay for certain University land purchases. At the time, suing the University with the assistance of Legal Services Office attorneys was a step into the unknown. It still is. Annette Guttenberg, the martyred former Speaker of the Senate who resigned for her beliefs, denounced Messrs. Cronin and Martus at the time of her denouement for selling out to the Administration, citing the unsettled lawsuit as an instance of betrayal. Since then we have heard nothing but plaintive excuses for inaction from the Co-President's Office. Perhaps in the excitement of filing suit in real-world court, the student leadership forgot to check whether their position was in fact legally correct. Or perhaps, as is oft said in the jewelry business, the University Trustees have students over a beryl.

Where have all the Grass Roots gone? Last year, the Collegian contained a weekly supplement entitled "Grassroots". The section was written, edited, and published by two gentlemen, Mr. Abdul Malik and Mr. Richard Scott Gordon. Unfortunately, the section met with only mixed success. While many enjoyed getting the news from a different perspective there were occasional slipups which suggested that 'Roots might have been better off with more than two regular contributors. For example, some observers felt that it was probably not advantageous for 'Roots to have included Idi Amin among its list of black heroes. But despite such minor deficiencies, 'Roots certainly belonged in the middle of the Collegian editorial pages, and we are in many ways sorry to see it gone. However, our sources tell us that Messrs. Gordon and Malik have by no means left the media, and presently grace the airwaves on WMUA. We hope that every reader of Grassroots will be an avid fan of their radio program.

Where is the Student Union? The oppressed students on campus have long awaited the coming of the Union with bated breath and pounding pulse. So have some of the others. And with reason. A mere $200,000 for the right to go out on strike any time you want is a real bargain, a steal even. Student Organizing Project leaders had originally promised that strength in unity would be here last Spring, but apparently there are still a few bugs in the system. However, organizers are confident that only a few more dollars and a bit more time will soon consummate the Union. We too eagerly await its first trial demonstration, and are busily sharpening our picket sticks in anticipation.

Some people, seeing so much sound and fury go for nought, are inclined to think that it is all really vanity and a striving after wind. But we do not believe that for even a moment ...

Going to the dogs

To the Editor:

In response to Bill Sundstrom's editorial in Monday's Collegian entitled "Stamp Out Pets", I would like to offer some information. Working dogs which are not kept solely for their own pleasure include sheepdogs, police and military dogs, draft and sled dogs, guard dogs, personal protection dogs, hunting dogs, guide dogs for the blind, and dogs trained to help handicapped people such as autistic children. I presume Bill is not in favor of eliminating these animals because they fall into the category of work animals.

However, even dogs and cats kept primarily for their own pleasure have a purpose not always obvious. "Lonely elderly people" are not the only people who have a hard time finding friends in our society. I agree that human companionship is wonderful and fulfilling, but our society often divides people and inhibits freedom of friendship. You cannot call the multitude of pet owners an "unbalanced lot" without considering the forces of society which create the need for pets. Dogs and cats fulfill a real need, the need to be needed, and so act as buffers for society by providing a harmless outlet for these emotions.

Bill's attitudes are revealing, referring to "dumb animals" as "disgusting". He has such a superiority complex that he has forgotten or denied the fact that humans, although possessed of vast intelligence, are also animals by biological nature, and have only very recently moved away from the fields and forests teeming with wildlife into cities full of alienated and often hostile people. The bringing of pets and plants into these homes reaffirms man's connection with all other living things.

It is easy to look at the food consumed by pets and rationalize that it could be put to a "better cause". But would it? If Americans stopped eating meat we could also feed the rest of the world, but would we? My dog is a living piece of artwork to me — he is truly beauty in animation. Should we also give up our paintings and sculptures, and our music, for these are also sources of pleasure that cost money that could be used to help the "world's starving masses"? I don't think so.

I agree that many pet owners are very negligent and irresponsible in their ownership of pets. This is a real problem, but the solution is not the banning of all pets. Rather, we must concentrate on educating pet owners toward responsible pet ownership, toward controlling pet reproduction, toward cleaning up after their pets, toward fundamental obedience training for all dogs. This is essential as our society becomes more and more congested. I believe it can be done.

Nonotuck Working Dog Club has been formed for the advancement of working, useful dogs.

To all irate pets
and pet owners:

I extend my sincere apologies for my attempted use of humor in Monday's column. Obviously satire has no place on the pages of the Collegian.

I would agree that the human animal is by far the filthiest and least "humane's of creatures. However, I was merely writing about one of the many people-created problems in this world — namely, pets. Perhaps some of my observations were just a little too accurate to be funny? At any rate, I pity those who take everything they read in this paper seriously. They must really flip out on April Fools' Day.

Incident with the police

To the Editor:

Between the hours of 1:00 and 1:30 a.m. on October 16, nine students were returning from a dorm dinner, which had been held in the Campus Center. We had just arrived at one of the members of our party's car which was parked in the Campus Center garage. The driver was planning on taking one half and then returning for the other half. As the first half got into the car, a bottle of ginger ale, that had been placed on the trunk, fell to the ground and smashed. One of us proceeded to sweep the glass into a corner. At this point, there were 3 of us in the car, 4 in front ot it, and 2 behind it [the car was parked with its front end against the wall].

All of a sudden a cruiser, UM-2, pulled up behind the car and the driver, Sgt. Richard Grader, asked the two standing behind the car, "What's the problem?" One of them replied "What?"; because to us, there seemed to be no problem.

Sgt. Grader said something over the radio. He then got out of the cruiser and said, "Look, I asked you twice. What is the problem?" One of the two proceeded to explain to the officer about the bottle breaking and about our group deciding to split up. At this point, two officers on foot [Mark Fifled and Neil Lunney] and another cruiser [UM-1 arrived. The driver of UM-2 then asked the same two if they were students. They replied yes. He then asked if they had ID's. One of the two said he didn't. Which he didn't. The officer then said, "Do you have a driver's license or any kind of ID?" One of them gave the officer his ID and the second replied that he did not have his and stated his name and ID number. The officer then asked a third time if he had indentification. The student slapped his back pockets and said "I don't even have my wallet."

A third cruiser [UM-3] then arrived. The officers conferred and returned the ID back to its owner. Sgt. Grader then pointed to the student who didn't have an ID and said "Take him." They cuffed him and put him in the backseat of UM-1.

During this affair, the driver of our car had given his license and registration to Sgt. Grader. The driver then asked why the student had been taken away. Sgt. Grader replied, "Protective Custody. He's drunk, it's for his own good." He then told the driver to leave. One of the officers on foot, Mark Fifled, then came over and told the driver not to leave because he would be arrested for drunken driving. The driver assured him that he wasn't drunk. Another officer, Richard Huntoon, said to the driver, "I'm trying to do you a favor so just get out of here." The students present told the driver of our car not to leave for we felt that the officers seemed intent on arresting him for drunken driving. The officer in charge, Sgt. Grader, then told UM-1 to take the handcuffed student away. As the cruiser passed by us, one of our party kicked his leg in disgust towards the general direction on the cruiser. He did not make contact with the car. The nine members of our group can and will attest to this fact. The cruiser [UM-1], now about twenty [20] feet away, screeched to a stop, and both officers jumped out and ran to where we were standing. The passenger officer, Richard Huntoon, then approached one of us [the student that was behind the car, when the first cruiser arrived and began questioning].

Officer Huntoon said to him, "What did you say?" He then replied to the officer, "I didn't say anything." [He hadn't].

When we looked away from this exchange, we saw that the student who had kicked up his foot was now also handcuffed.

At this point, one of the officers in UM-3, Al Humphries, came toward our group, displaying his set of handcuffs and remarked, "All right, which one of you wants to be the next volunteer?" We ignored this statement and returned to the car. They then brought the second cuffed student to UM-3, and placed him inside. Officer Fifled then said to the driver of UM-3, "Book him for kicking the cruiser."

After we heard this exchange, one of our group said, "Wait, I heard that." They replied, "You heard what?" Again, the same person said, "I heard you say to book him for something he didn't do." Where one of the officers replied, "You didn't hear anything." [We later found out that this charge was not placed against him].

We again were told that if we didn't leave immediately, we all would be taken in. The officers then returned to their cars and left. Also, the officers on foot proceeded to the exit. We waited until the cruisers had gone, and then we did the same.

Two things in conclusion:

1] As the first student was being taken away in UM-1, he asked the officers, "What is the matter? Have you got something against us? Officer Huntoon then turned to the driver and said, "Stop and let me get in the back seat. I'll teach him a lesson."

2] Later that night, five of us went to the station to inquire about our friends. We were greeted at the desk by an officer who acted as though no incident had occurred. [Only later to find out that it was the brother of Sgt. Grader]. This is how our conversation went:

"Hello, we would like to ask you a few questions."

"You can ask, but I don't have to answer them."

"It's about two people that were put into Protective Custody tonight."

"There were nine people placed into Protective Custody tonight."

"Why were they placed into Protective Custody?"

"Because they were drunk."

"How do you justify if they are drunk?"

"I don't know, I wasn't there."

"All right then. How does any officer in general distinguish if somebody is drunk? What is the criteria used?

The officer then walked away and returned a few minutes later. We again asked the question.

"How does an officer establish that somebody is drunk?"

"I don't know, I wasn't there."

"Were they given a sobriety test?"

"They are not entitled to it."

"Oh! You mean it is a gift. I thought it was a right."

"They were taken in because they were drunk and one of them kicked a cruiser."

"You mean he is alleged to have kicked the cruiser."

"ALLEGED! Don't give me that shit alleged. Two officers saw him."

At this point Officer Fifled arrived and we asked if we could speak to him. Officer Grader said that he was busy. We said that we would wait until he had time. We were ignored, so we asked, "Would you please relate to the officer that we would like to speak to him."

"I think he heard you."

The officer refused to acknowledge our presence. He avoided looking in our direction. When he was done he left, looking the other way so as not to see us. We waited for a short while and then we left.

Our purpose in writing this letter is not necessarily vindictive, nor are we trying to imply that this is a common occurrence. What we are, however, trying to show is that this did indeed take place and that perhaps other students can relate similar experiences to it.

Travels with Mr. Goober

I am often regaled by those in my immense readership (six fortunate souls at last count) for not writing columns about local incidents or institutions. Well Virginia there is beneath this cosmopolitan pen a writer who is willing to put aside his national and international gripes for a week and turn to the local front, in particular this area's bastion of feminine liberation and growth — Smith College.

I travelled thither last week for the purpose of better understanding our five-college neighbor. I went to marvel at her intellectual currents, to fully appreciate her social awareness, to discover what it was that drove her distinguished student body to the seeming reclusiveness of an all-women's school.

Where were my questions to be answered, my Smithian knowledge increased? Where else I decided but at a Smith mixer. Herewith is an account of what transpired at my first (and last) Smith mixer.

"Oh Sophie dear, how are you?"

"Bored, dreadfully and terifically bored, Angie."

"There, there, have another Manhattan. I've just met a super guy. You must meet him. He's from Amherst."

"What's his name?"

"Harold Goober! He's such a hunk! Mr. Goober, Mr. Goober! Would you come over here? Mr. Goober I'd like you to meet Sophie."

"Hello, how are you?"

"Bored, dreadfully so. Angie tells me you go to Amherst."

"Well no I don't go there, I'm from there. Actually I go to the University of Massachusetts."

"Oh. Oh. Oh, I see. Well, we can see your library on a clear day."

"Excuse us for a minute would you Mr. Goober? I've made a terrible mistake Sophie. I'm dreadfully sorry. It was quite a shock to me too. It's such an unhealthy situation at that university."

"It's not like here where we have an ideal environment for self-growth through the interaction of ideas and feelings among mature and liberated women who aren't in constant and soul-destroying competition for men."

"Well said Sophie. Oh but would you look at the way Margaret's carrying on with that young gnasher in the corner."

"What an ingratiating bitch!"

"Oh I know, spreads like peanut butter!"

"Now now Angie, remember we're liberated. We musn't make remarks like that."

"I've never felt unliberated. Here comes Margaret. How are you Peg?"

"Bored Angie. God am I bored. How goes the relief fund?"

"It's marvy. We're making chocolate chip cookies and sending them to Australian orphans."

"It's so unselfish of you. I'm afraid I don't have your dedication. I had to break my two-day fast on the first day. Yesterday's lunch was just too good to pass up."

"Were you fasting for the Peruvian sheepherders again?"

"No you silly goose. I've switched continents. I was fasting for Turkish dustmen. It's marvelous to have a cause, isn't it?"

"Yes, and isn't it equally marvelous to go to such a progressive and liberated school where we can explore worthwhile and exciting relationships with women who have the same needs and goals as ourselves?"

"Oh it is, it is! Unencumbered by the petty jealousies and immature hostilities that a co-ed education fosters. Don't look now but look who Debbie is dancing with."

"I'll die. I swear I'll die! That's Mr. Monroe isn't it? Well there's her hustle for this evening."

"Listen I've got to be going. I must finish The Bell Jar before Tuesday noon. It's terribly camp but I'll force myself through it."

"Tah tah for now! Oh by the way, will you be at our house's mixer tomorrow night?"

"Are you kidding? I wouldn't miss it for the world."

Beating the Blue Wall blues

By PAUL J. WOLF

Out of all the people that patronize the Wall (Blue Wall) there is always that stubborn, belligerent motley crowd of ten to fifteen people who always seem to be the non-conformers. They don't realize that the Wall is a drinking establishment that must conform to certain laws. These people seem to think the floor hosts (bouncers) are there to give them a hard time. The truth is these people are there because it is their place of employment, their source of income. They are hired to do a job and they must do it properly or legal trouble may arise to the holder of the liquor license, which in this case is the Top Of the Campus. Inc.

Let's take a look at what average Harry has to go through when he decides he wants to go to the Wall. When he first arrives at the door he is greeted by a bouncer who asks him to show a T.O.C. sticker. This is because the license that the Wall has is a club license which means that only club members and their guests may be served.

A T.O.C. sticker serves as proof of age for the holder only, any guest will be asked for an I.D. with proof of age. This is when most of the patrons get upset, they feel that they have been insulted because they have been carded. This is done to avoid discrimination charges. For example, if there are ten people in line and the first person looks about twenty-five and he is not carded, the next person in line if carded will argue with the bouncer "why didn't you card him" referring to the first person for this reason is why the bouncers can make no exception to the I.D. rule. Please don't ask. These men are not doing it to be hard asses they are doing a job that they were hired to perform.

The next thing average Harry comes to, just inside the door there is another bouncer who is stamping the hands of people who enter to make things easier when they wish to re-enter. It saves you the trouble of digging into your wallet again to show your I.D. He is not doing it to mar or poison your body, he is making things easier for you.

Should average Robert attempt to enter via the re-admission door he will be asked to go outside the door and enter through the entrance door. This also is for a very good reason. If you will notice, that there are three foot barriers on the outside of the entrance door and on the inside of the re-entry door, these serve to keep the passage way narrow enough to allow only one person to fit by comfortably at the re-entry door and at the entrance door. With 500-1500 people constantly going in and out of one place there is almost always chaos. This makes it very difficult for the man at the re-admission door to do his job, which is making sure everyone entering has a re-admission stamp on their hand. Sometimes if enough people crowd around the re-entry door it is easy for someone to sneak in. This is the reason for the separate doors and barriers.

Going back to Harry, Harry is inside having a good time drinking, fraternizing, beating on the pinball machines, etc. and he decides it is time to leave or go to the mens room, as he heads out the door he is confronted by a bouncer and is asked to finish his drink here, leave it here, or throw it out, Harry replies, "but it's only coke" the fact is that it doesn't matter if it's water, if it's in a glass from the Wall or the Hatch it can't leave the premises. It's the law. Furthermore, no alcoholic beverages may be brought onto the premises, you will be asked to leave them outside.

On other occasions a person who wishes to be admitted to the Wall may be asked to wait outside in line at the door. This is because of fire regulations not because the bouncer doesn't like you, besides, the wait is usually only ten or fifteen minutes. Some helpful hints to make things easier and run more smoothly the next time you go to the Wall are: 1) Have proof of age with you 2) Be a guest of someone who has or have in your possession a valid T.O.C. sticker. 3) If you do not wish to have your hand stamped, then don't get pissed off at the bouncer when he asks for an I.D. when you re-enter. 4) Don't bring any alcoholic beverages with you. 5) Don't attempt to leave with ANY beverage. These few things will make everybody's night a much more pleasant one.

Labor movement still helps workers

To the Editor:

In response to Tyla Michelove's article entitled "Working People and Unions" I would like to point out a number of critical factors concerning the American labor movement that seem to have been overlooked. Although the labor movement has undergone significant changes since the days when Woody Guthrie and Pete Seeger first got their inspiration to write union songs, it remains the most progressive force in American society and still creates the inspiration for songs of social protest and union praise.

This is not to say, however, that the labor movement does not have its problems. It is plagued with many of the administrative problems that seem to haunt the maturity of all social movements and in many cases it has neglected its responsibilities to the mass of society, but for the most part it has acted to mobilize its resources to demand needed social reforms and has also maintained its primary responsibility of representing its membership in collective bargaining.

Black voters in this country recently proved their strength in the national election largely as a result of legislation that may be credited almost entirely to the lobbying efforts of the labor movement. It took the civil rights movement to illustrate the need of course, but it is doubtful that the Civil Rights Act of 1964 or the Voting Rights Act of 1965 would have had any substance at all were it not for the political action of the labor movement.

Although the wage achievements of the labor movement may be seen as rather dubious in many cases, the health and welfare benefits of all American workers have been achieved as a result of contract gains made by organized workers and these gains are soon to become more extensive once the lobbying efforts for national health care become manifest.

Beyond this, it has been the labor movement and its leadership that has maintained the loudest and most consistent voice of protest against the high rates of unemployment and poverty that this country experiences. When progressive social legislation is proposed, it is the labor movement that remains its most ardent and powerful supporter. Such power and activity should not be curbed as it would be under the controls suggested by Ms. Michelove.

A major problem that Ms. Michelove correctly points out is the failure of the labor movement to encourage new leadership. Although this is a valid criticism, it is incorrect to assume that the present leadership is unresponsive, unrepresentative or unconcerned with the needs of their membership.

The structure and legal framework of the labor movement still maintains a voice for the membership in determining union policy and leadership and although this structure may seem inadequate at times, it has not subverted the ultimate will of the workers represented.

Today's labor movement accepts its role as the representative and advocate of the American worker and although it could often perform this role better than it does, the principles that Tyla Michelove and Woody Guthrie gave so much for are still preserved in the American Labor Movement.

Poster ripping disgusting

To the Editor:

As students at UMass, we feel that we have the right to express our beliefs in a "fashionable" and "legal" manner. It is extremely unfortunate that people whose views do not coincide with our own find it necessary to destroy the "expression" of these beliefs.

For the next two weeks UMass will be holding its first fundraising and educational drive for Israel. For the past week our workers have been putting up posters around campus to advertise, and we are finding that these posters are being torn down faster than we can put them up.

It is a sad thing when UMass students cannot let other people freely express what they believe in and are working for. When a person doesn't agree with a movement, then he or she can challenge it. We are open to challenges, but only in a human manner. We consider the tearing down of our posters a violation of our freedom and a most disgusting action to take.

Nuke facing problems

BOSTON [UPI] — The Environmental Protection Agency revoked its preliminary approval of the cooling system for a proposed nuclear power plant in Seabrook, N.H., thus placing the entire $2 billion project in jeopardy.

EPA Regional Administrator John A.S. McGlennon said the cooling system for the 2,300-megawatt plant proposed by the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire would have to be changed before the EPA would allow the facility to begin operations.

A Public Service spokesman called the ruling "incredible." Gov. Meldrim Thomson's office said the company would go over McGlennon's head and appeal the decision to the EPA Washington office.

"Whether they have to stop construction will be determined by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission," McGlennon said, adding the NCR, which controls construction of the project, "is not bound to cut off the permit, but they can modify it."

"They're welcome to build the facility without meeting EPA guidelines but they won't be allowed to operate it. They can't operate it without a cooling system and there's no question in anyone's mind that the company needs a permit to operate", he said.

"I can sum it all up in one word - incredible," Public Service spokesman Frank Shants said.

Public Service's original cooling system called for funneling 1.2 billion gallons of water through the facility each day. Water would enter the system through intake ducts located in the Atlantic about 7,000 feet off the New Hampshire coast. The heated water would be discharged about 5,000 feet off the coast.

McGlennon's office last year approved a so-called once through cooling system. However, the company and groups opposed to the facility appealed the decision.

WASHINGTON: Old Smokey Bear, a 26-year-old black bear who became one of the nation's most famous animals as the symbol of fire prevention campaigns, died Monday in his sleep at the National Zoo. U.N. votes against S. Africa apartheid

UNITED NATIONS [UPI] — The U.N. General Assembly passed 10 resolutions against South Africa's apartheid policy of racial discrimination by landslide margins yesterday, including demands for arms, trade and sports bans against the white regime.

One of the strongest resolutions, adopted by a vote of 108-11 with 22 abstentions, proclaims "that the racist regime of South Africa is illegitimate and has no right to represent the people of South Africa."

The United States voted against five of the resolutions and abstained on three. The two others were passed by consensus without a vote.

South African did not participate in the debate on the resolutions and was not present during the voting.

Among the measures were resolutions calling for an arms, trade and sports embargo against the white minority regime, including a ban on further foreign investments in South Africa.

Another declared that the two liberation movements in South Africa "are the authentic representatives of the majority of the South African people, and that their struggle, by all possible means, is legitimate."

Before the vote, Israeli Ambassador Chaim Herzog strongly objected to one resolution singling out and condemning Israel as a special collaborator with South Africa.

Although receiving the smallest vote, the resolution still passed 91-20 with 28 abstentions.

The arms embargo resolution, passed 110-8 with 20 abstentions, asked the Security Council to make a new attempt to impose a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa. Britain, France and the United States killed such a proposal last month with a triple veto.

An appeal for a total economic embargo was approved 110-6 with 24 abstentions. It included a condemnation of countries and transnational corporations still trading with South Africa and a request to the International Monetary Fund to stop the extension of further credits to Pretoria.

News in Brief

Pep pills dangerous

WASHINGTON [AP] — Five physicians recommended yesterday that the government ban the use of amphetamines and similar drugs as weight-loss aids on grounds they are unsafe and ineffective.

Three of the five told a Senate panel that abuse of amphetamines — generally known as uppers or pep pills — is so widespread that the drug should be prohibited altogether, even though they are used to treat overactive children and narcolepsy.

The doctors cited research indicating amphetamines also may be responsible for birth defects.

Dr. James J. Nora, professor of pediatrics at the University of Colorado Medical Center. compared questions about amphetamines with those raised about birth control pills.

Troublemaking denied

NEW YORK [UPI] — The Rev. Clennon King, a black minister twice refused admission to the church where Jimmy Carter worships, said yesterday he is "simply trying to bring attention to the cleavages in the Christian Church."

King, in New York for a television appearance, said he sent a telegram to Carter in Georgia yesterday morning, in which he urged Carter to ignore Negro leaders he did not name who are calling King a troublemaker.

"What is happening right now is that this same bunch of black leaders here in America, because I have raised the question, I have brought attention to the issue, they are trying to push me to the side, they want me to shut up," King told a sometimes raucous news conference.

The Georgia ppstor said he had intended the news conference for local newspapers and wire services and not television because the show paying his expenses asked that he not go before television cameras before his appearance on it Wednesday morning.

But several TV stations sent crews and he continually refused to say why he chose the Sunday before elections to appear at the First Baptist Church of Plains, Ga., to attend services.

Hearst moves out

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — Patricia Hearst was spirited secretly yesterday from a campus-like federal prison near San Francisco to another prison 400 miles away in San Diego for "security" reasons.

The heiress' attorney, Albert Johnson, said the transfer was for "security" reasons but declined to comment further.

Warden William Garrison of the Federal Correctional Institution in Pleasanton, Calif., said the newspaper heiress, serving a seven-year term for bank robbery, was driven to San Diego by U.S. marshals.

"We don't expect her back," he said, adding that "the reason is the same reason for her transfer."

"It was at her request," Garrison said.

Woman almost priest

INDIANAPOLIS [UPI] — She calls herself "Jackie".

She's a high school dropout. She's married to an Indianapolis truck driver. And she was raised a Roman Catholic.

She's the Rev. Mrs. Jacqueline Means, and on Saturday, Jan. 1, she is expected to become the nation's first regularly ordained woman Episcopal priest.

In some respects, she finds it "pretty scary."

The Rev. Means, a deacon at All Saints Episcopal Church, will be ordained at 2:30 p.m. on New Year's Day in that church. She will celebrate her first Mass and give her first sermon the following day.

She is believed to be the first woman in the nation to benefit from a canon law change, effective Jan. 1, made by the church's recent convention in Minneapolis.

"As far as we know I'll be the first," said the Rev. Mrs. Means. "I don't know of any others scheduled that day."

Fighting in Beirut

BEIRUT [UPI] — New fighting exploded in Beirut yesterday with prospects for a major confrontation between advancing Arab League peace-keeping troops and Christian commanders who vowed to "open fire" on the peace force.

Rightist and leftist military communiques said fierce fighting and artillery duels erupted on all fronts in the capital last night, from the gutted port district in the north to the front-line suburbs south of the city.

Police force corrupt

BOSTON [UPI] — Police Commissioner Robert J. diGrazia said yesterday he has evidence to support a report alleging widespread police corruption in Boston.

DiGrazia also said he has accepted the "retirement" of a top department official, Deputy Supt. Joseph V. Saia, supervisor of police District 1, the section which was the focus of the corruption allegations. The retirement is effective June 30, 1977.

DiGirazia would not say whether Saia's planned retirement was connected with the release of the report.

District 1 includes the so-called "Combat Zone," a downtown area of strip joints and X-rated movie houses. It also includes the North End, Government Center, Beacon Hill, Chinatown, the waterfront and shopping and business districts.

DiGrazia, who leaves Boston next week to take a similar job in Montgomery County, Md., said the report was not intended to collect evidence for criminal indictment.

But he said there was enough evidence to support allegations police in the downtown area let gambling flourish, consorted with reputed organized crime figures, staged "spectacular" raids as coverups due to public pressure, had sex with prostitutes and ignored flagrant parking violations.

Beef truck stolen

BOSTON [AP] — A trailer loaded with an estimated $22,000 to $27,000 worth of beef was stolen in front of a meat packing company in South Boston last night while the driver was eating supper.

Cities seek favors

BOSTON [AP] — The nation's cities scratched President-elect Jimmy Carter's back with votes last week and are looking for something for their own itches, Boston Mayor Kevin H. White says.

"The cities delivered for Carter and are looking for something back — morally, financially and politically," White said Monday after returning from a conference of mayors in Chicago.

"If Carter doesn't respond to Boston, all of New England could ultimately find itself in economic trouble," he said.

Blue laws blues

SPRINGFIELD [AP] — Mayor William C. Sullivan urged a state advisory committee yesterday to prompt fast action on repeal of the controversial Sunday blue laws.

Sunday store openings in Connecticut and passage in Massachusetts of a referendum question calling for an end to the Bay State's blue laws spurred Sullivan's action.

"Many of us would like to see the stores closed on Sunday, but we don't have that choice any more,"

Several mayors and other local government officials in western Massachusetts have asked for a special session of the legislature to consider repeal of Sunday closing statutes.

HOUSTON: Houston Police use force to remove Iranian students from a downtown street yesterday. The students, about 150 of them, were protesting the arrest of Iranian students in Paris, France. The students were demonstrating outside the building which houses the French Consulate. Most of the students are being charged with disorderly conduct. (UPI)

Carter's speech may 'accent' his politics

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Linguists say Jimmy Carter would be making a big mistake to try to mute his Southern accent when he becomes president of all the people.

In telephone interviews, four experts on language said they were excited over the prospect of a president whose speech pattern is dramatically different. But they disagreed over whether Carter is bound to lose some of his accent, even involuntarily.

"By not trying to talk Walter Cronkite speech, he's evidencing the legitimacy of the varieties of English," said Roger Shuy of Washington's Center for Applied Linguistics at Georgetown University.

"He's showing that America is not made up of just one way of talking any more than of just one way of thinking."

At the University of South Carolina, visiting professor Raven McDavid, whom Shuy calls "the grand old man of southern accents" said "Carter probably can't change, and he shouldn't even if he could."

McDavid, a native of Greenville, S.C. and editor of a linguistic atlas of southern speech, quotes a colleague, "When a man tries to adjust a form of speech so that you can't identify his background, you wonder what else he is trying to hide."

McDavid said Carter "took an awful chance with his low-key, undramatic approach."

Women lag in elections

WASHINGTON [UPI] — With ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment at stake, the proportion of women in state legislatures increased only one per cent during the 1976 election, according to figures announced yesterday.

ERA was a central issue in many state legislative races. The overall outcome was claimed as a victory of both opponents and supporters of the proposed 27th amendment to the Constitution.

The National Women's Education Fund, which compiled the outcome of all elections involving women, reported that 685 women will be serving in state legislatures next year, or 9.1 per cent of the total membership. This represented an increase from 615, or 8.1 per cent.

The number of women increased from 91 to 102 in the state senates and from 523 to 583 in the house of representatives. Forty-three states elected legislators last week

Ford makes social call to Nixon

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. [UPI] — President Ford yesterday brushed off a question about his post-election phone call to Richard Nixon, then turned, shrugged and said, "I called him and said hello to him."

With that, he drove in a golf cart down the first fairway of his vacation country club course, leaving reporters to demand more details from White House press aides.

Spokesmen disclosed Monday night the President phoned Nixon from Washington Thursday after his election defeat. They said they did not know what was discussed in the three to five-minute call.

Reporters asked Ford about it yesterday when they were allowed inside the Thunderbird Country Club compound where he is staying. He exchanged only a few pleasantries and the question seemed to annoy him. "We are not going to have any press conferences today," Ford said.

He started to walk toward his golf cart, then paused, turned around with his hands spread, the palms up in a so-what gesture, "I called him and said hello to him."

Radcliff houses materials about women's history

BOSTON [UPI] — At Radcliffe College's Schlesinger Library they are trying to preserve the history and contributions of American women.

According to library director Dr. Patricia Miller King, women's history is just beginning to arouse the curiosity of Americans.

The Schlesigner collection, considered the most extensive library devoted exclusively to women's history, began with a donation by Maud Wood Park, Radcliffe Class of 1898.

With a recent $133,784 grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities, the library is in the process of starting 24 new collections and adding material to eight established ones. They will be organized under the title Career and Family Patterns of American Women: An Archival Development Project.

"The library is made up of books, periodics, manuscripts — mostly unpublished papers of individual women and family papers," Dr. King said.

She said family papers include letters between mothers and their children, between women and men and between women and other women — "just papers which record where women have been and where they're headed."

The library's collection will include such contributions to American history as Jeannette Rankin and Freda Kirchwey.

In 1917, Mrs. Rankin, a Republican from Montana, was the first woman ever elected to Congress — three years before women won the right to vote. She gained notoriety as the only U.S. Representative to vote against entering both world wars.

Miss Kirchwey, who died earlier this year, was editor and publisher of The Nation for many years.

Their letters, diaries and lists of accomplishments will join 300,000 major manuscripts at the Schlesinger Library, Dr. King said.

SORRY YOU'RE FEELING BEASLY

WASHINGTON: Sen Hubert H. Humphrey returned to his office in the Senate Office Building yesterday for the first time since the removal of a cancerous bladder last month. His office said he received over 40,000 cards and telegrams. The Minnesota Democrat regained his Senate seat in the last election, defeating Gerald W. Brekke and four other challengers. (UPI)

'Horsing around' prompts suit

WALLED LAKE, Mich. [UPI] — Martha Carleton has filed a $2,500 "paternity" suit against the riding stables where her horse was rendered in a family way by a stallion.

The suit, filed in Walled Lake District Court, cites an 1867 law that holds stable owners responsible for such unplanned romantic interludes.

Miss Carleton, 18, a preveterinary student at Michigan State University, alleges that a registered quarter horse, Rocket Tag, got out of its stall at the Colonial Acres Hunt Club in South Lyon and impregnated her horse, Pegasus.

Pegasus, named for a mythical Greek horse with impressive jumping abilities, gave birth four months ago to a palamino colt christened Independent Spirit.

In her suit, Miss Carleton, a resident of Southfield, is seeking to recover the fee paid the veterinarian who delivered the colt and punitive damages for the four months she was unable to ride her pet.

"I used to pay $55 a month to keep Pegasus, but now I'm paying $75 a month for the bigger stall to keep them together," Miss Carleton said. "And starting next month, the colt gets its own stall and the cost for both goes to $130 a month."

But despite the increased expense, Miss Carleton intends to keep Independent Spirit.

"I don't want to get rid of the colt," she said. "I've grown attached to him and he's really friendly around people."

James Pelky, owner of Colonial Acres, said he plans to file a counter suit in the case.

taught by instructors who have all scored in the top percentile in their subject's board test — some in several categories."

Prep offers anywhere from 4 to 24 hours of instruction in a wide range of tests. In addition, a free introductory class is offered (in Amherst, on Tuesday evenings), which begins with a sample test of a dozen disagreeable word problems.

"We give people standard types of questions," Jefferson explained, "They usually get 25 per cent right. Then, we go over each problem and not only show them how to do it right, but how to do it faster. At the end of the session a similar test is handed out, and they usually get 80 per cent right in around half their former time.

to weaken the individual involved," said Jon Cogswell, a Room-To-Move counselor.

When the counselors speak of "mystification," they are referring to the frequently held belief that counselors have some secret formula with which all problems are solved — the person seeking help is manipulated into being "cured".

Room-To-Move wants people to realize that counseling training does not provide all the answers, but rather helps the individual help themselves.

Counseling is not a mechanical, structured process, but a growing experience, states Room-To-Move philosophy.

A large part of counseling is just being able to talk to someone who is there to listen, and learning how to work out ones feelings in an open and comfortable atmosphere.

People who drop in on Room-To-Move are not diagnosed or categorized. They work out problems with the aid and support of a trained peer.

Room-To-Move provides general counselors as well as some who specialized in specific problems.

Through the counseling process one is helped to develop survival mechanisms and gain information about oneself and the society one lives in.

The counseling relationship strives to help people work out their fears and frustrations by sharing another person's perspective and orientation.

The center hopes that after counseling a person will be more aware of his or her own needs, can develop self-esteem, regain independence, and be back on the road to self-development.

The Room-To-Move drop-in center is located in the Student Union Building, close to the Hatch.

St. Johns suspends ROTC members

By RICHARD GOLDSTEIN

NEW YORK [UPI] — St. John's University yesterday suspended activities of the ROTC fraternal organization whose members were involved in an unauthorized war game in which a student cadet was stabbed to death.

James Savino, 21, a lieutenant in the St. John's ROTC program although a student at Stevens Institute of Technology in Hoboken, N.J., has been charged by police with second degree murder in the death of 19-year-old Thomas Fitzgerald.

misguided. He claims the cost figures now reported by landlords are inflated, and as a result the landlords are not paying the taxes they should. He said the cost factors in Amherst are "out of line."

Scheurer said the town stands to gain more revenue by instituting the rent control board, which could investigate the actual cost factors.

He said the town Finance Committee's prediction that rent control would adversely affect the town's tax structure is founded on an incorrect formula. According to Scheurer, the committee used a distorted equation to figure out the change in the tax bill if rent control is implemented. The committee, Scheurer said, failed to include the capitalization rate in its formula, a denominator required to calculate the tax bill.

GHOSTS of Collegians past

This Collegian Retrospect Issue is dedicated to the thousands of UMass students who have contributed during the paper's 106 year history.

To those staffers who worked so diligently on Aggie Life from 1870 to 1901, on College Signal from 1901 to 1909, on the weekly Collegian from 1914 to 1951, on the semi-weekly Collegian from 1951 to 1956, on the three times weekly Collegian from 1956 to 1956 and on the Daily Collegian from 1967 to present, a sincere thank you is extended.

It is indeed a great pleasure to be a part of a great tradition in producing what has become New England's largest college daily, and which has been honored with countless awards.

This edition is a tribute to these students and, we hope UMass students, administrators, and staff people today recognize the accomplishments and dedication of Collegian staffers who serve 20,000 students daily — a service unsurpassed by any other student group on our campus.

The 40's — Campus was quiet...

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

"The campus," said Edward Treshinsky, "was quiet, you'd visit the Botannical gardens or go to Grandy's for a beer." It was a time when cutting two classes meant expulsion; and smoking, drinking or entertaining members of the opposite sex in the dormitories were grounds for dismissal. Mr. Treshinsky attended school in Amherst in the early forties at the onset of America's involvement in World War Two.

"College life was more restrictive then, there was a definite "lights-outs time", and you had to obtain special permission to leave your room light on to study after a certain hour." Once a week all undergraduates, with the exception of seniors were required to attend convocation. Attendance would be taken at these assemblies where music directors would lead students in song, or speakers such as the great Jim Thorpe would give a short speech. Occasionally all the football players would be introduced and a rally would be underway, but every week without fail another ceremony would occur. The Collegian would be distributed to the students.

Thirty odd years ago an undergraduate was required to take two years of ROTC, there was even a "horse cavalry with real horses." Mr. Treshinsky added that the Collegian was smaller than it is today corresponding with the student population. At Massachusetts State College, as UMass was known then, entertaining news included the yearly 'tug of war' between sophomore and freshman across the campus pond. News was any competition on any level involving 'State' and Amherst. "There was always a great rivalry between the two schools," Treshinsky said. "All freshmen were subjected to hazing, I remember how you had to wear 'beanies' and carry a paddle," he added, "if an upper class man found you, he could demand you assume any desired position and wack the living daylights out of you." The Collegian has many photos and stories depicting the various antics freshmen were made to go through. "They would make you go to the women's dorms and carol," Mr. Treshinsky said. Not all freshmen endured such submissive behavior. "You would maybe put up with it for two or three days then that'd be the end of it." There are several accounts of how freshmen freed themselves from upperclass oppression. A good right hook, an imposed embarrassing situation for a senior on a date, the ransacking of a junior's room are recorded within the Collegian pages. Mr. Treshinsky declined to detail his own liberating campaign.

The Collegian reported the adventures and exploits of the enrolled 1200 member student body. There were no specific jobs with lavish titles such as Women's Coordinator, or Black Affairs Editor. As Treshinsky remembers, "No one had any rights." The early forties will be forever remembered by men and women who lived through those tumultuous years, and preserved forever on the pages of the Massachusetts Collegian.

Women 'take over'...

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

Ed Treshinsky left in the early forties when the war broke out. After the war 12 million men came back to the US and threatened to sink the job market by sheer weight of statistical numbers. The GI Bill was enacted to encourage men to return to college.

In the interim, women emerged as the governing force of the home guard. In aircraft factories, at home maintaining property, and in the office of the Massachusetts Collegian women took over positions of authority.

"War was great for women," said Dario Politella, Professor of journalistic studies here. "When the men came back there was no jobs, but how the women loved us," he said.

Dario Politella was one of those GIs that came back to finish their academic career at Massachusetts State College. In spring of '46 Politella came to the Collegian as a reporter, under Rosemary Speer, the editor in chief. "Not just anyone could get on the Collegian staff" he reminisced, "First you had to be chosen to be a reporter, then you had to undergo a six week course.

"Those who survived the training were given a beat or some specific topic on which to write." When the successor to Ms. Speer left school due to a physical disability, Politella rose from reporter to editor in chief in the fall of '47.

Nineteen years ago the Massachusetts Collegian was a weekly newspaper that was still being distributed at convocations. "You can see how exciting it was on campus when the biggest thing to do was wait for the Collegian to come out on Friday," Politella said yesterday. The student population was still around 1200 and the Collegian boasted of more than 15 editors and reporters.

The college existed on two campuses, Amherst and Ft. Devens. Returning Gi's had to spend one year at the makeshift classrooms before coming to this campus due to lack of dormitory facilities. Politella remembers delivering copies of the Collegian to Maternity Row. This colorful Epithet was the name for the surplus army tents set up where the Whitmore parking lot is now for GIs, their wives, and their young families.

In June of '47 came the big story for the College as well as the Collegian itself. Avrum Rumm, who was to succeed Politella in his editorial position the following year, hitchhiked to Boston to cover the expected passing of the bill that would change Massachusetts State College to the University of Massachusetts.

Page one was readied to proclaim the bill's enaction. With Rumm's phone call from Boston to the Collegian office Politella was to give the signal to ring the chapel bells and spread the word. After a congressional delay, the phone call was made, and the picture of that nickel phone call hangs in the Collegian office.

Politella feels reporting in those days was a more disciplined kind of activity." The editors were serious and reliable. There were no specific divisions other than issue, news and sports editors. As far as minority coverage went, the only minority," claimed Politella, "was the Aggies from Stockbridge. You could always tell them, they always wore blue jeans."

The Collegian April fool

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

Dario Politella, former Collegian editor was awarded a New York state publishers fellowship to the Syracuse University Journalism School. Avrum Rumm, Editor in 1947, received his MA in government at Columbia University, and went on to join the Springfield Union. And Rosemary Speer had worked her way from various newspapers to an editorial position at a New York based magazine by the time Robie Maynard succeeded Paul Terry as Collegian editor-in-chief in January of '49.

The Collegian was first located on the first floor of Memorial Hall. Until 1967, the Collegian remained a weekly. Under Maynard's direction the 5,000 count student body received an eight to 10 page Collegian each Wednesday.

"We had a campus advisor who we didn't listen to," said Maynard, "and most of the staff were GI's. We were older and for many years we were the journalistic law," he said.

Arthur Musgrave was a 'one man journalistic show,' advising the newspaper, teaching journalism courses and advising those interested in writing professions. Though appointed censor of a veteran-run paper, Musgrave let the April Fool's issue of '49 slip past him. Photographer Bill Tague, now public relations director at Williams College, was responsible for superimposing the head of Helen Curtis, Dean of Women, onto a bikini-clad body. "It was a fun thing to do," laughed Maynard. "We had no particular axe to grind then, and it was fairly avant-garde at that time." The result of the escapade brought future journalistic screening from Musgrave. No copy of the photograph showing Ms. Curtis in such casual dress is available at the Collegian office today.

During Maynard's senior year, "better than 50 per cent of the campus were GI's; Ft. Devens had come to Amherst," he said.

Last week Editor-in-chief William A. Mills, and 7 staff members, attended a journalism convention in Chicago, Illinois. Seventeen years ago, conventions were held at BU and Mt. Holyoke. Maynard remembers his Mt. Holyoke convention and all the changes for editors since. "Back then we had to play the role of issue editors, do lay out and technical advising." Sports did their own pages, and he added, "we used a flat bed press and had to do our own proofreading at the letter press office."

Long hours spent at the Collegian were juggled with studies. It was generally agreed that, "reporting and editing cut into studying and happy hour time," Maynard said. "We were campus oriented, having no wire services or syndicated news. Advertising was not as advanced as it is now in relation to the college newspaper. Occasionally, we got national advertisements for cigarettes." The technology of the Massachusetts Collegian has progressed with the times. Robie Maynard, now editor-in-chief of the Ware River News, remembers in 1949, "We were a dedicated bunch of people, and working on the Massachusetts Collegian was a labor of love." Some things haven't changed.

Ambiance 'not same' says former editor

By DEBORAH EDWARDS
Collegian Staff

One of the earliest Collegian Editor-in-Chiefs was Edgar M. Brown, 87, of Simsbury, Connecticut. Brown graduated in 1911 from the Massachusetts Agricultural College, (now UMass) and was Editor-in-Chief for The College Signal in 1910, (now the Massachusetts Daily Collegian).

At that time, the paper was an eight page weekly that carried such breaking news stories as the content of professors' classes. Frequently, the front page carried sports events.

There was no national news in these early issues, and the paper mainly served as a bulletin for dances and events of interest to the college community.

Brown said recently he rarely returns to the University. He operates a plant in Simsbury. "It's just not the same anymore," said Brown. "None of the places that I knew and loved are on the campus anymore. It's grown into a regular city."

The Collegian today does not resemble The College Signal as it was. One of the few things the two papers have in common is display advertising with Bolles Shoes in Amherst.

There were no photographs in these early editions, and very few graphics. The columns were side by side in four rows, with four stories, one to a column. There was a heavy emphasis on alumni events, fraternity, and social activities.

One calls it love...

EDITOR'S NOTE: The author, who has served the Collegian as advisor most of the years since 1964, wrote this at the request of the editors.

By ALVIN F. OICKLE

It's pretty dumb, I guess, but I love the Collegian.

I didn't always love the newspaper, of course. There was a time in 1964 when Prof. Arthur B. Musgrave suggested I wonder over to the office and introduce myself. Coming from a professional newspaper, I figured the young people were pretty much like kids playing a game. But I soon learned that these guys play like the football team — for keeps.

My love affair has continued on and off since. The occasional disillusionments are always offset — sometimes in minutes — by the soaring spirit of students bent on achievement.

And I guess the most important single point I have learned in a dozen years is that the students who come to work on the Collegian stay to learn not so much about journalism as about life. And, best of all, they learn about themselves.

Collegian staffers are almost impossible to put down. They have an elasticity, at least the whole bloody lot of them does as seen through the blur of hundreds of students over two dozen semesters. Some remain in memory for lessons they have taught me:

—Doug Packer, a student I never met, who in 1971 started a signed editorial with the stirring observation: "The President of the United States is an asshole." State politicians, Republicans in Amherst, parents who read Associated Press dispatches and on-campus conservatives had a fit. Doug was to write a second and final signed editorial in his brief career a month later. In it he pointed out he had learned not to use language that distracts the reader from the message. After all, he said, the point of the editorial was not to launch a crisis in profanity but to question the United States President's invasion of a foreign land.

—Lois Cohen, who founded a magazine called Au Present, but whose fame lives on in memory because she kept it going, issue after flashy, slick issue. Students, I was to learn, are great at starting projects, and supurb at finishing them off. Most are pretty lousy at keeping such efforts alive.

—Viola Osgood, who taught me that most whites don't understand most blacks. I was tutoring with Viola the night Martin Luther King Jr. was shot. The wire editor stuck his head in the room and screamed the news. "Good," Viola said in her deep voice. Dr. King was to die and to be enshrined throughout America. But Viola was not to take back (at least while on this campus) her words: "He was an Uncle Tom."

—Rich Hanson, who proved that a Collegian staffer can be a scholar. He was an early BDIC student who somehow managed to make sense out of journalism, Asian studies and the Japanese language as a form-fit major. And he founded a weekly magazine called Poor Richard's which, a couple years later, had its name changed to Below the Salt.

—Mark Silverman and Peter Pascarelli, who were outraged at an editorial they thought lacked the moral sturdiness the Collegian should display... Karen Lynch and

What makes the Collegian tick

By CHAS O'CONNOR
Collegian Staff

Preparing the Daily Collegian for press is a process that starts in places as far away as Manila or Tokyo and ends in Ware, Massachusetts.

A few thousand persons are responsible for the steps in-between.

The Collegian is a member of the Associated Press and subscribes United Press International teletype news service, which together employ about two thousand full-time reporters and countless stringers around the globe. These news services serve to supplement the work done by more than 250 Collegian staffers in preparing the Collegian for 9 a.m. campus delivery.

Compugraphic phototypesetter used by Ware River News to set Collegian copy. (Staff photo by Stuart Eyman)

The essence of the Collegian is the news printed in it. About 100 volunteer news staff reporters, therefore, are the essence of the Collegian.

Ironically, though, there would be no news in the Collegian without the advertising in it, because without the advertising there would be no Collegian.

And that's where this tale of the present-day Collegian will begin.

The Collegian employs 15 commissioned student advertising sales representatives who travel the area selling ads to local merchants. Other ads are taken through the mail and over the Collegian counter in hopes of realizing an advertising budget for the '76-'77 fiscal year of about $215,000.

The total Collegian budget, including Student Senate and Graduate Student Senate appropriations, subscriptions and monies from other sources is about $300,000.

The ads sold are logged on a tally sheet which the ad layout staff uses to design "dummies" of what the Collegian will look like without news copy.

These full-sized "dummies" are prepared two nights before the date of issue. About 3:30 p.m. the day before issue, the second half of the process begins.

The managing editor portions the pages of the Collegian among the various departments. Each department is responsible for its own page makeup and headline writing, with deadlines ranging from 3 p.m. to midnight.

Deadlines can be flexible, and at the Collegian, flexibility is a way of life. For example, the Collegian's deadline election night last week was 3:30 a.m. This allowed the Collegian to have later returns than any other morning newspaper in Massachusetts.

The deadline for most Collegian stories is 7 p.m., excluding meeting reports and late-breaking stories. The press release deadline is 3 p.m.

During the course of the evening, the flurry of the Collegian office is matched by the flurry of the employes of Ware River News (WRN). WRN is contracted to typeset copy and print 20,000 Collegians every academic day of the school year.

Typists at WRN work from 6 p.m until anywhere from 2 to 4 a.m. (as was the case on election night) using computer keyboards to set copy.

The keyboards punch holes into paper tape which are fed through phototypesetters which "read" the tapes and produce full-size "gallies" or "proofs". The "proofs" are waxed and pasted onto a piece of paper the size of the Collegian page with the ads, headlines, screened (by dots) photos or illustrations.

This exact duplicate of the page is photographed and a negative is made. The negative is used to make

Keeping pace difficult for Collegian news staff

By TERESA M. HANAFIN
Collegian Staff

Running the news department of New England's largest college daily is like being an umpire in a football game — you have to make sure the participants are doing things right while trying to please your audience. But, it's inevitable. You simply can't please all the people all the time.

Yet the Collegian tries. In the years since 1968, UMass has grown enormously, enrolling thousands more students, adding new departments, more professors and staff, building new buildings — and the only daily newspaper on campus has to keep pace.

Actually, keeping up with the University is an impossible task for a student publication. There are simply too many things which go on here which we either don't know about or can't get anyone to cover because they are busy studying for an exam, etc. But our continuing efforts to do so is almost a 24-hour job.

The news department of the Collegian is responsible for reporting meeting and speech times or other events under the "What's Happening" and "Local Color" sections on the middle pages of the paper every day. The material for these sections are obtained through press releases which are either carried by hand to the office or mailed, c-o the news editor.

Not only do these press releases provide material for these special sections of the paper, but they also provide the news department with story ideas. Very often, speeches, meetings and other such events are received by the news department and it is decided to cover the event as a newsworthy story or a feature. We very often would never have known about such an event if we hadn't received a press release about it.

This brings us to the most important job of the news department — to provide campus news on the first three pages of the Collegian, and to provide students who are willing to learn how to write that opportunity.

The story ideas we receive come not just from press releases, however. They also are provided by phone calls or visits from various departments and groups and students. It is much easier to send in story ideas by mail, to be assured of them reaching the news editor, who is responsible for them. There are, of course, certain groups which hold meetings certain nights which we cover regularly — the Undergraduate, Graduate, Stockbridge and Faculty Senates, for example. And there are the five area governments — Orchard Hill, Sylvan, Southwest, Central and Northeast. These, as well as other groups, have "beat" reporters assigned to cover them every week.

Beat reporters are reporters who cover a certain area of the University — whether it be a governmental body or a specific issue. They get acquainted with that area and develop expertise on the subject, therefore making it easier to cover and report accurately. General assignment reporters, on the other hand, pick up general assignments for things which are not covered by a beat reporter.

So story ideas received by the department are channeled either to a beat reporter or a general assignment reporter and developed into a story for the first three pages of the paper. Stories which have a more national or international impact are provided by our wire services and appear on our wire pages.

But campus news is the main thrust of the first three pages. If something big happens on the national and-or international scene, then it is placed on the front page or page two or three. This judgement is made by more than just the news editor — it is usually in consultation with the managing editor and the editor-in-chief.

The students who write the stories are not only volunteers, but

Next U.S. President will be dark horse

By BILL PARENT

History makes men and history repeats itself.

As 1976 draws near and many changes occur on the political front, I believe that history will repeat itself once again and a hero will rise out of obscurity to save us all from the shame of the present administration, just as in 1932 when a partially crippled, assistant Secretary of the Navy, Franklin Roosevelt came forward to inherit the Presidency during a time of severe depression on false programs and promises of prosperity. Luckily for Roosevelt, Adolf Hitler invaded Poland and suddenly there were thousands of jobs and plenty of patriotism. The times made Roosevelt a reat leader, and, as economists predict better days coming toward the end of this decade, and the international relations show signs of improvement, the late seventies will probably produce a popular leader also. But the next President is probably not one of the so called "front-runners" in the papers today, the voting public is now distrustful and cynical to candidates being sold to them. All the present favorites seem to be lacking something.

First of all, the Republicans don't have much hope. Their only hope is Gerald Ford, and Gerald Ford's only hope is that he becomes President this summer and the economy and the press make radical turnabouts, but this is very unlikely. Lowell Weiker could never be President because he comes off as too much of a political opportunist and he seriously looks too much like Rodney Dangerfield..

George Wallace and his third party, in my opinion, will not be able to muster enough support to take an election. Remember, it was a little more than a short decade ago that he stood on the steps of the University of Alabama and refused to allow a black man to gain admission. Also I find Wallace in the heat of a campaign not to be at all charismatic figure but rather an obnoxious politician preaching facism to win a mandate. No, the sympathy of the wheelchair will not be enough and I doubt his acupuncture treatment cleared out his racist ideology.

The Democrats have the best chance, but not with the current line of potential candidates. Walter Mondale is already boring people in New Hampshire which is a trick in itself. The party could never get away with following George McGovern with Henry Jackson, the Pentagons' friend; that would be too drastic a change in party policy, (even though that term itself is a myth) it would be too much of a contradiction. Ted Kennedy could probably win an election but there are too many factors against him governing effectively. Sadly, there is always going to be Chappiquidik and rumors about his personal life. Also there is his own safety as a Kennedy. Anyway I don't think that the country could possibly fall into the Cape Cod Camelot of the early sixties again so soon. Finally, young hopefuls like Julian Bond will only have a slight chance because the people will probably be leaning to those candidates with years of Constitutional experience.

So who is going to be President?

As I said, the next President is probably pretty much unknown but as names appear in the next year there are a few traits to be watched for. The next President is going to have to be very close to the people, very plain spoken in the Truman style. He will also have to have a clean political character to follow the Nixon Administration. If Ed Muskie had waited a few years to come out of the Maine woods he could have probably made it on the Abraham Lincoln image but when he broke under the pen of William Loeb he lost the faith of the people. The next President will probably be older too, a man with a keen sense of history like Woodrow Wilson. On the Bi-Centennial election people will be examining closely how candidates interpret and stand for the Constitution. The election will not be one of issue but of edeology, campaign speeches will often sound like history classes with frequent quotes from the Constitution and the Federalist Papers.

In conclusion I don't know if such a man exists; at this time there are no hopefuls who fufill enough of these requirements. Therefore I think (and hope) that someone will rise out of obscurity and restore the honor of the Presidency as the country slowly begins to regain the faith and patriotism that has been taken away.

Letters To The Editor

C.C. needs think tank

To The Editor:

Along with our current shortage of office space, classroom space, study space, eating space in the Hatch, drinking space in the Coffee Shop and standing space on the main level of the Campus Center. I know that Freud discovered psychoanalysis while sitting on the john and that Martin Luther formulated the principles of the Reformation while stowed away in the privy, and it's not that I meant to cut short anyone's researches but please, people, shit and get off the pot.

Look before leaping

To The Editor:

There seems to be a mass response to Mark Dugloszs' letter "Umass dating dull". I would like to throw in another male opinion if I may. In yesterdays Collegian, Miss Grasso shot a few rounds of her own ammunition in offense of some of the critical views Mark pointed out. I believe some of what Mark said and some of what Gail said, but I think that there was a major war in session between the two as well as the fact that they were both generalizing too much. I do believe that most girls here at Umass are here to "make their own start in life", and while us guys' walk around half dressed with the smell of marijuana eluminating over us, we too are here in hopes of applying our knowledge towards a start in life. I would like to ask Gail where she has been looking lately? I am unattached to any one girl, but I have tried to dat a few girls here and have failed big. There is too damn much of this "Oh, he's not very good looking", or "Her body ain't bad, but her face sucks". I thought we left all that in highschool..I have all but given up on girls with their playing hard to get acts, and I am quite sure many other guys will agree with me. I do go to the various parties on campus and I see an awful lot of girls mingling amoungst the guys with the "long disheveled hair, flannel shirts, and ripped jeans". I greatly respect Gail's opinion as well as Mark's, but please, both of you, look before you leap..

Stolen cars and bikes?

To The Editor:

I was appalled to see the following ad in your classified section recently: "Need capable person to do English paper based on specific plays to be read. Have 1½ months, will pay well! Call Billy, 549,0130."

Unfortunately, it does not surprise me that students seek others to do their academic work for them — but it does surprise me that any individual would have the audacity to admit to such a practice in this way — and that it is consistent with Collegian policy to accept such advertisements.

If this is indeed your policy, perhaps you should consider capitalizing on it further. Why not run a whole section of advertisements of this type? One column could be devoted exclusively to the purchase and sale of term papers; another could be reserved for students who are willing to pass copies of exams on to others who will take them later. You will undoubtedly need space for those who wish to hire someone to complete an entire degree program in their name — after all, why should someone with money spend four years in dull Amherst when the same goal can be accomplished by proxy?

And while you're at it, how about a "STOLEN CARS AND BICYCLES" section?

OHAG to have rerun

To The Editor:

Last Wednesday evening, March 13, 1974; Orchard Hill Area Government Presidential and Vice-Presidential elections were held. The names of two candidates appeared on the ballot for the office of President, although one candidate had "unofficially" withdrawn before the election. Only one person ran for the office of Vice-President.

In order for the election to be valid, The Orchard Hill Area Government Constitution requires that 45 per cent of the residents must vote. Only 39 per cent of the 1200 residents did vote, and of these 580 votes, 50 were abstentions. As secretary of OHAG, I tended the ballot box in Field House and found that most of the residents refused to vote because they did not know the candidates. I believe that this refusal shows that the students do wish to be informed and do wish to vote responsibly.

It is the responsibility of the candidates to reach the people. The ONLY campaign information provided to the Orchard Hill community was a notice posted in each bathroom saying; and the names of one Presidential candidate and of the only Vice-Presidential candidate.

"We are in the RUNNING, Help us STREAK to Victory."

The candidates did not campaign. Perhaps they didn't feel the need to, but the voters, and even more importantly, the NON-voters have made it evident that they can fight apathetic candidates with apathy.

Now that the election is over the candidate, acting as interim President, has come out in support of a controversial platform that he felt no need to make public before the election It is clear that the candidates must be more responsible to the students.

In view of the poor turn-out, Area Government has voted to conduct another election..The nominations for President and Vice-President are now open to the Hill community. The election will be held April 10, 1974. Nomination papers are due April 7. For more information about the duties, benefits, and salaries of these positions, contact the Orchard Hill Area Government office, 103 Dickenson, 5-2680.

Sig Ep thanks UMass

To The Editor:

On behalf of the brothers of Sigma Phi Epsilon, I would like to thank the UMass community for their generous support of our efforts to raise money for research into muscular dystrophy. Your generosity has enabled us to raise over $600.

I would also like to thank the sisters of Chi Omega and Kappa Alpha Theta for their help in collecting on campus. You put in a lot of time and we appreciate it.

Will social service suffer setbacks?

To The Editor:

Tonight the Student Senate will be debating passage of a bill designed to cut the budget of the majority of social action RSO groups on campus.

A Collegian investigative reporter has determined that the Senate, using the rationale that the budget is bloated and "something has to give," is expected to cut those programs which direct student expertise toward offcampus targets.

Programs such as the Northampton Volunteers, Boltwood, J.O.E. and M.A.R.Y. train several hundred students on campus and have an immeasurable effect on the populations they serve, but have been designated low priority programs and can be expected to suffer.

The Northampton Volunteers, operating on a shoestring, has been cut twice in the past two years and a further cut could conceivably terminate the organization.

The University is committed to progressive social action, and upon hearing of the Senate action, Chancellor Bromery reaffirmed his support of that commitment. We ask the same support from the University body, and especially from those hundreds of students who will be affected. Write a letter to the editor. Contact your senator. And make it if you can to the Senate meeting tonight at 7 on the lower level of the Campus Center to express support for your organization to the Senate.

They Have You

The Department of Defense disclosed yesterday that over 25 million U.S. citizens, not connected with the department, are listed in intelligence files gathered over the past several years as part of the never ending battle which the Armed forces of our nation seem determined to wage against the American citizenry.

That means that about one out of every eight of you citizens out there appear in a secret dossier, available to 668 government officials. Since much of the "sub-versive" activity in American today is carried on at the Universities we at UMass can assume that a large percentage of the files concern us.

Remember how many of us signed petitions, and wrote letters last year?)

So here we are huddled in the countryside, with full knowledge that a lot of us are marked as potentially dangerous personnages.

We recommend that each and everyone of you harass the hell out of your reps and senators until Congress restores the right to privacy for American citizens once again.

Be careful, though, excersising your rights is dangerous these days.

The Right Man

Warren P. McGuirk, Dean of the School of Physical Education and Director of Athletics here at UMass has resigned his post after a fine 22-year career. This action will have profound effect on the athletic set up at the University.

Dean McGuirk was a man in the right place at the right time. With the University undergoing the greatest growth period in its history, the energetic administrator put the athletic department in the forefront of this expansion. Most of the athletic facilities now standing at UMass are a result of the time and effort of Dean McGuirk. We thank him for his contribution and wish him well in the future.

In choosing a man to take McGuirk's place, the administration should acknowledge the changing role of the University and the hoped for slowdown in its expansion. What is needed now is someone who can strengthen the already developed programs rather than attempting to erect new ones. It is simply a matter of finding another right man.

TheNewAntiwar Demonstrators

WASHINGTON--What happened to all the antiwar protestors of yesteryear? Well, in spite of what you read in the newspapers, they're still around. Only they're a new breed and in many ways much tougher.

I went to an antiwar rally at the Washington Monument the other day with my friend Dumbarton who works on demonstrations for the Secret Service. Dumbarton was dressed in dungarees, had long hair and was carrying a guitar which was really a very senstive tape recorder.

When we arrived at the Mall we saw five beared students carrying a Viet Cong flag.

"Hey, Dumbarton," I said, "they look like anarchists."

"Nah," said Dumbarton in disgust, "they're FBI undercover agents. I saw them last week at Harvard."

We walked around. There were six students, all with peace symbols painted on their navels, sitting in a circle smoking what surely smelt like grass.

"Look, Dumbarton," I said excitedly, "Communists."

Dumbarton shook his head in disgust. "They're from the Naval Civilian Intelligence unit. The guy waving the photograph of Ho Chi Minh is really a lieutenant commander in the Seabees."

We walked away. Suddenly I said, "Dumbarton, we're being followed by those four girls in dungarees."

Dumbarton looked around. "It's okay. They're from the Air Force Intelligence squadron at Andrews Field."

"But they're girls," I said.

"The Air Force always dresses their agents in drag," Dumbarton said. "They don't want their people to be mistaken for Naval Intelligence agents."

A fight broke out among 50 demonstrators standing near the speaker's platform. They were going at it thick and heavy.

"My God," I said. "That looks like real trouble."

"Don't get upset. Half the guys are from the Army Civilian Intelligence unit at Fort Holibird and the other half are from the Army Civilian Intelligence unit at the Pentagon."

"Each outfit claims they have jurisdiction in Washington. You should have seen the brawl they had at draft headquarters a few weeks ago. After it was over, both sides issued body counts."

"Why don't the police break it up?"

"Most of the cops here are from the Washington, D.C., undercover squad and they don't want to let on to anyone who they are."

The speeches began. One bearded student shouted, "The blankety blank blanks are not going to push us around. We'll put them up against the wall."

"Have you got your tape machine going?" I asked Dumbarton.

"What for?" Dumbarton said. "He's from the Internal Revenue Service Intelligence unit. I wish he'd get a new speech."

The next speaker was introduced as a Swede who had just come back from Hanoi.

"That's the CIA man," Dumbarton said in disgust. "They have to get in the act all the time."

As we were listening, Dumbarton suddenly froze. "You see those four kids over there with the "Free Father Berrigan' signs? I've never seen them before. This could be the real thing." He turned on the tape recorder in his guitar and we went over behind them.

One of the students turned around, "Hey, Dumbarton," he said in surprise, "what the hell are you doing here?"

"Collins," Dumbarton said. "What are you doing here?"

"I'm with the National Park Service Antisubversive Corps."

"You're the last person I expected to see here," Dumbarton said.

"Well, it's better than fighting forest fires."

Let Reason Prevail

Yesterday I got into a little argument with a friend of mine concerning the recent referendum on the compensation of Student Senate officers. Quite frankly, it is more than a little difficult to support paying them in the light of a possible skyrocketing tuition increase and the exorbitant fees one has to pay for Campus Center, Student Activities tax, and the Athletic programs. Also there are a great many people active in significant Student activities that receive no remuneration whatsoever. Why should Senate officers be paid when other deserving people are not?

After my initial gut response against paying students, I began to write a letter to the editor of the MDC opposing the referendum. In the process of composing this epistle against the local Philistines, my mind was changed. The reasons for this sudden reversal are simple.

Ideally we should not have to pay officers to an elected body of students. However these same leaders over the years when they have executed their offices well have usually encountered academic difficulty. (This same thing is true of Publication editors.) If they are intelligent, they have been hired by or through the administration in order to make end meet. While this does not always imply conflict of interest there are certain dangers which are frequently inherent here.

The main reason for my reversal in opinion is purely selfish however. The Senate officers and Comittee chairman have generally been the individuals who have effectively spearheaded drives to minimize rent increases, decrease academic requirements, fight the tuition increase and begin the open house policy. It is rather doubtful that the generally apathetic student body would have ever accomplished these things by themselves.

The economic and social situation here would probably be more unbearable without their consistent forceful action. It might be better still if they had been paid as professionals in the past-i.e. Campus Center (possible $50 fee next year). False economy and bitter healousy should not prevail over reason in the referendum next Tuesday.

President Nixon's Psalm

Nixon is my shepard, I am in want.
He maketh me to lie on park benches.
He leadeth me beside still factories.
He restoreth my doubt in the Republican Party.
He guideth me in the path of unemployment for his party's sake.
Yes, though I walk through the valley of soup kitchens, I am hungry.
He annointeth my income with taxes.
My expenses over runneth my income.
Surely, poverty and hard living shall follow me all the days of the Republican Administration.
And I shall dwell in a rented house forever.
Five thousand years ago, Moses said "Pick up your shovels,
Mount your camel or ass and I will lead you to the promised land."
Twenty-five years ago, Franklin Roosevelt said "Lay down
Twenty-five years ago, Franklin Roosevelt said "Lay down your shovels, light up a Camel and sit on your ass, for this is the Promised Land."
Now people be careful. Nixon will take your shovel, shove it up your ass, sell your camel and then tell you there is no Promised Land."

"Collegian" To Set Up Scholarship Program

Collegian members who give 12 or more hours a week to work on the Collegian and who also have to work at part-time jobs on or off campus are slated for scholarship aid next semester, according to the Student-Faculty Publishing Board, governing Collegian policies.

Plans for using a fraction of the advertising income raised by students on the Collegian for scholarships that would be awarded by the University Scholarship Committee, headed by Dean Machmer, were approved by the board last Friday.

At the meeting Prof. Max Goldberg pointed out that in the past, The Collegian has used part of its revenue to finance an annual banquet and pen and pencil sets for members, and that scholarship aid to students who otherwise have to work would be more useful to the student body by making possible a better quality student newspaper and by making part-time jobs available to other students.

The scholarship plan was adopted on the basis of a recommendation by Mr. Arthur Musgrave, professor of journalism, in a report he prepared at the request of the Board.

In his report Prof. Musgrave pointed out that a Smith College student newspaper had set up a $200 scholarship for one of its members this semester, and that the Boston University weekly newspaper has 16 scholarships ranging from $475 to $120.

"Students on a college newspaper can through a combination of competence and hard work raise considerable revenue," Prof. Musgrave said in his report, and I think we would be wise to provide an incentive for more competent editorial and business management."

A newspaper is a business," the report continued, "and all members of a college newspaper should learn something about business administration.

"They have an excellent opportunity to become familiar with market analysis work, advertising, salesmanship, etc. A scholarship program based on using a fraction of the advertising income would be an incentive, and would increase the educational values students get from college newspaper experience.

"A scholarship system would achieve the same educational values as the profit-sharing system used by Amherst, the University of New Hampshire, Williams and other colleges."

Prof. Musgrave declared that for a college to publish 8 pages weekly that would reflect credit on the student body a minimum of 12 students must put in about 12 to 15 hours a week—usually for a two-year period.

These students cannot hold part-time jobs without making an unwise sacrifice of the time and energy they give to studies," he said.

His report also revealed that the number of Collegian members working at part-time jobs "seems to be increasing, perhaps because of (1) the passing of the veterans, and (2) the inevitable lag of scholarship funds behind the post-war increase in enrollment."

The report went on to say that the basic choice was between staff welfare and extra pages, but that "colleges which have compensation systems have better as well as larger newspapers than comparable colleges which do not."

The report was based on studies of the policies and practices of more than 50 college newspapers.

The Publishing Board voted unanimous approval of the scholarship principle, and decided to discuss the details of the scholarship plan at the next meeting. One proposal made was to use a fifth of the advertising revenue for scholarship aid, and to limit the top scholarship to $125.

For the present semester the Board voted to recommend a $50 scholarship for Executive Editor Lloyd Sinclair so that he might quit his 10-hour a week job in the U-Store.

Members of the Publishing Board who were present at the meeting included Professors Harold Cary and Lawrence Dickinson, Mr. Avrom Romm, former Collegian editor who is now a reporter on the Springfield Union, Agnes McDonough, '51, and Dick Hafey, '52. Muriel Fauteaux, '52, subscription manager, also attended the meeting.

Collegian Scholarships

The recent decision of the Collegian Publishing Board to set up a scholarship program for members of the Collegian who find it necessary to work part time to meet expenses will probably bring many complaints from the student body. We feel that there are a few things in connection with this action that should be brought to their attention.

Few people realize the many hours that the members of the editorial board work every week. In the past, some members have put in as many as 25 hours each week. When this is coupled with the necessity to work part-time, plus trying to get by in the classroom, the student must make a sacrifice in one of these activities.

Compensation for editors is nothing new. Many college newspapers have some arrangement set up whereby, through a profit-sharing plan or scholarships, members of the staff receive some form of compensation. In a survey of 25 colleges conducted last year by Drake College, it was revealed that the average compensation for editors was $469 a year. Many colleges in the surrounding area have some compensatory system. Springfield College provides the editor of its paper with a $425 per year expense account. Smith College has a $200 per semester scholarship. Williams College has a profit-sharing system which has amounted to as high as $4000 per year to be split among the staff. The University of New Hampshire and the University of Connecticut, to cite schools which are not privately-endowed also provide compensation for their staffs. Mention of these facts is not made to suggest that we establish scholarships just to follow their lead. The pertinent point is that each of these schools turns out a newspaper which in quality, is far above others which do not provide any form of compensation.

Students would not be paying for these scholarships. The original plan was that this money would be taken from the advertising income. Few people realize that the student fee does not entirely pay for publishing the Collegian, that the advertising and subscription revenue pays for a great part of the printing costs. They also do not realize that their student fee is much lower than other colleges of comparable size. The University of Connecticut charges each student $5.00 per semester as the student fee for the campus newspaper, and Middlebury College charges $1.75 per semester. Our rate of $1.00 is far below both of these schools.

The Collegian has been striving to build itself into a bigger and better newspaper. We feel that this change will be an important step in this realization.

The printing press at Ware River News is capable of printing up to 40 Collegian size pages (tabloid) at one time. It takes just under two and a half hours to print 20,000 Collegians.

The papers are trucked from Ware to Amherst, a 25-minute ride. The first stop on the delivery run is the Amherst Post Office, where over 200 subscriptions are mailed daily. Collegians are dropped at 15 locations on campus and 700 copies are distributed in the Five-College area.

Most days the Collegian reaches campus between 8 and 10 a.m.

The stacks in the lobby of the Student Union are usually the first to empty. The earliest time of recent recollection that the stacks in the SU lobby have been all taken was 11 a.m. That was April 1, 1975.

The latest story of what readers think of the Collegian after they've read it was done in November, 1975 by SAREO an administration research-evaluation organization.

The SAREO report stated that news items in the Collegian were enjoyed most by 37 per cent of readers surveyed. Editorial letters and opinions followed a close second with 34 per cent, and sports third with 24 per cent. Other sections in the paper comprised the remaining five per cent.

Almost 70 per cent of readers surveyed felt that top priority front page space should go primarily to campus activities and news while 24 per cent felt it should go to national activities and news. Six per cent had different preferences.

In reporting Black, Third World, and feminist issues, 30 per cent felt that the Collegian has been generally sensitive. Forty-four per cent felt that it had been somewhat sensitive, 13 per cent that it had been somewhat insensitive, four per cent that it had been insensitive and 10 per cent said they didn't know.

The largest departmental staff on the Collegian is by far the news staff, numbering over 100. The graphic arts department numbers over 50 volunteers who prepare ads and photographs for publication. The remaining departments of the newspaper have between 20-35 staffers each.

60's — a time for change

By DEBORAH EDWARDS
Collegian Staff

The sixties might well be known as a time for change. During this period, the University's population jumped from less than 5,000 undergraduates, to its present 18,500. During that time, the Collegian also changed.

During the sixties, the Collegian went from a weekly, to a semi-weekly, to a tri-weekly and then, on Sept. 11th, 1967 it became a daily. It is symbolic that it should become a daily on that day, when the University was celebrating its centennial. Exactly 100 years before that fall, 56 students, (all of them male), began studies here.

During the '60's, the campus had a major facelift, as many new buildings came to accommodate for a large influx of students.

Many student protests and demonstrations were held during those years. Many of these demonstrations were held against companies such as Dow Chemical, that came to campus trying to recruit men to work for them. These companies supplied war products, and were severely looked down upon by the anti-war demonstrators.

There were often building take overs.

According to James Collins, State Representative, from Amherst, and former student body president in 1968, there were buses leaving from campus to Washington, DC during the Civil Rights movement and other places in the South for demonstrations.

The demonstrators marched from Bartlett Hall to the Student Union lawn where they lit a huge bonfire and selected "Miss Napalm."

Students were also protesting to increase students' rights. At that time, students had very few rights. The once a month coffee hour was still in effect. It was during that time, and only at that time, students could have members of the opposite sex in dorms. According to Collins, one of the rules was that doors had to remain open while members of the opposite sex were present. Collins said this rule was often broken.

In the beginning of the sixties, students had very little say in governing themselves, and according to Dean Field, students had very good relations with the administrators. Former University President Lederle said, "I had office hours once a week, in which any student could come and speak to me about anything that was bothering them."

According to Collins, the Collegian came out as an advocate against the War in 1968. During the years of 1965-66, the paper was mainly concerned with students rights on campus, and it wasn't until 1968 that students finally achieved some student rights resembling those some students enjoy today.

These events and others marked the end of an era, and the beginning of a long period of change of which students are still feeling some effects.

Peter Ward, for whom escape from the bourgeois meant joining the establishment....

These names are, for most of today's readers, no more than dots on a piece of paper. For me they represent the flesh and blood behind the statistics. You may count the years and progress in another way: five Collegian issues a week, instead of three; an average of 120 pages a week, instead of 36; a staff of 250, triple that of a decade ago... and four teletype machines bringing in the world's cacophony, and a staff car and a darkroom to embarrass the New York Times.

What stands out is that each year the individuals come to the Collegian rooms to try to practice each in a new way the same old things that students have been trying for so many years. And that is the truth, the morality of life, the love of humanity that is so ancient and yet always no wonderfully new with each new discovery.

That most of these students fail is not the standard for measurement, for indeed we all fail in our shaky pursuit of truth and morality and love. That most of the students try is what I know.

Why shouldn't I love the Collegian? How could I not love a place where education comes to the heart and soul as well as to the mind.

And so they come forth:

—Charlotte Allen and Kathe Sandler, each in her way reaching for an absolute while the sword of compromise slices towards her arm.... Bill Parent and Bill Mills, like tweedy parents fussing over their obstreperous offspring.... Kevin Claffey and Ron Arena learning to make big piles out of little ones.... and Joe Mahoney, finding that satisfaction comes by degrees and decimals.... Teresa Hanafin and Jim Odato, chasing deadlines while being overtaken by their pursuers.... and....

are also full-time students at the University, a fact many people forget. The time put in by many staffers while trying to maintain decent grades is incredible. Many staffers get story ideas and assignments to work on from coming into the office and getting one from the news editor, or by being called by one of three assistant news editors.

Once a story has been completed, it is handed in to that night's assistant news editor on the news desk. It is then read by the assistant and sometimes the news editor and-or one of two news and editorial advisors employed by the Collegian from the professional ranks to advise and give suggestions how to improve article writing and other things. After being scrutinized for accuracy and adherance to pyramid-style of writing, (most important things first), it is given to a copy editor who corrects misspellings and typographical errors. The copy editor suggests a headline for the story to the issue editor, who lays out the story on the page designated by the assistant news editor.

Keeping track of about 100 different staff reporters, making sure all assignments and story ideas are done, and trying to instill the idea of accuracy and fairness into all reporters is a big job. The Collegian is the only daily newspaper at UMass, and we are the final word. In the news department, it had better be the correct word.

McCarthy Addresses Collegiate Editors

Senator Urges 'Join the Fray'

By RICHARD S. KLINE
News Editor

McCarthy, in a short speech, called upon "college editors to join the fray," and strive for "political freedom." He said that "In 1968 they (students) are prepared to stand right up..." express their views and "take chances."

Taking a light look at the campaign, yet maintaining a serious note, the Senator said some people feel that he does not project a good image. "If you had more charisma, they say...look at Romney...or Nixon...and my principle opponent in the Democratic Primary; especially upon the students."

"What we're dealing with," McCarthy told the gathering, "is the projection of America into the future." He stated that a threat anywhere in the world or an out-break of violence is regarded as a threat to America. And "if elected, McCarthy said, "I would change the name of the Department of Defense to the Department of Offense."

It was just seconds after McCarthy had finished his prepared speech that he was confronted by three young men. One, peace activist Jerry Rubin who was one of the principle organizers of the march on the Pentagon last Fall, waved a newspaper in his face that headlined the freeing of 2000 Viet Cong prisoners.

"What do you think of that, Senator?" Rubin yelled. "People are free!" McCarthy calmly and somewhat sarcastically answered, "What do you think of that?"

The three intruders proceeded to sit down on the stage with McCarthy and Rubin and the other members of the group heckled with gestures while the Senator answered questions from the audience. The gestures were primarily the New Left's "V" sign and the waving of the newspaper headlines.

McCarthy answered questions from the floor although the stage had been invaded by the uninvited guests. He drew prolonged applause when one member of the college press apologized for the display of Rubin and the others.

The Senator said during the questioning that "Vietnam has implications in other areas," and cited the problems of the cities particularly with regard to ghettos and other urban problems. He also stated that the war should be a Vietnamese effort and that if we stop the bombing and the North Vietnamese and the Viet Cong negotiate, fine. If they don't however, then we should still withdraw.

Throughout the last few sentences of his answer to the withdrawal question, a slow, pulsating drum beat could be heard in the backgrounds. As it became louder to the audience and to the Senator, a group of the New Left were seen carrying a casket in front of the stage and McCarthy. McCarthy did not attempt to deal with this final insult and later said, "I expected something like this."

The casket had McCarthy for President stickers on it and when put down and turned over by its bearers, an American flag and McCarthy for President buttons fell to the floor. One demonstrator attempted to burn the flag and was "laid out," as one observer put it, by an N.B.C. camera man.

'Daily Collegian' Plans Withdrawal From U. S. Student Press Association

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Pending the results of a full investigation of the United States Student Press Association (USSPA) Conference this past weekend, the editors of the Daily Collegian announced plans to withdraw from the organization.

Attending the conference from the Daily Collegian were Editor-in-Chief Chet Weinerman, Managing Editor Jack Dean, News Editor Richard S. Kline and reporter Bill Dickinson. All expressed extreme displeasure with the conference and the way that it was organized.

NEWSWEEK'S representative and reporter at the conference, Denny Crimmins.

Arriving at the conference at the Sheraton-Park Hotel on Thursday afternoon, the UMass group and the numerous other delegations were confronted by members of the New Left and a hippie contingent mostly from a settlement known as Drop City.

The conference title, Alternative Futures and Present Choices, was intended to stimulate the minds of the editors and the reporters at the conference, but according to Daily Collegian Managing Editor Jack Dean, "There was no direction and the only goal seemed to be shock value. It had only a negative effect."

"Some of the leaders of the USSPA had good intentions," said Dean, "but they failed to communicate them." He was referring to the light shows, and mind-expanding games, as well as lectures and seminars presented at the conference.

With the aim of presenting "alternative futures" and making college editors "confront themselves" conference coordinator David Lloyd-Jones admitted that he "set up a fake Vietnam debate" at the primary meeting of the conference. One conference official stated that Jones had "expressed a desire to run the whole show" and that he had arranged the appearance of the Leftist "Liberation News Service" who showed North Vietnamese and NLF films to the crowd of editors.

After the films, a voice over the loudspeaker system identified himself as a "Captain Jorgenson of the D.C. police" and ordered all spectators to immediately leave the area or be subject to arrest. It was later learned through investigation that the voice was a part of the scheme of those presenting the films.

The entire incident of the films and the subsequent police hoax came immediately after a resolution to withdraw from Vietnam had been tabled by the members of USSPA.

British Newspapers Rumor Westmoreland Is On Way Out

LONDON (AP) — British newspapers said yesterday there are strong demands behind the scenes in Washington for firing Gen. William C. Westmoreland.

The five-million circulation London newspaper The People carried a front page story by foreign editor Terence Lancaster under the banner headline: "LBJ Probes Great Vietnam Blunder."

"Behind the scenes there are strong demands for the sacking of General William Westmoreland, U.S. commander in Vietnam and the man who gave assurances that the Viet Cong build-up had been under observation for months," the article said. "And what became clear yesterday was that there had been massive mistakes in Vietnam."

"General Westmoreland is a personal friend of the President, he calls him 'Westy', but whether he stays or is sacked, he is now a political liability for Mr. Johnson.

"For whatever warnings the general may have issued, he is clearly nailed as the man in charge when American prestige in Southeast Asia sank to its lowest point."

The Sunday Times said in an article by its correspondent in Washington, Frederic Collins: "Underground criticism of Westmoreland, who for public purposes is accorded status as a hero, focuses on two points.

ANTI-McCARTHY and anti-war new left demonstrators forced presidential hopeful Eugene McCarthy to leave his press conference with the editors of college papers when they entered the hall bearing a casket and beating a death march on a drum. (Left). When directly in front of the podium where the Senator was speaking, the demonstrators lowered the casket which had McCarthy for President stickers on it to the floor (middle). They then over-turned the casket and emptied out the buttons and an American flag (Right.) The protest was aimed directly at the American involvement in the war in Vietnam and the Senator.

Clarification Made On Winter Carnival

By RON LABRECQUE
Specials Editor

The Winter Carnival program of entertainment has recently been besieged by rumors concerning entertainers who have been contracted to appear in concert.

In hopes of clarifying the situation, Junior Class President Wayne Thomas spoke to the Daily Collegian yesterday. The concert which seems to have caused the most concern is the Sunday evening show which was originally billed as "The Righteous Brothers" show.

Thomas said that although the supporting acts which were travelling with the show are no longer a part of the program, the Junior Class has signed a contract with the nationally famous rock group "The Byrds.'

It has been confirmed that one of the original Righteous Brothers of "Souls and Inspiration" and "You've Lost That Lovin' Feeling" fame has left the act. However, Thomas assured the Daily Collegian of the talent of the replacement.

According to talent agents, extensive auditions were held for a number of months and the "new" Righteous Brother has been training for almost a year to take his place in the act.

Research by the Winter Carnival Committee has found that 41 college concert contracts were signed last Fall before the change in the act was made public. The Committee called 15 colleges within a 1500 mile radius of UMass who had signed the "old" Righteous Brothers and found absolutely no dissatisfaction in the switch. Thomas added that at this time the Righteous Brothers are contracted for 64 appearances.

A Winter Carnival Committee member pointed out that musical groups are constantly changing members without damaging the talent or distinctive sound of the group and "the switch in the Righteous Brother act is no exception." Thomas said that "those expecting to hear the unique sound of the original

WMUA airs porno debate tonight

Tonight on "Off the Hook," Public Affairs Director Bill Files will host another debate on pornography.

His guests will be Charlotte Allen, prominent spokesperson against the showing of pornographic films on campus, and Albert Sparks, chairperson for Baroque Enterprises, a student organization which promotes pornography as a student cultural activity.

Both Allen and Sparks engaged in a WMUA debate a month ago, and because of the tremendous community response to the issue, another discussion of the issue will be heard tonight at 6:20 on 91.1, not last night as reported in yesterday's Collegian

The community is urged to call in with questions and comments at the end of the show, WMUA announced.

Slide show on drugs in China

"How China Kicked the Habit," a slide show on China's successful effort to eradicate drug abuse, will be shown and be commented on by a former area drug addict on Channel 8, Amherst cable TV, at 8 p.m. tomorrow.

The program will be introduced by Pat Sacrey of the U.S.-China People's Friendship Association, and afterward she will interview Tom Wilson of Springfield, who will analyze the effectiveness for this country of such a program.

Sex discrimination topic of hearing

The Student Affairs Title IX Self-Evaluation Committee will hold a public hearing to examine and discuss issues relevant to sex discrimination on campus pertaining to Public Safety (Campus Police) Monday from noon to 2 p.m. in Campus Center room 904.

All students, staff and faculty are invited to attend and give the committee whatever information they have. Information gathered at this hearing will be included in the examination of the department of Public Safety's compliance with Title IX.

If anyone has something to say about sex discrimination in the operations of Public Safety, or if one is just interested, they are urged to attend the open hearing by organizers of the event.

'Blacks in Amherst' on Amherst cable

"Blacks in Amherst: Can A Minority Find Happiness in A 'Liberal' Community?" is the topic of a panel discussion to be broadcast on cable channel 8 in Amherst tonight at 8:00.

Listed among the panelists are Rev. Fanny Cooper, UMass Professor John Bracey, Amherst College Professor Douglas Davidson, and ABC Director Janice Denton.

This program is part of the Humanities and Public Policy series being presented by the Center for Community Access T.V. and the Massachusetts Foundation for Humanities & Public Policy. The public is invited to come to the Town Room of the Amherst Town Hall to participate in the discussion. Cable 8 viewers can phone in questions and comments.

Next week's program is entitled "Sports in Amherst: Are They More Than Just Fun & Games?"

How deep is the riddle?

By KIT WALKER
and ROB HENEREY

This morning the moon is still in Gemini (until 1:29 p.m.), and the sun in Scorpio. An opportune time to think about death. You may say, "who wants to do that?", but if we're always running from death, we never have a chance to live — and we get countless chances to die and be reborn in this lifetime. But if we never face it with courage, we never find that part of ourselves that never dies, and we go around thinking we're something is so superficial compared to what we really are. What has us hoodwinked is the ego shell, which, granted, may offer us some kind of protection, but it is also responsible for why 90 per cent of us are lonely. The ego is entirely made up of how other people in society see us. We're constantly worried about how we appear to others, and never stop to feel how we feel inside.

So we can do ourselves a favor immediately. But we have a riddle to solve first. And that is the riddle our mind throws at us; that there is an "in here" and an "out there"; that there is a difference between you and me; that all the things that bog us down and hold us back are even real — and that riddle may take 5 seconds to solve, or it make take life times.

By the very act of waking up to the world; noticing, accepting, and loving it; breaking the barriers and allowing it to stream in; we become full, it comes alive, and we find everything and everyone in it responding to us; where before there were only ghosts — things to be used and thrown away

Maturing, Centering, Sharing, Thinking ... are the focus of the night ahead. The Moon, our feelings, is sensitized in the watery Sign of Cancer, and is halfway between Full and Last Quarter. Tonight at 8:59 it will be exactly 3-8 the circle behind the Sun, our willing purpose, which is in the middle of the sharing-healing Sign of Scorpio. This angle means it's time to heal ourselves by sharing nourishing good feelings and sensitive insights tonight.

A Moon angle at 4:39 may shed some mature light on our insecurities, helping us realize how far we have to go. Sharing out of strength rather than weakness can make the night a conscious celebration of our mutual centeredness.

The program combines a number of aspects of living in a different country in addition to study, and no previous knowledge of a Scandinavian language is necessary. Cost of the program for 1977-78 is $3800.

Free lecture on 'Issues in nursing'

The UMass Division of Nursing will sponsor a guest lecturer tonight at 7:30 in Shattuck Auditorium at the Public Health Building.

Ex-UMass footballer leads Lions from den

PONTIAC, Mich. [UPI] — The Detroit Lions are "playing at a level of winning football," their interim coach says, and a lot of it has to do with ex-UMass quarterback Greg Landry.

Landry has passed everybody and now sits at the top of the National Football Conference's statistical tables. The 1968 UMass graduate trails only Bert Jones of Baltimore and Ken Stabler of Oakland in the overall rankings, which isn't bad for a guy who wasn't even No. 1 on his own team at the start of the season.

"Greg has mastered what our offensive philosophy is," said Tommy Hudspeth, whose future as coach of the Lions will be decided by how the club does in its last five games. "Our passes are predicated on what we see them (the opposing defense) get into.

"Friday afternoon," the coach said, "Greg was throwing the football better than I've ever seen him throw it. In fact, I've never seen a quarterback throw the ball any better in all my years in football."

Detroit is 4-5 following its loss at Minnesota Sunday. The Lions are 3-2 under Hudspeth with games against New Orleans, Chicago, Buffalo, the Giants and Los Angeles rounding out the schedule.

Offensively the Lions rate fifth, thanks to Hudspeth's constant work with the offense and Landry's improved efficiency.

"Greg thinks along with our offensive coordinator, Ken Shipp," Hudspeth said. "He has more confidence in what he's doing. When he calls a play and things happen to him, he knows how to get out of it.

"Greg and Ken work well together — Joe Reed too," he said. "Greg knows why we're doing something. And when you perform as we are, you gain confidence in what you're doing."

The system the Lions have come up with involves everybody. The quarterbacks and offensive coaches work up a game plan together. The coaches more or less run the program during the game.

Steelers turnabout shaky start

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — The Pittsburgh Steelers have taken over the NFL lead in rushing yardage, one sign of their turnaround after a shaky start.

However, the Steelers, who lost four of their first five games before sweeping their last four, still are trailing the Cincinnati Bengals in the AFC's central division.

A team spokesman noted the Steelers took over the rushing lead with 1,273 yards thanks to the strong performances of running backs Franco Harris and Rocky Bleier, both among the AFC's top 10 rushers.

Harris is ranked fourth in rushing wiih 735 yards and Bleier eighth with a career-high 538 yards. Harris also leads the conference in scoring with 66 points scored on 11 touchdowns.

Defensive back Glenn Edwards again leads the AFC in interceptions with six, while punter Bobby Walden is fourth in his department with a 41.3-yards-per-punt average. Rookie Theo Bell ranks fifth in the AFC in punt returns with an 11.2 average.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Wednesday, November 10 — Born today, you are one of those extremely dependent individuals who cannot admit to the loss of a friendship, the lessening of love, the disintegration of even a casual relationship without tremendous emotional stress and strain. You will work long after the possibility of rescuing a relationship is past in the hope of bringing about some sort of miraculous cure for whatever ails that relationship. While others may accept the fact that one or another person involved in an association of people may change, may grow away from the involvement, you hang on and on, encouraging in the end a situation that proves uncomfortable for all parties involved.

You are not one to continue an involvement in an unpleasant situation in which neither friends nor loved ones are also involved. On the other hand, where friends and loved ones go, there go you also, whether to your regret or betterment. You seek out happy circumstances as a rule, but will continue in unhappy ones so long as you are not alone in doing so. Such an attitude may gain you a reputation for loyalty above and beyond the call of duty; it may also gain you a reputation for foolishness.

A lover of nature and one who responds to beauty in all its forms, whether natural or man-made, you enjoy the out-of-doors, luxurious surroundings, cultural pursuits and the like. Particularly fond of music, you may well possess musical talent that could be developed into something both pleasurable and lucrative.

Thursday, November 11

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — The pleasure you can offer another at this time is not to be sold short. Realize an ambition late in the day.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — The problem of getting to know one who can influence others in your behalf looms larger today than it really is.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Work within the framework another sets for you. If you presume too much on the employment scene, you will be disappointed.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — What you have to offer may not seem much to you; to another, however, you may be able to provide a lifesaver -- literally.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — The confidence you have in yourself is reflected in the results of your efforts. Don't allow it to be undermined in the morning.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Should you have an opportunity to travel, whether for personal or business reasons, do so. This is a good time to set new horizons.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Friendships may actually stand in the way of objective decisions today. Make an effort to be fair; play no favorites.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Another's personality may make a better impression on higher-ups at this time than your own. Don't fret; continue with business as usual.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — A new experience with country living makes this an extra-special day for you. Stock memory shelves with something different.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — You can be intellectually honest at the same time that you are emotionally responsive. Employ head and heart together for best results.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Unless you are able to deal with the objections that your proposal receives -- as well as the support -- success will fly out the window today.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Make every effort to change another's mind for him, without, however, allowing him to become aware of what you're doing. Subtlety tells.

College bowl picture begins to shape

ATLANTA [UPI] — College football's post-season bowl picture is beginning to come into focus with at least a half-dozen southern teams in contention.

Sixth-ranked Georgia, 7th-ranked Maryland, 12th-ranked Alabama, 15th-ranked Florida, North Carolina and East Carolina are all solid candidates and you have to figure that Louisiana State will probably be added to that list if the Bengals beat Mississippi State this week.

The four top bowls shape up this way:

Rose Bowl — The winner of the game between 2nd-ranked UCLA aand 3rd ranked Southern California will play the winner of the game between 4th ranked Michigan and 8th-ranked Ohio State.

Orange Bowl — 9th-ranked Nebraska still must play 16th-ranked Iowa State and 14th-ranked Oklahoma but is favored to win the big eight and play top-ranked Pittsburgh.

Sugar Bowl — Georgia is expected to represent the Southeastern Conference with probable Atlantic Coast champion Maryland the most likely foe.

Cotton Bowl — The winner of the game between 5th-ranked Texas Tech and 16th-ranked Arkansas is expected to represent the Southwest Conference against Alabama, if the Crimson Tide beats Notre Dame Saturday.

German all-time tennis star dies

CAIRO [UPI] — Baron Gottfried Von Cramm, Germany's greatest tennis player, was killed Tuesday in a collision of his car and a truck on the Cairo to Alexandria highway, the West German Embassy said.

Von Cramm, 67, in Egypt on business, was returning from the Mediterranean Port when his car collided with a truck 20 miles north of Cairo. His driver was also killed, embassy officials said.

Von Cramm was Germany's most successful tennis player and was regarded as one of the most elegant of his era. He won the French singles title in 1934 and 1936 and held the German title from 1932 to 1935 and returned to win the West German singles final in 1948 and 1949.

Von Cramm was the losing finalist at Wimbledon in 1935, '36, '37, losing twice to Fred Perry of Britain and on the third occasion to Don Budge of the United States.

Celts seek winning trail tonight

[Compiled from Wires

The Boston Celtics seek to snap their losing streak at four games Wednesday night when they meet the Los Angeles Lakers in National Basketball Association action at Boston Garden.

The Celtics go into the game concerned about the condition of guard Charlie Scott, who reinjured his hip Friday and missed his first game as a Celtic Saturday.

Scott may be held out of Wednesday's action, with John Havlicek and Kevin Stacom splitting his time. Fred Saunders may see work as a guard, especially if there is need for a press.

Havlicek, six games short of the NBA ironman record, will return to the sixth-man role that first earned him fame with the Boston Celtics 15 seasons ago, the club announced Tuesday.

"After much experimentation and considerable thought, we've decided that the best man for the important sixth-man role is John Havlicek," said coach Tom Heinsohn following Tuesday's practice.

"I've tried several guys at the spot but John has the smarts, the know-how to handle the job for us better than any of the other people. Hondo gives us the balance we need, too."

The veteran swingman, who should surpass Hal Greer's games-played record of 1,122 this month, played his first seven seasons as the Celtics sixth man — or first man off the bench.

Coming into town as a Laker will be Don Chaney, a former Celtic.

"Don's playing well," said Lakers' General Manager Bill Sharman, also a former Celtic.

"The trouble is Jerry West has four backcourt players, so 'the Duck' Chaney isn't getting as much floor time as he should," Sharman said. "He has his knee bandaged but doesn't appear to be limping."

Joining Chaney on the Lakers' starting squad are center Kareem Jabbar, Lucius Allen, Don Ford and Cazzie Russell. Mack Calvin, Earl Tatum and Bo Lamar are newcomers to the team.

The Lakers have released Connie Warner and Allen Murphy and reactivated Tom Abernethy.

Wednesday night's contest is the second home game of the season for Boston. The third home battle will be Friday night in Boston Garden against the New Orleans Jazz, and the Celtics finish the week at Buffalo Saturday night.

can keep it going for the state tourney."

It was a different ball club indeed. UMass blocking, setting and spiking had vastly improved since the first game. The spikers looked as if they were giving lessons on the fundamentals of volleyball — they did everything well.

Keene St., coming off a three-game victory over Westfield St., showed by its tough net game that it would not accept a split. UMass put up a strong defense, thwarting many Keene St. spikes diving saves.

However, UMass was not content by merely holding off the Keene St. attack. Offense is UMass' game and they were out to prove it. The Minutewomen, Dianne Bunker-Hannula in particular, put away their spike shots with power and precision.

After losing the first game 9-15, Keene St. was not about to concede the match. It seemed the match was destined to be decided in the third game as Keene St. took an early 8-2 lead in the second game. However, with Pat McGrath serving, UMass came back to take a 9-8 lead. From there both teams matched each others clutch play to bring the game to a 14-14 stand off.

Hedi Dickson relieved UMass tensions by serving two unreturnable line shots to give the spikers a 16-14 victory.

The spikers go into action next on Saturday at the MAIAW tournament in Worcester. The women have also been invited to the Eastern regionals in Edinboro, Penn. on November 19 and 20.

The JVs ended its season last night with a win over Franklin Pierce and a loss to the Keene St. JVs, finishing with a 7-6 record. JV coach Linda Wetherby praised her team's performance this season by saying, "They've worked real hard and they did a good job."

Poloists surrender NE title to BC in overtime, 11-9

By NANCY CAMPBELL

The Women's water polo team suffered a defeat on Sunday at the New England championships at Radcliffe. They surrendered their title to Boston College after an intense, well-played game that went into overtime.

To make the finals, UMass easily defeated MIT 17-1. Scoring for UMass were Nancy Campbell (3), Debbie Hoxsie (2), Louise Fasser (3), Adrienne Fredey (2), Penny Noyes (6), and Alix Denhartog (1). Also playing for UMass was Becca Reggio and Diane Perry.

The second and final game against BC was an excellent display of water polo as the top two rivals in New England battled it out. Unfortunately, the UMass team could not overcome BC's numbers. Scoring was neck and neck with UMass dominating the entire game, until losing their strength in overtime, giving up two goals to end the game at 11-9. Scoring for UMass were Louise Fasser, Debbie Hoxsie, Diane Perry and Penny Noyes.

Goalie Carol Bruce played well in the tourney, and was named to second string all New England — an extra-special honor considering this was her debut at the position. Also named to second string was Louise Fasser, who did a superb job for UMass offense. All New England again this year went to Debbie Hoxsie and Penny Noyes, both playing well in both games. Adrienne Fredey, a key player, was out during first quarter play in the BC game on a bad call. Her absence was felt severely as it left UMass with only one substitute, a factor contributing greatly to the team's defeat, as UMass lacked the depth of the monstrous BC team, which edged ahead in overtime play.

Equestrian team rides to third place finish

By SUE SCANLON
Collegian Staff

Plagued by cold weather and limited facilities, Dartmouth College held its very first intercollegiate horse show this past Saturday. Fifteen members of the UMass Equestrian Team attended the show, returning home with a respectable third place finish. Colby-Sawyer College took the top spot, with Connecticut College claiming second. UMET rider Ann Van Heerden sparkled once again by winning the high point rider award for the show. Other UMET winners at Dartmouth were Robin Zeigler, Roberta Safka, Sue Scanlon, Whitney Buttrick, Sandy Most, and Michele Fedele.

This coming weekend, the UMET has a much deserved break in their schedule. There will, however, be a student horse show on Saturday, Nov. 13 beginning at 9:00 a.m. The show is open to all students of the UMass riding program. Since the classes are mainly for fun, the show will be enjoyable to spectator and participant alike.

The UMass Vet. and Animal Science Department will sponsor a Tack Sale next Thursday, Nov. 18 and Friday, Nov. 19 in Grinnell Arena. New and used riding apparel and equipment will be on sale, as well as books and baked goods. All proceeds will go to the UMass Indoor Arena Fund. All are urged to come and buy or simply browse.

Jackson as Bosox pitch coach

BCSTON [UPI] — Former National League hurler Al Jackson has been hired as the Boston Red Sox' pitching coach for next season, the club announced Tuesday.

Jackson, 41, compiled a 67-99 career record in 10 seasons with the Pirates Mets, Cardinals and Reds. He replaces Stan Williams, who served as Boston's pitching coach the past two years before being fired at season's end.

The choice ended two months of speculation that former Dodger pitcher Johnny Podres, a special scout for Boston, would be named.

Jackson, left-hander from Waco, Texas, started in the Pittsburgh system. In 1967, when St. Louis beat the Red Sox in the World Series, Jackson was 9-4 with the Cardinals.

He was pitching coach last season for the Mets.

Supan named by AP

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. [AP] — Purdue safety Rock Supan, who led the Boilermakers with 11 tackles and kicked the winning 23-yard field goal against Michigan, was named national college Back of the Week on Tuesday by The Associated Press.

Purdue's stunning 16-14 upset dropped the Wolverines from the nation's No. 1 ranking to fourth. It was the Boilermakers' first victory over Michigan in 10 years, and it was the first time a Big Ten team other than Ohio State had beaten the Wolverines since 1969.

Supan, a 19-year-old sophomore from Parma, Ohio, booted the winning field goal with just over four minutes remaining after Michigan had rallied to a 14-13 lead.

The Wolverines had one more chance to pull out a victory, but Bob Wood's 37-yard field goal attempt with nine seconds to go was wide to the left.

Booters post win over powerful Tufts

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

Call it pride.

The UMass varsity soccer team's final four games have really been something. Yesterday the booters closed out their season on a winning note by blanking Tufts 3-0, for their fifth win of the season. It was the fourth straight game without a loss for the booters.

During that four game span, the soccer team was only scored upon one time, that goal coming in a 2-1 win over Springfield. The last time the booters were defeated was on October 27, when Westfield State won a 1-0 decision, dropping the Minutemen's record to 2-8. It appeared that the booters would have a hard time matching last year's three wins, but they regrouped and went on to play the kind of soccer that was expected of them earlier in the year.

Yesterday's win was over a Tufts team that took a 11-2-1 record into the game. Despite that record and despite winning the Greater Boston League championship, the Jumbos were bypassed for the Division II playoffs. However, they will be in the ECAC tourney.

The Minutemen got a break at 32:21 of the first half when Joel Mascolo pressured a Jumbo sweeper and scored the first goal.

At the halfway mark of the first half Majid Mahrez kicked Mark Hanks after the UMass co-captain made a save on him and the two began trading punches. Minuteman fullback Larry Arronson and Jumbo right wing Bill Schacter intervened and were ejected from the game along with Hanks and Mahrez. This probably helped the Minutemen somewhat, as Mahrez and Schacter are Tuft's big one-two scoring punch.

While Tufts didn't have anyone to replace the likes of its top two scorers, UMass showed its depth with Mark Hodgdon replacing Hanks in the goal and preserving the shutout.

The first half ended with the Minutemen holding onto a 1-0 lead.

UMass put the pressure on in the second half and it resulted in a goal by Mike Parsons (his third since moving up to the front line) at 23:54. Bobby McChesney assisted on the goal and that assist puts him right up there on the all time UMass assist list.

At 30:50, Mark Abbott scored on a penalty shot. Abbott had had a breakaway on Tufts goalie Tim Simpson, but was tripped on the way, so he was awarded the free shot.

Coach Russ Kidd was able to empty his bench after that, so everyone was able to get a chance to play.

"We finished up on a good note," Kidd said. "Everybody's happy. It was quite a turnaround, just a great way to finish up," he added.

It certainly was as the booters showed that while they may have been down, they were not out.

Call it pride.

'Night and day' spikers split tri-match in season's finale

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The women's volleyball team showed its "night and day" character last night in a loss to Westfield St. and a win against Keene St. in a tri-match at the NOPE gym.

Although the spikers were shining in their win over Keene St., they saw some of their darkest moments in a two game loss (7-15, 3-15) to Westfield St. in the opener.

"They didn't move. They didn't have anything," UMass coach Diane Thompson commented about her team's play in the first match.

The spikers had their troubles with Westfield serves in the first game. They were not making the proper spike set-ups on their returns. Whenever UMass did have a good set-up the spikers were continually frustrated by Westfield blockers at net.

Westfield proved to be a consistent team relying on strong defensive play, instead of the spike. Several powerful spikes by Sue Sabia were kept in play by diving Westfield players.

The steady flow of UMass substitutions did little to dent Westfield's defense.

Westfield continued its superb blocking into the second game, while UMass played sloppily and unorganized. Westfield seemingly neutralized the UMass team to the point where its attack became totally ineffective. In fact, all three UMass points in the 15-3 loss resulted from a Westfield letdown.

However, the rejuvenated spikers made up for their previous sins by beating Keene St. in a two game sweep, 15-9, 16-4.

"It's a night and day ball club," Thompson said. "I just hope we

What happened to the fans?

Regardless of what you may read in the newspapers or hear from area college football coaches, spectator interest in college football is rapidly approaching a new low in popularity in the New England area. The fans, alumni and students just are not supporting their teams as well as in previous years.

Every once in a while you hear Boston College football coach Joe Yukica preach to the area press the need for BC to go "big-time" and bring in some nationally ranked teams into the New England area. The BC officials feel that college football is rapidly on the increase in the area, and the fans deserve to see some of the best teams in the country.

Apparently coach Yukica and the BC officials have terribly overestimated the popularity of college football in New England. If you don't believe me, just look at the statistics.

Last Saturday's UMass-Holy Cross football game in Worcester drew only 10,001 fans, not even filling half of the 25,000 seating capacity at Fitton Field. The UMass Homecoming game against UConn only attracted a shade under 15,000, while in their season's opener, the Minutemen only drew 11,000 fans into the stands. Even the Boston College Eagles, the supposedly new powerhouse of the Northeast, didn't even fill their stadium for their home opener against the nationally ranked Texas Longhorns.

The ironic part of the BC-Texas game was that even two weeks before the game, the BC ticket office had great trouble in selling game tickets. The BC athletic department then had to engage in a full-scale advertising campaign in trying to drum up ticket sales. Can you imagine a school having to advertise and heavily publicize for a game against Texas? It would simply be unheard of in any other part of the country.

So why do schools like BC, Holy Cross and UMass have great difficulty in getting people into the stands?

You would never think that a school like UMass, which has over 20,000 students and a large alumni would have trouble filling its stadium. You would have to assume that the students alone would fill Alumni Stadium. But even with the season ticket holders, and the people who buy tickets before the game, Alumni Stadium at UMass is seldom more than half full.

You would also have to assume that BC, being in the metropolitan Boston area, and playing teams like Texas, West Virginia and Florida State, some of the top independent football teams, would have little or no trouble at all in packing them in at their stadium, but they do have trouble, and it embarrasses them.

I suppose there are a number of factors you could attribute to the poor overall attendance at New England college football games. I suppose you could blame the weather. After all, who wants to sit in the stands on a cold, breezy, bone-chilling day.

I suppose you could also blame it on the fact that there are so many college football teams in the area. In Boston alone you have BC, BU, Harvard and Northeastern. Further west you have Holy Cross and UMass, while UConn and URI are not too far away either.

Then there are those amazing Patriots, whose recent surprising success has also cut deeply into the collegiate gate. Instead of going to a couple of Saturday college games, fans are now saving their money and going to see the Patriots play.

Also there is a new spirit in the area in which the students would rather be doing something recreational, like bike riding, hiking or just playing touch football rather than just sitting in the stands and watching a football game. People want to participate more now rather than just sit back and watch somebody else play.

Or maybe New England football fans are just growing terribly apathetic. New England is completely different from the rest of the country in that football isn't the top sport of the college campuses. Basketball has now become the most popular sport on New England college scene.

Whatever the reason may be for the declining interest in college football, the competitiveness and rivalry among local teams is as great as ever, and the quality of play is reaching new heights.

No matter how poorly area fans support college football, you can rest assure the New England college football will carry on, as strong and as proud as ever.

Senate will lobby for aid

By JAMES A. NOLLET

More financial aid for UMass students is one of the issues the Undergraduate Student Senate is hoping will come up before the new session of the Massachusetts state legislature.

Susan Birmingham of the legislative committee urged students at the senate meeting Wednesday night to attend Tuesday's meeting of that committee, at which time members hope to develop a list of proposed legislation for the new session of the state legislature.

Susan Birmingham of the legislative committee urged students at the senate meeting Wednesday night to attend Tuesday's meeting of that committee, at which time members hope to develop a list of proposed legislation for the new session of the state legislature.

Bryan Harvey, communications coordinator for the student senate, says the deadline for filing legislation for consideration is early December.

The legislative committee will be working with Henry Ragin, legislative research coordinator for the student senate, to draw up a list of legislation.

Issues that might be included, according to Birmingham, include student and faculty unionization, control over activities fees, and no fee increases.

The legislative committee meeting will be Nov. 16 at 4:45 p.m. in Campus Center rm. 902. Interested students can also contact the Student Organizing Project, Birmingham said.

In other action, the senate passed a motion by Adam Auster to ask the Board of Trustees to approve its constitution.

The Wellman document, the Board of Trustee's governance document for the university, passed in April 1973, stipulates that all university governance units including the Undergraduate Student Senate, the Graduate Student Senate, the Faculty Senate, and the Professional Association of University of Massachusetts be approved by the University Board of Trustees, according to Harvey.

The request for approval now goes to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery who will take it to the board.

Student Government Association co-president Paul Cronin motioned to establish a list of UMass sophomores who are graduates of the Boston public school system. Students on the list would hopefully provide feedback to the City-wide Coordinating Council about the effects of their desegragation program.

The senate voted to send telegrams to the President and attorney general of the United States urging commutation of the prison sentence of the five Puerto Rican nationalists who were convicted of attempted murder in 1954 House of Representatives incident.

Upward Bound

Program finishes first decade

By BOB BICKFORD
Collegian Staff

This year marks the completion of the first decade of a program called Upward Bound.

The program is designed to motivate high school students from low income backgrounds who have, for one reason or another, been turned off or left behind by the educational process.

It is federally funded and reaches both urban and residential areas on a national scale. For western Massachusetts, the program is directed by Wayne Wilson. The offices are on the UMass campus, in the New Africa House. The program interacts with the university.

The program is in two phases, a summer phase and a follow up phase.

The summer phase consists of academic and social activity that help overcome learning hangups. For a student who will be returning to high school, this means a six-week period. For a student who has finished high school and has been accepted into a college, this means coming to the university and participating in college level courses.

For both, this entails an intense, well-directed learning experience. There are study periods during which tutors and counselors who have been following class assignments from the start are available for help.

During the followup phase, from May to June, the participant is back in the school system. Here, too, tutoring is available. Case workers keep tabs on each student's progress.

The objective of the program is to get students into college. According to Wilson, "The program has been pretty darn near 100 per cent successful."

Following is an interview that covers some of the problems in schools today, and some solutions:

COLLEGIAN: Why are these students turned off by education?

WILSON: There are a number of reasons. One major factor is that the schools, many of the secondary schools, have demonstrated an insensitivity, I think, not only to the needs of the poor, whether he be black, Spanish speaking or caucasian, but also to their plight. They have shown a disinterest or apathy in terms of putting forth the extra effort that might often be necessary in guiding, in directing a student to improve upon his academic situations, in hopes that he might realize a productive career. And they have in many cases, I have found, outright discouraged our students from pursuing a post secondary education. Rather, they encourage them in some cases to just drop out of school. If not by direct suggestions that they drop out, surely by their actions implied, that this is their best bet. To sever ties with education all together.

COLLEGIAN: How do you utilize the university in your program?

WILSON: We have a number of different diagnostic tests that are administered to the student during the followup phase and toward this end the university has been most cooperative with our program. Specifically we relate with communication skills..... (They administer tests that give us) a pretty good assessment of the student reading levels, skills. And we also relate with the English as a second language program on campus.

COLLEGIAN: It would seem for the Spanish-speaking population it would be just that much more difficult to get by. Not being able to communicate as well as others would compound learning problems.

WILSON: It's interesting you mention that. After the summer of '75 we did an assessment. We attempted, and successfully so, to put together a rather sophisticated bilingual education component. That component, I think, has for the most part enabled many of our Spanish-speaking students to make the kinds of strides, academically speaking, socially speaking, to enable them to be competitive in terms of being admitted or seeking admittance, to college.

COLLEGIAN: Most public schools, especially larger ones, take little or no interest in the students once they go out the door at the end of the day. If a student has a problem that is affecting his or her school work, outside the school and often within, it is no concern of theirs.

WILSON: That's right! I'm not trying to make a blanket condemnation of guidance programs in the high schools, but there is to be sure an intentional disinterest, you know, with providing the kind of

'Off the Hook'

Sparks, Allen continue debate

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

Albert Sparks, chairperson of Baroque Enterprises, defended the right of his group to show pornographic films on campus in the debate Wednesday with Charlotte Allen, Collegian commentator.

Bill Files, WMUA public affairs director and host of Wednesday's "Off the Hook" program, said the discussion drew "many more calls than we could take" from listeners, as did a similar program last month.

The initial discussion centered around the Nov. 15 referendum in Southwest to determine if students there will allow porn films to be shown in the area's Hampden Student Center.

Allen, former women's coordinator for the Collegian, said the referendum will allow the Southwest community to decide the issue in a non-elitist fashion.

Sparks, however, said he has strong reservations about the referendum; that it may be just a "political game" of sorts by the Southwest Assembly. He conceded that the referendum is a good means to determine how the people feel, but because "the Southwest Assembly has gone on record as being opposed to pornography" he is critical of its handling of the refendum.

Sparks and the SWA have been at odds over pornography since the SWA denied Baroque Enterprises permission to show "Deep Throat" in the Hampden Student Center last semester.

Allen reiterated Wednesday her position "Pornography has no place on a college campus. We're here to learn new ways...to get out of here to treat each other better."

Allen defined a pornographic movie as one "that portrays sex between people in an oppressive and non-egalitarian way."

Sparks said, "I don't really have a definition for pornography. I guesss if it was left up to me I would never label anything pornographic."

Perhaps the most interesting part of the program came from comments phoned from the audience.

One caller said that censoring pornographic films from campus is useless because "people will find another outlet." But then a next caller answered that banning porn on campus will show that "although we may not alleviate the problem, we are not trying to perpetuate it." She described herself as black and related sexism to racism.

Sparks asked her if she realized there are "alot of people on campus who want to see pornography."

She said she did but added, "There are a lot of people on campus who'd like to see pictures of black folks hanging off of trees."

On the relationship between sexism and racism, she told Sparks, "I have a hard enough time dealing with social oppresssion and class oppression. It really just behooves me to understand that there are brothers on campus that would add to my sexual oppression."

Sparks said he did not agree "that X-rated films show women in oppressive ways."

"As far as X-rated movies go, we aren't talking about the effect that X-rated movies have on women, we're talking about the effect X-rated movies have on men," he said.

"People say if a man goes to watch this movie he's going to come out with a lot of wierd ideas," he said. "I know that's a lot of bull because I don't come out with a lot of wierd ideas and if it doesn't happen to me, who can say that it's going to happen to everybody else?"

Sparks contends his organization shows pornography because of an "economic factor." He claims pornographic films gross more money than most other films. The money the group sets, Sparks said, goes to promote "cultural awareness" on campus.

He said the group is attempting to setup a radio station in Southwest, but Allen was unable to pin Sparks down to where specifically the rest of the money goes.

Sparks said the group had $700 in profits after its first semester last spring and is grossing more money from additional films this semester.

Susan Elwyn, member of the Women's Media Project, said there is a contradiction in Baroque Enterprise's stand to promote cultural awareness by showing porn films.

"We show movies that we think people will see," he said. "There's a market for X-rated movies on campus."

Projects keeping Greeks involved

By JO STEWART
Collegian Staff

Service projects are keeping Greeks involved in the area.

For one of their projects, the brothers and pledges of Delta Chi fraternity raked leaves for Mr. and Mrs. Constance J. Gilgut, an elderly couple in Amherst. It is a project they have done in the past and repeat at least once each fall, according to Pledge Counselor Paul Silver.

Silver said he got names of senior citizens from the Golden Age Club in Amherst. "They really love it," said Silver, speaking of the seniors' reaction. "One of them even wrote me a really nice letter last year to thank us."

For another project, Iota Gamma Upsilon (IGU) sorority and Sigma Phi Epsilon (Sig Ep) fraternity sponsored a Halloween party for inner city children from the Holyoke Boys Club.

Barbara Keras, IGU president, said the idea originated when three members did social work at the club last semester.

Ken Salvas, Holyoke Boys Club director, was pleased by the invitation. He said, "These kids come from a low socioeconomic class, they're different from kids who buy clothes at Bergdorf-Goodman; they're street kids and mostly come from single-parent families."

Keras said the Greeks made costumes and filled trick-or-treat bags for the children. The kids bobbed for apples and played games with the fraternity and sorority members.

O'Connor resigns as editor

Charles F. O'Connor resigned Wednesday as managing editor of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian in pursuit of greener pastures in the newspaper world.

William A. Mills, editor in chief, named Paul R. Bradley, 22, a senior majoring in journalism, to replace O'Connor. Bradley said, "I will give it my best to do the job for the remainder of the semester."

Bradley has been a Collegian staffer three years and has been active in the editorial department. Most recently he has covered political events for the Collegian and served as night manager.

O'Connor resigned as managing editor, effective yesterday, to accept the job of photocomposition foreman at the Westfield Evening News.

In a short letter to the Collegian staff, O'Connor expressed regret in resigning.

"I echo the words of many when I say that I love this place," O'Connor wrote, "If it weren't for the Collegian I would never have had the opportunity I had...I credit the Collegian in giving me this chance to crack into the crowded journalism field..."

O'Connor, 20, is in his third year at UMass. He joined the Collegian as a freshperson after graduation from Xavier High School in Middletown, Conn. He was active in the sports staff and was an issue editor before being elected managing editor in December 1975.

Mills said last night, "Chas O'Connor will be missed by the entire staff. We wish him the best of luck in his journalistic career."

O'Connor closed his resignation letter with a reference to the experience of being a Collegian staffer:

"I hope that other staffers realize that the opportunities are there for them, too, Persevere."

"This workshop will seek to improve counselling and training skills in counselling services for these three groups," said Banks.

"Follow-up workshops and lectures will be planned in the future depending upon the needs and the requests of the participants in the workshop," Banks said.

"WE DO!"

"We will have to take 'percusionary' measures, flutes. More! Yeh, Yeh!

Joining in with the cheerleader chant of "Be Aggressive," waiting until the third quarter of a 20 degree football game for a cup of hot chocolate, practicing in the treacherous, muddy, rainy, windy intramural fields until it's pitch black out — through all of this, the UMass Marching Band manages to maintain their enthusiasm, if not their sanity.

It doesn't make any difference if one is at Alumni Stadium at UMass or the Harvard, Holy Cross or URI stadiums. One cannot leave a football game without being impressed by the band.

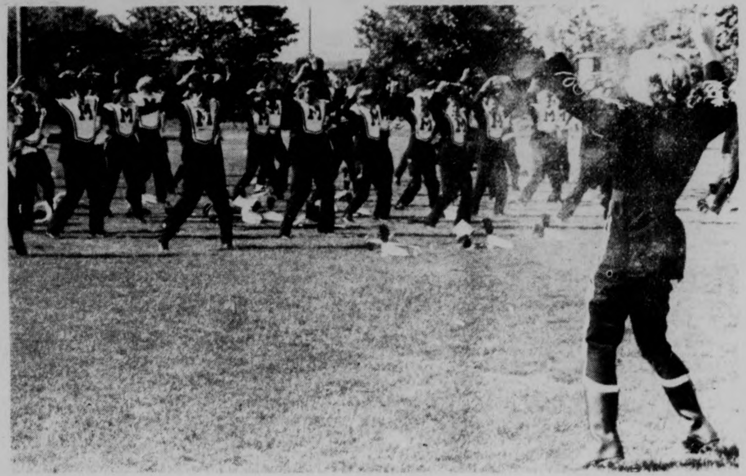
"The greatest compliment I could give the band," said Dick McPherson, head football coach, "is that the football players always know when they are there and appreciate them."

"If the band plays better, we play better and it helps to win. The band really appreciates it when we play well and vice-versa. We know they are as dedicated to their sport as we are and we both try to promote the image of Mass on the road. The only thing is that neither one of us is too demonstrative of this feeling. But when we go to the away games without the band, we really miss them," said McPherson.

Who else but the 190 assorted marching band members would get up at 7 a.m. in the morning, upset the serene UMass Saturday morning with loud bustling, climb aboard a Peter Pan bus, spend a whole day either marching, playing, or thinking about football and return to Old Chapel at 9 p.m. the same night?

Is there another assemblage that would practice approximately eight hours a week for a 10 minute halftime show and receive in return one academic credit, 15 minutes for lunch before the Saturday game, and perhaps a standing ovation if the opposing and or home team crowd appreciates the show?

If you thought that the only team that did calisthenics on Saturdays was the football team, think again. Everyone in the marching band, including the twirlers, flag bearers, both male and female, role up their pantlegs and do 25 jumping jacks, knee bends, and running in place steps before the mandatory Saturday morning practice.



"It is impossible to conceive of this band running without the student leadership," said John Jenkinds, Director of University Bands, while drum leader Mike Spencer led the band in 20 pushups.

"I think the whole band gets psyched for the away games", said band manager Joanne Brown. "I myself like the bus trips. It's a chance to be rowdy with your friends and still put on a good show. We're all tired emotionally and physically but I think we feel it's worth it."

Daniel M. Melley, Director of UMass Public Affairs, in a letter to John Jenkins, commended the band for its excellent performance at the Harvard Game earlier in the season. The game was the first time since 1972 the UMass marching band was shown on nationwide television.

"I was at the Harvard Game last Saturday and I thought the UMass Marching Band did a fantastic job," said Melley. "I know the long hours of hard work that go into putting on such a polished performance and it was evident to me that the band was as 'up' for the game as the team. The Battle of the Bands was no contest, you won hands down."

The Harvard audience may be described as one of the rudest football crowds in New England. The Harvard band displayed rudeness by leading the crowd in a chant of "boring, boring" while the UMass band was doing the opening of the half time show.

But by the end of the show, the capacity Harvard stadium stood up and gave a one minute standing ovation to the UMass band.

"This does not mean that we are criticizing Harvard. They just do things differently. It's alright because it's their stadium," said Jenkins.

"For a band that hasn't been on national television recently to do a high quality show in front of all those television cameras and with all the nervous tension that national exposure gives, I think they showed a great deal of committment and enthusiasm," Jenkins said.

The band also received ovations at URI and Holy Cross, although the ovation at URI was more subdued.

"I think the UMass band is a professional marching band and they play well, but our band with its colonial uniforms, and the quality of music that a band which is much smaller than UMass puts out should also be commended," said two URI spectators.

The Holy Cross road trip a week ago saw a reversal of what happened two years ago. Previously a somewhat belligerent Crusader crowd threw objects at the band which resulted in a police escort. But last week, the Minuteman marching band was treated to a thunderous standing ovation after the halftime show of "Get Up and Boogie," Elton John's "Island Girl," and the theme of "2001."

Percussionist Dave Mould said, "We turned their opinion around and that was the part I liked the best. They, like the Harvard crowd, were cheering to hear us again."

Sophomore Frank Campbell, a clarinetist, feels the best part of the road games is competing with the other bands even though he doesn't like the thought of spending 13 hours committed to a band.

"You really have to get psyched up for the game the night before. When you go out on the field, you can't make a mistake. You have to know what responsibilities are. But the crowd can really feel like its worth it," said Cambell.

Lori Caron feels the best part of the day in addition to the halftime show is eating out at either McDonalds, Bonanza, or the Kings Inn in Rhode Island.

"I don't care too much for the Dining Commons box lunches but the bus trip, the game, and the meal afterwards makes up for it," she said.

The Marching Band set a Bonanza record by serving 175 band members in a mere 47 minutes.

Several of the band members interviewed said that although football wasn't their number one interest for joining the band, the excitement of the game and the UMass team makes the games worth seeing.

"If the team wasn't hindered by the injuries and the stupid mistakes, I think the team could do much better," said baritone horn player, Dave Monroe.

The UMass marching band is recognized in New England and the East Coast as one of the best bands in the area. To be in the band requires four essential characteristics: coordination, discipline, determination, and enthusiasm.

It also requires that you don't mind doing jumping jacks, pushups, muddy rainy fields to practice on and 15 minutes for lunch.

"Block band formation in one minute," said drum major Mike Spencer. "Get with it!"

A treat at Steak Out

By KATHE SANDLER

Sulaiman Hakim, Chris Henderson, Art Mathews, Alex Lane and Butch Campbell are the forces which generate the sounds of "Unity Ensemble". Last week the group played at Steak Out accompanied by a young dance phenonemon by the name of Lori Cabrera. Semenya McCord added her vocal splendor to the Ensemble and the combination was simply beautiful.

Sulaiman Hakim, sax and reeds player of the group, rapped briefly about the Ensemble and his thoughts on how its concepts should be applied:

"We bring our interpretation of the music of the masters like Duke Ellington, Lee Morgan, John Coltrane and Miles Davis. And each member of the group brings in their own original work of their own experience to feed each other.

"This is why we're called the "Unity Ensemble," not the "Ego-Trip Ensemble." No one person in the group is the star. If you take one person in the group away, then the Ensemble can't function.

"The concept of the Unity Ensemble should be applied to whatever field you're in because it is time for Black people to look at ourselves as a unit, instead of individuals and start making a direction for the children after us."

On the Belchertown Bus Route

NEW YORK: Alexander Calder, internationally known artist and inventor of the mobile, died yesterday in New York. Calder is shown here attending the dedication of his 40-ton stabile "Stagosaurus".

'Father' of moving art dies amid world acclaim

NEW YORK (AP) — Alexander Calder, whose mobiles gave motion and a new dimension to American sculpture, died at dawn yesterday at a daughter's Greenwich Village home. He was 78.

Calder was at the height of his artistic prowess and was riding the crest of a worldwide wave of acclaim.

A monumental exhibition, "Calder's Universe," was on display here at the Whitney Museum of American Art; universities, governments and private collectors around the globe were showering him with commissions, and a book, also called "Calder's Universe," had just been published.

Indicative of Calder's universality, he flew to Philadelphia — his home town — two weeks ago for ceremonies in his honor aboard a Braniff jet whose wild color scheme he had designed.

Calder thought the idea "great fun."

He also designed toys, jewelry, kitchen utensils, rugs, tapestries and fountains.

His first major public work was a fountain — of mercury cascading over welded strings of gunshot — which he designed to stand in front of his friend Picasso's "Guernica" at the Paris World's Fair of 1937.

He was "the first American modernist working in any medium to impose himself on the history of art as an artist of worldwide importance and to be universally recognized as such," said a spokesman for the Museum of Modern Art which gave him his first major show back in 1943.

IRS releases new 1040 forms along with change in procedure

WASHINGTON (AP) — If you thought it was tough filling out your income tax form last year, wait until you see the new 1040.

The Internal Revenue Service released copies of the new tax form yesterday with a message from IRS Commissioner Donald C. Alexander that "completing your return this year could be more difficult."

The new 1040 has about half a dozen differences from the 1975 form with the major change requiring all taxpayers to turn to mathematical skills to compute taxable income. This one change alone has IRS preparing to look for more arithmetic mistakes by taxpayers than last year, according to an IRS spokesman.

There were a number of changes also in the short form, 1040A, released several weeks ago.

In the past, many taxpayers using form 1040 had only to total up all of their income to arrive at an adjusted gross income figure and then refer to special tables to read their tax bills.

But the 1976 Tax Reform Act has replaced that system with one that requires all taxpayers to find their adjusted gross incomes in one of several steps. Then they subtract either standard or itemized deductions, and personal exemptions, to find what is known as taxable income before determining what the tax bill is

Navy recovers sunken jet

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Navy said yesterday it finally has managed to get its sunken F14 Tomcat jet fighter to the surface of the North Atlantic after more than a month of trying — but still does not consider it safely recovered.

The plane, which rolled off the deck of the carrier John F. Kennedy in a pre-takeoff accident Sept. 14, has been a bit of an embarrassment to the Navy. Officials originally said the recovery would be accomplished quickly, but technical and weather problems caused three failures in attempts to raise it.

Spokesmen said the F14 now is on the surface in about 150 feet of water about four miles from the entrance to Westray Firth in Scotland's Orkney Islands. They said it was being towed into the sheltered waters for efforts to lift it to the deck of the German salvage ship Taurus.

Civilian "hard hat" divers had to be hired to complete the final cable hookup to bring the plane to the surface, replacing Navy SCUBA divers, spokesmen said.

Burns predicts inflation drop if moderate policy is followed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Chairman Arthur Burns said yesterday the Federal Reserve Board intends to hold to its moderate monetary policies, believing the nation's economy will pick up "in the near future."

Burns also told the Senate Banking Committee he thinks the inflation rate will drop to around 5 per cent next year, with the Gross National Product rising by 6 per cent.

Chairman William Proxmire, D-Wis., said the board's moderate money expansion course, in the face of continued high unemployment, was making fiscal expansion by Congress "inevitable."

But Burns said that policy was "not frozen in concrete. It's subject to reconsideration by a vigilant board."

He said the velocity by which the nation's money supply is expanded — the chief function of the Federal Reserve Board — "depends very heavily on the state of confidence" in the economy among consumers and business.

Burns testified that present policies would "facilitate a good expansion in economic activity without aggravating in any way the troublesome problems of inflation.

"All in all, it seems entirely reasonable to expect a pickup in the tempo of economic activity in the near future. Certainly, conditions in financial markets remain conducive to continue economic expansion.

"The recovery has proceeded in an orderly fashion, and there have been few signs of the speculative excesses that often develop in the course of a business-cycle expansion."

Warning against "loose fiscal policies" that could spur renewed inflation, Burns said, "Continued progress in unwinding inflation must remain a major objective of public policy, along with re-establishment of reasonably full employment and reasonably full utilization of our industrial capacity.

"The principal contribution that the Federal Reserve can now make to the achievement of our nation's basic economic objectives is to adhere to a course of moderation in monetary policy."

Oil price hike rumors send US into action

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States is consulting urgently with other industrialized countries on ways to head off an anticipated oil price increase next month, a State Department spokesman said yesterday.

Some oil cartel countries favor an increase of 10 per cent or more but spokesman Robert Funseth said any price hike would hurt exporting countries as well as imports.

"They are part of the world economy as well," Funseth said.

He said the United States has been in close consultation with Japan and the western European countries on ways to persuade the oil countries to forego a price hike when they meet at Qatar.

These countries have cited international inflation to justify an increase but Funseth said the fourfold increase imposed by the cartel since 1973 more than compensates for the higher import costs to them.

Funseth said even a 5 per cent price hike would add $6 billion to the global import bill.

He refused comment on a report yesterday that high administration officials want to tell Iran that an oil price increase would lead to reconsideration or the U.S. arm sales program to Iran.

'21' club strips old tradition

NEW YORK (UPI) — Manhattan's famous "21" Club has finally broken its long tradition of having only male waiters and, effective next week, Jeanne King will be 21's first "wait person" handling the two warm spoons at tableside.

"We're perfectly delighted to have her," said Sheldon Tannen, 21's executive vice president Thursday. "We're delighted to hire any bus person or wait person who's eager to join the profession."

From his choice of words, it is clear that Tannen is a convert to feminism, but apparently not without a little friendly persuasion from the American Civil Liberties Union.

If Ms. King had not been hired, 21 would have joined a handful of New York's other best restaurants on the uncomfortable side of an ACLU sex discrimination suit. But 21 agreed to hire her and make "affirmative efforts" to recruit more women to help get keep the sauce printemps on the plate and off the tie.

WASHINGTON: Arthur F. Burns, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, testifies before the Senate Banking Committee on his intention to hold the FED to its moderate monetary policies. Burns said that present policies would "facilitate a good expansion in economic activity......"

Carter ends vacation 'ready to go to work'

PLAINS, Ga. (AP) — Jimmy Carter came home from his post-election vacation yesterday "ready to go to work" on his transition to the presidency.

And Patrick Caddell, his chief pollster, said Carter's victory margin last week would have been greater had he agreed to staff urgings that he exploit public anger over President Ford's pardon of former President Richard M. Nixon. Other polls also have found that the pardon of Nixon cost Ford votes.

While Carter made virtually no mention of the pardon during the campaign, it was criticized several times by his running mate, Sen. Walter F. Mondale.

Caddell said Ford's mistake during the second debate when he said Eastern Europe was not dominated by the Soviet Union did not hurt the President much in terms of lost votes. But Caddell said it was "crucial" in slowing Ford's increasing momentum and threw off the timing of his campaign.

Throngs of school children waved flags at Carter as he left his vacation retreat on St. Simons Island off the south Georgia coast. Boarding his chartered jet airliner, Carter told reporters, "I'm tired of vacation, I'm ready to go to work."

When his airplane landed at Albany, Ga., Carter loaded his own bags into the trunk of his car and then shook hands with a welcoming crowd of 500 or more.

During his five-day vacation, Carter got through two-thirds of the 18-inch-high stack of papers which his staff had prepared to brief him on the transition to power. Carter is now ready to begin picking a White House staff, a Cabinet and other high federal officials and setting policy directions.

At a news briefing later, Carter's press secretary Jody Powell said the President-elect "does not believe it would be productive or proper" to comment at this time on a proposal from several senators that Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger be retained in a Carter administration as a special diplomatic envoy to deal with the problems of the Mideast.

Watergate figure assigned job in prison camp

SAFFORD, Ariz. (UPI) — John Ehrlichman, a key figure in the Watergate scandals, has been assigned a permanent job in the power plant at the minimum security federal prison camp here, it was disclosed yesterday.

Ehrlichman entered the facility Oct. 28 to begin serving a 2½-to 8-year prison term. He was the first of three major Watergate figures to enter prison.

Prison Superintendent John Hadden said Ehrlichman wanted the job which the prison official described as a "very technical and responsible position. One of the most difficult in the camp."

Hadden said 12 to 14 men generally are assigned to the steam and hot water generating station and have the responsibility of watching various machinery and adjusting gauges when necessary.

Hadden said the power house jobs are held by both white-collar criminals and Mexican nationals, who make up the majority of the 350 prisoners at the camp, but he said all speak English.

Daytime power plant workers work eight-hour shifts while the night crew works only four hours at a time. Hadden said Ehrlichman would rotate through all the shifts so he could learn all the duties.

Hadden said Ehrlichman had adjusted well to prison life but was still refusing the many requests for interviews.

The power plant, which has boilers powered by natural gas, serves only the prison. Hadden said emergency generators are being installed so the camp would have its own electric supply when it was needed.

Insurance ripoffs cited

BOSTON (UPI) — The president of the 32,000-member Association of Trial Lawyers of America said yesterday casualty insurance companies are ripping off the American public trying to recoup enormous stock market loses.

Robert Began of Phoenix, Ariz., in Boston for a three-day association meeting, said in an interview the insurance firms display the "conscience of a barracuda" by refusing to continue malpractice insurance for doctors and increasing premiums "without any justification."

"The plain truth is that nothing is being done to stop them. They are ripping off the consumer in the United States recouping $10 billion they lost on Wall Street," Began said. He said the loses occurred in he 18 months between January of 1973 and July 1974.

He claimed that United States casualty insurance firms collected $34 million in premiums during 1974 but paid out in claims "considerably less than that" during the same year and then "cried out they were losing a fortune when they were not."

Began said "we live in the age of consumerism" and defended the rights of Americans to continue suing doctors and lawyers for malpractice and manufacturers for injuries caused by faulty products.

"They, the insurance companies, have awesome power," Began said. He said one way to combat their "ruthlessness" is for doctors to continue to form their own insurance companies as is the instance in New York City where "physicians got themselves out of the grasp of insurance companies."

He said it is unfair for insurance companies to blame attorneys for causing the medical malpractice insurance crisis by urging patients to sue.

No bang on Veterans day

BOSTON (AP) — Following the federal holiday by two weeks, Massachusetts honored Veterans Day yesterday but the celebrations came off like an afterthought.

Less than 1,000 spectators, according to police, braved chilling winds to watch rows of men in khaki march through Boston streets for the coldest Veterans Day parade in recent memory.

No statewide officals were on the State House reviewing stand, draped with red, white and blue bunting beneath the glistening gold dome. Five National Guard officers represented the commonwealth as the troops marched by.

In Brief

Harvard's drum swiped by Yale

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (UPI) — A missing seven-foot drum stolen from the Harvard marching band has turned up just where you'd expect it — at Yale.

Eli students owned up to the alleged "drumnapping" but said the drum had been kept at Harvard "against its will" and should be granted "political asylum" at the New Haven campus.

Of course it was all part of the traditional hijinks preceding "The Game," the annual encounter between the Yale and Harvard football squads. The game is Saturday in Boston.

A group of Yalies calling themselves "The Punkits," Wednesday claimed credit for the drum's temporary change of address and promised to return it to the Crimson soon.

Deer hunt begins

MONTPELIER, Vt. (UPI) — About 140,000 deer hunters are expected take to the woods Saturday as the 16-day, $20 million season begins, Fish and Game Commissioner Edward Kehoe said yesterday.

Kehoe said about 10,000 male deer will be killed in the season and around 4,500 in the first four days if the weather is favorable.

"If I could call it today, I'd say we should have a good kill," he said.

Supreme Court will decide on auto license motto

CONCORD, N.H. (UPI) — The U.S. Supreme Court will hear oral arguments Nov. 29 in the case involving a Claremont couple who say New Hampshire's state motto on licenses plates violates their religious freedom.

Lawyers for George and Maxine Maynard will ask the court to uphold a federal court ruling which allowed the couple to tape over the "Live Free or Die" motto on their license plates.

The Maynards have covered the motto with red reflector tape because of their religious beliefs as Jehovah's Witnesses. Officials in the sect say the Maynards technically are not members.

The case involves both consititutional and procedural issues, according to David DePuy, lawyer for the couple. The Maynards contend their action is protected by the 1st Amendment.

DePuy said the Supreme Court will also be asked to approve the couple's decision to take the case directly from the state District Court level to the federal court.

George Maynard was convicted in Lebanon District Court Dec. 6, 1974 on the charge of misuse of license plates and given a suspended sentence.

Britain called on to act for Rhodesia's transition

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania [AP] — President Julius Nyerere has called on Britain to assume more direct responsibility for Rhodesia's changeover to black majority rule by naming Britons to serve on ministers of defense and foreign affairs in the interim period.

Nyerere said in an interview with The Associated Press that this would settle one of the toughest problems facing the Geneva conference on Rhodesia — control of the Rhodesian army.

The Tanzanian president said Britain, as the legal colonial power in Rhodesia, also should provide the two ministers until the transition period is completed.

But "internal affairs" — meaning control of the police — "would, of course, be the responsibility of the local, the interim government," Nyerere declared in the interview Wednesday.

Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith has insisted that both the army and the police be controlled by white Rhodesians during the interim period.

He mentioned Rhodesia's recent incursions into Mozambique to attack black nationalist guerrilla bases there and accused South Africa and Rhodesia of mounting other "acts of provocation" against Zambia, Angola and Botswana.

Nyerere asserted that "Tanzania's independence is linked with the independence of the other front-line states.... Tanzanian troops will be used if the independence of Mozambique, Zambia, etc. is threatened. That is what the front-line presidents' communique said and we mean what we say."

New rule tips power structure in India

NEW DELHI, India [AP] — The Indian parliament yesterday completed passage of an historic constitutional amendment stiffening the executive clout of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's government.

With about a dozen opposition members sitting out in protest, the upper house voted 191-0 to give the government the sweeping new authority it had requested to rule this nation of 610 million people.

The amendment will become law after receiving the anticipated endorsement of a majority of India's 22 state assemblies.

Passage of the amendment capped the series of dramatic and seemingly permanent changes implemented by Mrs. Gandhi in the 17 months since she proclaimed a national emergency and curtailed individual rights and press freedom.

Four major non-Communist opposition parties, boycotting the current special legislative session, labeled the amendment "a blueprint for dictatorship." They contended that it would clear way for the final dismantling of the democratic institutions embodied in India's 26-year-old charter.

The opposition cited the recent decision to postpone national elections for at least another year as proof that the Mrs. Gandhi has no intention of restoring soon the political processes which had allowed India to call itself "the largest democracy in the world."

During months of public discussions and the last two weeks of parliamentary debate, however, the government has staunchly denied that the amendment and the decision to postpone elections represent a blow to Indian democracy.

"What is being done is not at all to destroy democracy, but to maintain and protect that democracy," Law Minister H.R. Gokhale told the lower house prior to its 366-4 approval of the amendmeet last week.

Gokhale, who piloted the bill through both houses, said: "We have said repeatedly that this country would not deviate from the path of democracy."

Mrs. Gandhi, present for the final vote, herself rose during the debate earlier this week to chastize the opposition for not cooperating and to deny that she has led India to one-party authoritarian rule.

Sadat announces party decision

CAIRO, Egypt [UPI] — President Anwar Sadat said yesterday he is transforming the three wings of the Arab Socialist Union into independent political parties "effective today."

Sadat announced the decision in a policy speech opening the newly elected parliament. It meant the revival of independent political parties for the first time in 14 years.

The move was a reversal of Sadat's previous position that the creation of independent political parties must await a settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

It was in January, 1953, six months after the late President Gamal Abdel Nasser led a military coup which toppled the monarchy, that independent polical parties was banned, making the government-controlled ASU Egypt's only legal political organization.

China calls Soviet leader a 'liar'

HONG KONG [UPI] — China has attacked Soviet Communist party leader Leonid Brezhnev by name, calling him a liar, in a verbal attack on the Kremlin leadership signaling that there has been no thaw in Sino-Soviet relations.

The unusual personal criticism of Brezhnev followed reports from diplomats in Moscow last week who were quoted as saying they saw faint signs that China might be making a positive response to Soviet overtures for better relations.

However, a high level Chinese official told a group of French journalists only days ago, "Some of our foreign friends now believe that the Soviet Union is holding out an olive branch to China. This is no olive branch. It is a poison arrow."

A commentary published by the official New China News Agency calling Brezhnev a liar and Soviet leaders "the new tsars" appeared to confirm that the 20-year-old dispute between China and the Soviet Union will continue.

NCNA said the Soviet Union was attempting "to dominate Africa by force of arms.

As an example, NCNA cited the Soviet decision to supply arms to Cuban "mercenaries" who fought in the Angolan civil war.

"The Soviet revisionists poured into Angola large quantities of arms and thousand upon thousands of Soviet 'military advisers' and mercenaries," it said.

"This newly independent country was thus plunged into a bloodbath under the gunfire of the new tsars. and over 100,000 Angolan people were killed."

The black guerrilla faction backed by Cubans and Soviet weapons won the civil war and established a government that maintained close ties with Moscow.

"Brezhnev is also lying when he said that 'we seek there no gain for ourselves,'" the Chinese news agensy said.

"The enslavement and plunder of the Angolan people by the new tsars are facts known to all.

On Sunday, China's National People's Congress sent a message to Moscow offering "warm congratulations" to the Soviet people on the anniversary of the 1917 Bolshevik Revolution

Arabs, Soviets pressure Israel in UNESCO general conference

NAIROBI, Kenya (UPI) — Arab states and the Soviet Union brought new pressure against Israel yesterday at the general conference of the U.N. Educational Scientific and Cultural Organization.

The Arabs circulated a resolution condemning Israel for alleged cultural and educational violations in occupied Arab territories and urged UNESCO's director general to send a fact finding mission to the area as soon as possible.

According to both eastern and western sources, the Soviets were also lobbying privately in an apparent new effort to block Israel's acceptance into UNESCO's European region later in the meeting.

The two-page Arab draft resolution condemned "all violations by Israel of the rights of the populations" living in Arab occupied lands.

Israel gained control of some Jordanian, Egyptian and Syrian territory during the 1967 Middle East war.

The Arab resolution called on director general Amadou-Mahtar M'Bow to send a mission to investigate cultural and educational conditions and made a "final urgent appeal to Israel" to correct the situation.

Arab and other delegates described it as a "mild" draft with a good chance of approval with minor modifications. Israeli sources rejected it out of hand.

"The Arabs are passing a verdict again before the trial," one Israeli source said. "They are arrived at conclusions even before a mission is sent."

Israel agreed for the first time earlier this year to allow a UNESCO mission to visit the area. But conference sources said they were now worried Israel might withdraw its invitation if the Arab resolution is adopted.

Liberties union sues law agencies on park raid

BURLINGTON Vt. (UPI) — The American Civil Liberties Union yesterday filed a $1.1 million civil suit against state and federal law enforcement agencies for a 1975 raid on Earth People's Park, a controversial alternative community in the Canadian border town of Norton.

The suit was filed in U.S. district Court by the Vermont chapter of the ACLU, on behalf of Earth People's Park resident William Schoneberger.

Two FBI agents, four state troopers, two Customs Agents, two U.S. Immigration officers, two Essex County sheriff's deputies and the federal government were named as defendents.

A score of heavily armed lawmen swooped down on the park in the early morning hours of Oct. 7, 1975, following a series of incidents and confrontations between park residents, police and local farmers.

The ACLU suit maintained the raiding party — without permission, a warrant or probable cause — illegally searched Schoneberger's home at the park, roughed him up and confiscated a rifle.

That action, the ACLU charged, subjected Schoneberger to "unconstitutional and illegal search, seizure and invasion of privacy; to assault, battery, false arrest and detention; to fear for his physical safety and mental anguish, and to unlawful trespass on his property."

After breaking a window in Schoneberger's trailer home, lawmen pointed a gun at his head, handcuffed him and warned, "don't move or you'll get it," according to the ACLU suit.

"One member of the task force yanked the plaintiff around by his hair, showing his face to another member of the task force, who could not identify him," the suit charged.

After he produced identification, the raiding party allegedly left his home.

The suit seeks $100,000 in damages and $1 million in punitative action.

Earth People's Park was established in 1970 by a private, non-profit California-based corporation as an alternative community, open to everyone.

N. Ireland turnabout

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (UPI) — A coalition of extremist Protestant paramilitary organizations yesterday made an about-face, proposing a 10-year phase-out of British rule and an independent Northern Ireland.

The organizations, which have been among the most strident supporters of British rule in Ulster, said at a news conference the 10-year period would give Protestant and Catholic communities time to plan a new government.

The nine paramilitary organizations included the Ulster Volunteer Force and the Red Hand Commandos, thought by police to be responsible for a majority of the sectarian assassinations and bombings carried out by Protestants.

The coalition offered to talk with the Provisional Irish Republican Army if it ends its campaign of violence.

A document, produced by the coalition's coordinating committee, suggested the country be governed by a parliament of 100 members with a cabinet made up of the most talented politicians of both parties.

The document suggested the cabinet include members of the Catholic Social Democratic Labor party whose first task would be to draft a bill of rights to protect minority interests.

The Protestant groups also want Britain to pay the new nation $480 million during its first 15 years to finance a police force and army.

Prime Minister won't quit

LONDON (UPI) — Prime Minister James Callaghan said Thursday he will not quit despite two defeats for his Labor government in Parliament and the loss of two seats in recent by-elections.

"I intend that we shall go on governing," government officials said Callaghan told his cabinet in a crisis meeting.

"The government will not be deflected from its strategy by recent setbacks in the Commons and in by-elections special elections," Callaghan was quoted as saying.

The Labor government was hit by humiliating parliamentary defeats early yesterday that left a major part of its legislative program in ruins.

Officials said Callaghan received unanimous cabinet endorsement for refusing to consider quitting in a meeting with his ministers before leaving for summit talks in France with President Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

The officials said Callaghan made it clear he did consider parliamentary confidence in his Labor government was involved in the voting.

The government was defeated twice in the House of Commons shortly after midnight on a bill that would give longshoremen monopoly rights over other workers to handle cargo within five miles of any major seaport.

Labor maintains a one vote majority over the combined opposition's 315 votes in the House of Commons.

Storm throws crew in sea

HONOLULU (UPI) — A 33-man crew abandoned the lumber ship Carnelian-1 in 40-foot Pacific seas and 50-knot winds, 1,400 miles northwest of Honolulu.

Minutes afterwards, a Navy P3 plane arrived on the scene and reported some men were in lifeboats and some were in frigid water trying to get aboard the boats.

The survivors struggled among a mass of floating logs which had been the ship's cargo.

Having located the site, the Navy plane was in position to direct two C130 rescue planes enroute from Alaska.

A Coast Guard spokesperson said all the Navy plane "can do is stay overhead." The spokesperson doubted the Navy plane had much rescue equipment to drop.

A Norwegian freighter, the 548-foot Jalanta in the area, changed course so as to arrive about 1 a.m. Hawaiian time today. Diversion of another freighter, the Hunter, 218 miles away was canceled because its own cargo of logs was being shifted back and forth by the storm.

The Carnelian is a 486-foot lumber and log vessel of Panamanian registry.

Its trouble was signaled about three hours before the abandonment Mayday messages saying the Carnelian's log cargo was knocked overboard by a severe storm.

Then the master said one of the holds and engine room were flooded and warned he could keep afloat only another two hours. Later the radio operator said he was leaving his post to stand by the lifeboats.

Groppi becomes bus driver

MILWAUKEE (UPI) — James E. Groppi, the former Catholic priest known nationally for a series of civil rights marches in the 1960's, will become a full time bus driver here next week.

Groppi, 45, was excommunicated after he married in April.

He has been training for the bus job with the Milwaukee County Transit System the past three weeks.

"Right now, the bus will be my church and the people who board it my parishioners," he said.

"I still consider myself first and always a Catholic priest, regardless of what others think of me. Once ordained, you're ordained forever."

Vale on rent control

To the Editor:

The Off Campus Housing Office strongly urges all students who are registered voters in the town of Amherst to vote in the November 16 referendum on rent control. We are urging all students to vote, not only those who are living off campus now, because the referendum will affect students who are planning to live in Amherst during the summer months as well as those who may be seniors living off campus in the near future.

We strongly suggest that all students take part in workshops focusing on the rent control referendum during the week.

Streetsinging

To the Editor:

For about two years I have been streetsinging on the UMass campus, and enjoyed it all. I have made many new friends, shared some great songs and ideas, and had the pleasure of seeing a smile creep onto the face of many a harried student.

My stint as the Amherst contingent of the Boston Streetsinger's Cooperative has been a pleasurable one, but has come to an end. In a couple of weeks I will be leaving the Amherst area, and would like to thank you all for the support, the apples, the bananas, the rose....

And let me extend an invitation to you all to come to the Coffeehouse in the Commuter Lounge of the Student Union on Sunday, to join Steve Baird and myself for an evening of fun and song. Until the next time......

Peace.

Sex discrimination or not?

To the Editor:

It's time now for the University to systematically determine whether or not sex discrimination really exists. The University Affirmative Action Coordinators and a committee of other involved individuals are presently in the process of "Title IX Self Evaluation."

Title IX states that: "No person shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving federal financial assistance...". The Self-Evaluation presently in process is designed to discover whether, where, and how sex discrimination occurs.

Part of the self-evaluation procedure involves holding a series of public hearings before each department's hearing. These hearings are to be held for several reasons: to examine and discuss issues relevant to sex discrimination on campus pertaining particularly to the department in question [the first will be the Public Safety department]; to gather information which will be excluded in examination of the department's compliance with Title IX; and to solicit input, ideas, information and comments from all interested members of the University community. Written documents concerning sex discrimination in the department in question will be accepted up to three days prior to each hearing by Lisa Grant in 350 Whitmore, or Steve Austin in 229 Whitmore.

The first public hearing, concerning the status of the Public Safety department, will be held Monday, November 15, from 12:00 to 2:00 in room 904, Campus Center. All interested and concerned people are urged to attend.

One sided conversation

By KEVIN KNOBLOCH

Item: Department of Public Utilities calls New England Telephone 'arrogant and unfair'.

Surprise! Once again a long range study (the DPU began investigating N.E. Telephone in July, 1975) has revealed something to the public it has known since Alexander spilled acid on himself. The telephone company in this area, and I'm sure this isn't only a regional problem, plays a one-sided game with the customers it services.

According to the DUP report, customers who are considered poor credit risks are allowed a minimal 15 or 18 days to pay their bill, while a 45-day period is allocated to most other customers. You Economics majors may view this as smart business practice, but somehow the logic escapes me when those least able to pay a phone bill are given the least amount of time to do it.

The DPU report also complains that service representatives of New England Telephone (NET) have virtually uncontrolled authority to cut off and restore service, decide who constitutes a poor risk, and who must pay a security deposit.

In dealing with the phone company I offer myself as an example. During my two and a half years at the University my phone bills have not exactly been small. But one way or another they have managed to get paid, sometimes before the deadline, sometimes a little after. Nevertheless I have treated Ma Bell well.

My bill for the month of September arrived on October 10, amounting to the princely sum of $40.18. The deadline for payment was set for October 26. Apparently I am considered a poor risk, only allowed sixteen days in which to raise forty bucks, money I did not have.

On October 29 I received a further statement informing me that "payment in full or acceptable arrangements must be made in order to avoid interruption of service." I had until Nov. 5 to comply. The charge for reinstatement of service is $15.00 for the first ten days and $22.50 thereafter. On Nov. 3 I called the number given to me on the bill to discuss "acceptable arrangements." A switchboard operator switched me to the proper line and a woman answered.

"Hello, I'm a student at the University ... bla, bla, bla ... and I'm calling to find out if we couldn't work out some sort of payment plan, for example ten dollars a week ... "

"Well ... standard procedure is to pay by the deadline ... (pause), I'm sorry but you'll have to pay by Friday (Nov. 5) or your service will be discontinued."

"But ... there's no way I could have the money to you by then."

"In that case I can mark your slip here that you will mail your payment on Friday and we will expect it Monday."

An so on and so on. If you are waiting for a punch line there is none. She never heard a thing I said and my pleas were wasted. I didn't pay my bill and my phone was disconnected.

Today I learned two things about NET and its attitudes towards customers. People dealing with the phone company usually speak with a woman because NET assumes that women are more pleasant and charming than men. Secondly, service representatives, most of whom are women, are regularly monitored as they talk to customers to make sure they do their job by the book.

Many of you readers may view my attitude as one of misplaced concern and that I am at fault for running up such high bills. But look at the ramifications of the customer-corporation relations that have been reported.

The DPU's comment describing NET as "unjust, unreasonable, and inadequate" when dealing with customers if far too mild. The telephone is a vital necessity as well as a conveniency in today's hectic life, and treating this service as a privilege can only lead to potential danger.

I will even put aside my personal feelings about the incredulous monopoly over our private lives that the phone company indulges in, the outrageous fees they charge for basic monthly service, long distance phone calls (especially calls within the state), security deposits, and installation charges, and speculation over the $3 billion profit AT&T nets annually (NET is a division of AT&T, the largest corporation in the world.

At large and impersonal as it is, there remains no reason why personal contact and policy towards the public it supposedly serves should be taken lightly. AT&T knows full well the power of controlling communication that it holds in its grasp, and by exercising this power, the safety and rights of all individuals are threatened.

Exxon knows what's best... for Exxon

A blue-ribbon committee appointed by the directors of Exxon has decided not to prosecute executives who poured $59 million of company funds into the treasures of Italian political parties.

The committee cited damage to morale, high legal costs and "improbability of success" as contrary to the company's best interests.

Ruling on a shareholder's appeal, a federal district court judge agreed. (LNS).

A new type of club

By RICHARD CAPLAN

It seems to me that people have been wasting a lot of time lately. In case you wonder what I mean, consider the local clubs and discos around town. Everytime you enter one of these places you've got a certain goal on your mind (thanks to A. Adler) and, of course, each person you contact has some goal on their mind.

The first step, then, is to find someone who will fulfill your goal. This involves many wasteful moments of actually having to talk to someone to see if you can make some kind of subliminal contract for the evening. The problems begin when someone misrepresents him or herself or takes advantage of your position as one in search of satisfaction.

Therefore, I propose a different type of club with a more open and honest atmosphere.

The first type of these clubs will be simply for the physical types and the name of the place would be "SATISFACTION".

The procedure would be simple. At the door, while you're showing your I.D. and paying your money, you'll also be asked what you want out of the evening. Then you'll wear a colored ribbon attached to an obvious part of your body that will tell all who want to know, what you're after. Different colors will have different meanings.

Red ribbons (of course), mean you're there to get laid and that's all there is to it.

Blue ribbons mean you want to get laid but you'll settle for something less as long as you get your jollies.

Green ribbons mean you just want to see what kind of underwear your partner is wearing and maybe touch a few forbidden places.

Yellow ribbons mean you just want to fantasize about what could happen.

White ribbons mean you just want to talk so keep your hands off. And no ribbon at all means you're just there to dance.

With this system in order, people who want the same things can find each other easier and with less strees on everyone involved.

The second basic type of club would be a little more complex. This club would be called "THE HANG-UP" or something comparable to that, and would operate on much the same basis as the first club only the ribbons would have a different meaning.

Red ribbons mean you're going to reject everyone you see just because it makes you feel good.

Red and white striped ribbons means you're looking for someone to reject you.

(When people with these ribbons combine, they form a perfect relationship. Short, but perfect.)

Blue ribbon means you're going to let your partner have sex with you but you'll make him-her feel guilty as hell for it later.

Yellow ribbon means you're going to take advantage of anyone stupid enough to think you're worth the time.

Brown ribbon means you're playing hard to get but please keep trying because you need the attention.

Green ribbon means you're pretending to be very cool because you're too scared to do anything else.

White ribbon means you're going to tease your partner so bad that he'll think he's a puppy dog by the end of the night.

Orange ribbon means you're going to pretend to be your partner's best friend until you have the opportunity to rape her.

No ribbon at all means you're a novice at going to clubs and ready for any game at all.

This club also offers an element of surprise because if you choose to, you can let the person pinning on the ribbons pin any ribbon at all on you and then without looking, you have to guess who you are for the night.

I almost forgot — there is one ribbon that's common to both clubs. It's white with a blue crown on it and it means "I'm a princess, you better be nice to me."

Well, if you think it sounds promising, then give it a try the next time you're at a club. You'll have to let me know how it turns out though, I don't go to those crazy places.

Deep sleep

Hello? Is anyone out there? It's just as well; the things I want to talk about today aren't the sort of things I want the whole campus to hear. Just you guys.

In Wednesday's Collegian, I read the letters about pets by the Working Dog Club and, the note of his satirical intent by Bill Sundstrom. Ever mindful of parallels, I thought of my family's dog, "Heidi". A few hours later, my sister and called and told me that they had put Heidi to sleep because she had some disease and had gone crazy.

Editorial space is generally not designated to eulogy, especially pet-wise; but, Heidi was pretty cool, so maybe I can get away with it. I used to call her "silly Heidi".

We have loads of stories about her antics; but, I think the best one is about the whale, It was about a year ago, last Thanksgiving vacation.

The shore. The multi-cameraed crowd was gathered round the carcas 20 plus deep. A young lover had carved American teen names, complete with heart and arrow in the dry blue-black skin revealing moist tissue that grew fetid as the sun reached mid-heaven. The air was growing thick with the stench and the thrill, when the Oceanographic crew arrived, replete with tools of disection, to labotamize the demon of death that had torn the greatest of beasts from the watery womb to the sands of its immobility and end.

I heard of the "news" on the radio and gathered up silly Heidi. (All you had to do was spell "beach" and Heidi would dart for the nearest car with a tail wagging so hard that it looked like it might fall off.) I told Heidi that it wasn't a regular beach trip, but that we were going to our favorite beach to see a whale that had washed up. Heidi didn't care. She couldn't wait to get to the beach so that she could play her silly games with the waves.

As we drove up to the traffic-controlled beach parking lot, Heidi knew something was different and looked apprehensive, (she scared easily).

Heidi "heeled" as though she had been the star graduate of dog training school as we picked out way through the noisy mass. I began to reel with the stench and with the sight; my heart grew as heavy as the beast itself. I heard the audience laugh and squeal, and saw the researching team at their gruesome task of disembowelment. Heidi was trembling with fear and loathe to the reason of my bringing her to this display of macabre delight.

I remember standing there comforting Heidi, then looking along the long, open mouth that was full of queer fibery stuff then, into the lifeless glassy eye of the whale. Poor Heidi; I stood there for the longest time.

The noise and the smell disappeared for a bit as I stood there feeling guilty, just in case I had thrown the death chemicals into its watery main, when, a realization hit me like a bullet. The "life" that had inhabited the now shapeless mass wasn't gone but changed into the factor that gave its spectators animation. I knew that it didn't matter how many pieces the scientists cut the whale into; they would never know about the life lost. The sights and smells of disgust came back but, they were accompanied by a release.

I took Heidi away from her fear and we had one of her favorite kinds of silly romps and felt good again. I remember thinking about her as I watched her play in the waves. I envied her carefree spirit and lack of emotion for the dead beast lying some hundred yards away.

Over the years, I learned to observe the underlying serenity that she had through all our family's changes and her passion for romps and chasing games. She's gone now. I'll miss that silly old mutt.

Separatism: A discussion

[The setting: it is a cold and snowy morning and the flakes are circling the towers of Southwest. Ralph Cramden, Jr. son of the Honeymooners star, and his apartment co-habitant Alice, have just finished reading the Daily Confusion and are engaged in a political pondering of a particular article.]

"But I'm confused, Alice, about this separatism thing. A few weeks ago she wrote that separatist functions served a good purpose in many instances. I understand that it's important for women to be alone, together, by themselves, with no men around so that they can discuss feelings, experiences and thoughts that are special to women. There's just some times when we all need to be along with those of our 'own kind', to hang our and relax, separated from those who oppress us, in order that we can learn about ourselves. Hell, how can we teach each other new ways unless we find out what the problems are? You go out with the girls and I go out with the boys. We both learn something and then bring it back to share with each other. What's wrong with that? I don't get it."

"Look, Ralph. You've got to understand something about the media and the ways it sometimes functions. Very often, sentences appear out of context when they are not complemented with the preceding and-or concluding statements. Separatist functions and communities do have their place in a society where oppression is intricately woven into every aspect of life. It's sometimes necessary for women to exclude ourselves from this alienating society, where we get so much shit. People who despise technocracy go to the woods or the country to live, religious fanatics form their own community devoid of societal sin, and women-identified-women join together in a living-learning atmosphere to be with just women. There's nothing wrong with that! These are perfect opportunities to step outside the crazy world we live in and see it from without. There can be found some of the roots of innovative political analysis, and a sense of solidarity and sisterhood that lends itself to an educational atmosphere."

"Then facism was a bad choice of words. What you just said is a great idea — I think more women could be happy if they forgot about men and learned to appreciate each other as women. I don't understand why some men get so uptight about women being together for any reason. We should be happy that others are enjoying themselves."

"Ralph, it makes me feel real good that you are sensitive enough to accept lesbianism for the beautiful thing it is. But lesbianism and separatism don't always go hand in hand. Imagine that you locked yourself in a bus for a long period of time, and you finally had the time to think, talk, and read about all the things that had troubled you personally, politically, etc. As time went by you'd develop lots of good ideas and theories for change for the better, so that when you got off the bus you could start to shaare your ideas with people and see if they worked.

Nothing will change, in this case, for women, unless the learning process is extended to everyone. Will things ever change if separatists refuse to deal with those who don't fit their patterns of thinking?"

"I think I see what you mean. But where does she get off talking about lesbian separatism? She's not a lesbian, and I know that a lesbian and a separatist are two different things. Why is she talking about something that she doesn't completely understand — and that comment about some of her best friends being men, her friends must feel like tokens!

"Hold on a damn minute, Ralph Junior. Where do you get off harping about mechanics when you're only a busdriver? What about me talking about solar energy when I know a lot more about nuclear power? If we were to limit ourselves to talking only about things of which we are 100 per cent knowledgable, where would we be? Why is it that for too long women-identified-women have had to mask their identity in the face of ridicule, yet an attempt to discuss the issue in terms of the women's movement is condemned? It's not her fault the article didn't elaborate on the discussion in a more cohesive manner.

"And that comment was a joke — a sarcastic response to a question about her attitudes towards men. I think her answer was a quip to make fun of the people who assume she hates men. I think the only reason she did the interview was to break out of the box that people have put her in from her writing, never taking the time to deal with her."

"Alice, I gotta hand it to you, I never thought having our morning coffee could be so enlightening. Ya know, you should write for the paper ... " guidance counselling and direction and information that they should be about... On the other hand, a guidance counselor's hands are often tied because they are involved with so many kids.

COLLEGIAN: I was a terrible student in high school. My counselor's suggestion for me was that I go to a prep school for a year after graduating, before applying to colleges. That was like passing the problem on to someone else. Upward Bound certainly takes a more aggressive approach than that.

WILSON: Yes. That's what we've been attempting to deal with. The single most important objective of our summer phase is to establish motivation in students. Give them a sense of "I can do it, I can make it." They are given that sense by virtue of the resources that are available to them in our program structure. There is much interaction between students, teachers and counselors, academically and socially. Learning does not stop when the class lets out.

When the student re-enters school, we hope there will be a natural carry over. It is problematical in that they go back into the high school system that has been to a considerable degree responsible for their being turned off in the first place.

COLLEGIAN: How do you manage the carry over? It's like throwing the Christmas back to the lions.

WILSON: Yes, right! It's difficult. We have our share of problems. It requires that we constantly be groping for creative, interesting techniques to assure the motivation will carry them through the academic year. And we realize success in that area through recruiting tutors from the colleges..... volunteers.... who have been responsive to the needs of our students. That coupled with frequent contact with the case worker in the neighborhood.

We also relate to the parents. There are monthly meetings. These discussions need not be restricted to the students. Perhaps with the school itself, perhaps about a teacher that doesn't give a damn... in which case the parent provides us with the leverage, if you will, to make some kind of headway, changing attitudes, whatever they might be.

COLLEGIAN: Do you find that the high school teachers are willing to put in the extra time to help these students? This is above and beyond the call of duty. Are teachers basically 9 to 5'ers?

WILSON: I think most of them are 9 to 5'ers, from what I've experienced. I do think we have affected some changes in attitudes from a select few to the point that they are willing to meet an Upward Bound case worker after school, in an attempt to resolve a problem. When they see a change in student performance, attitudes... they come around. At least their curiosity is aroused. They want to find out what the program is all about. What makes it tick, about techniques.

Other activities for this semester have included a Thanksgiving canned goods drive on Nov. 6 through Nov. 7 in cooperations with the Newman Center's Newman Club; a paper drive Nov. 4 and 6, the proceeds going to charity, and a Big Sister - Big Brother program that began Nov. 10.

Musical Comedy opens

(Dave Rosenthal)

The UMass Music Theatre Guild will present Cole Porter's musical comedy, "Kiss Me, Kate", Nov. 18 through 21 at Bowker Auditorium.

Performances are scheduled Thursday through Saturday 18th-20th at 8 p.m. and Sunday the 21st at 3:30 p.m.

The guild is a student theatre group which has presented annual musicals for the last 41 years. Recent productions include "Once Upon a Mattress", "Cabaret", and "Pirates of Penzance".

"Kiss Me, Kate", with music and lyrics by Cole Porter and book by Sam and Bella Spewack, is generally considered to be Porter's musical masterpiece.

In a modern day setting, the show deals with a group of performers trying out a musical review of Shakespeare's "The Taming of the Shrew" at a Baltimore theatre.

The musical possesses the unusual feature of a play within a play and the plot focuses alternately on the backstage occurrences during the production and the onstage Shakespearean scenes.

Tickets are now on sale Monday through Friday 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Bowker Box Office, Stockbridge Hall. Prices are $2 for Five-College students and anyone 18 or younger, and $2.50 for all others. Group rates are available.

For information and reservations, call 545-0783.

January break — a time for schooling

Beginning Jan. 3, the UMass Division of Continuing Education is offering its fourth annual Wintersession, a three-week period of day and evening courses and workshops.

According to Merilee Carlson Neunder, director of Wintersession, offerings will fall into two main categories, credit courses and credit-free workshops. The former carry three UMass credits and meet Monday through Friday for three hours. Art courses and those courses carrying one credit have varying schedules. Courses are offered in a wide range of subject areas and are open to any person with a high school degree or the equivalent.

The second component of Wintersession is the Credit-Free Workshop Program, designed for people who do not want or need credit, but who are interested in expanding their skills, furthering their careers, or improving their community life.

A new interest area, called "Communities in Action", will be introduced this year under the credit-free program. Consisting of a variety of workshops and seminars, it is designed to meet the training needs of people in local organizations, or those who are simply interested citizens.

Topics include Grantsmanship, School Committee Workshops, and a series of workshops that will teach skills in accounting, public relations, producing publications, and several more.

Credit-free workshops are also offered in such interest areas as Arts Festivals and Special Events (offered by the Arts Extension Service), pottery, community theater, and others. A catalog containing complete information and a registration form is available from Wintersession, P.O. Box 835, Amherst, 01002.

Intern opportunities in legal service

Western Mass. Legal Services (WMLS) is presenting recruiting students as paralegal interns for the upcoming Spring term.

Students who qualify will intern from mid-January to mid-August, and will receive 15 academic credits and a stipend, the size of which depends upon financial need.

WMLS is a corporation which provides legal representation to indigent persons in civil matters. Its offices serve clients in Springfield, Northampton, Holyoke, Greenfield, North Adams, Pittsfield, and their surrounding communities.

Paralegal interns are trained in one of four main areas of law: family, housing, welfare, and consumer. They work under the supervision of the respective area attorney performing intake, correspondence, negotiation, and if necessary preparation for trial.

WMLS personnel are on campus to speak with interested students today and Tuesday. A display will be in the Campus Center concourse. This program is being sponsored by the Office of Internships, 409 Goodell, tel. 5-0727. Students are urged to drop by or call for information.

Gay Alliance hosts coffeehouse

The People's Gay Alliance of UMass will sponsor a coffeehouse Sunday night from 9:00 to 1 a.m. in the main lounge of Dickinson House (located in the Orchard Hill residential area). A 75 cent donation is requested.

There will be free cider, coffee, and tea for everyone, as well as live entertainment. This coffeehouse is open to all friends in the Five-College academic area community.

For more information, call 545-0154.

Wildlife author in illustrated talk

Author-artist Robert M. McClung will be at the Northfield Mountain Visitors Center tomorrow to speak on "Endangered Wildlife".

By way of illustration, he will show slides and will make drawings on a sketch pad to be given to members of the audience at the conclusion of his presentation. The talk, which is free and open to the public, begins at 10:30 a.m.

McClung, who has done graduate work in natural history at Cornell, was on the staff of the Bronx Zoo for seven years and then served as editor of natural history books and articles for the National Geographic Society in Washington for four years. He now spends all of his time writing and illustrating his own books on wildlife and conservation, chiefly for young people.

Author of 40 books to date, he won the Eva L. Gordon Award of the American Nature Study Society in 1967 for his outstanding achievement in nature literature. His latest book, published by Random House this fall, is "Lost Wild Worlds, the Story of Extinct and Vanishing Wildlife of the Eastern Hemisphere."

Project needs student-supervisors

The Boltwood-Belchertown Project at Belchertown State School is seeking qualified students who are enrolled in an undergraduate program leading toward an undergraduate degree at a university, college, or community college, who are presently taking a minimum of nine course credits, for paid student supervisor positions.

Once employed, students will receive an orientation to the school and to the specific program they will supervise, and receive all the necessary skills training in order to effectively supervise a client-volunteer program.

Students are provided with supervision from a staff member, work with 12 other supervisors, and are responsible for developing program activities for the clients and volunteers that they will have participating in their program.

If anyone is interested, please contact Gerry Morrissey, coordinator of the Boltwood-Belchertown Project at Belchertown State School, at 323-6311 extension, 296, sometime today.

SENIOR PORTRAIT SITTINGS FOR JANUARY GRADUATES

CALL 545-2874 TO MAKE YOUR APPOINTMENT

SCHEDULING FOR APPOINTMENTS STARTS NOV. 17

YOUR BIRTHDAY by STELLA WILDER

Friday, November 12 — Born today, you have great personal ambition. It is not, however, ambition so overpowering that it could cause you to forfeit friendship, betray love or compromise your own principles to the point of negating them. Ambition may cause you to make changes with relative ease if and when change is conducive to profit and success; it may cause you to shift mental attitude and physical presence, but it can never cause you to behave in a way that could be termed shameful. For this reason, you will maintain the respect and regard of others even as you climb to the top of your business or profession in relatively short order.

You are a highly emotional individual and, though you refuse to allow your emotions to direct your decisions or actions, you do take into account feelings as well as facts when it comes time to making up your mind about things. You will do nothing that goes absolutely against the grain of either your likes or your dislikes; at the same time, you will not be so foolish as to fly in the face of intellectual approval merely to satisfy an emotional urge.

Gifted with considerable grace and a basically kind and sympathetic nature, you go through life as determined to avoid hurting other people as you are to achieve victory over them in any race for any prize, be that prize be in the area of work or play. You know how to use your time well and for that reason, are seldom caught with too much to do and too littLe time to do it in. *

Saturday, November 13

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Concentrate your efforts on activities involving the young. It's time now to become part of the solution to another's problem.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — You would do well to doubt half of what you read and very nearly all of what you hear today. Depend upon yourself in the evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Frustration over getting all family members together for Saturday fun may cause you to call it all off. Consult other family members.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — So long as you remain emotionally aloof from the present situation on the home front, you should be able to resolve difficulties quietly, quickly.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Unless you are able to work within a schedule, your efforts may go for naught. Direct studies toward new knowledge.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Take care not to give away plans for new -- and profitable -- activity. Present company may need a bit of rearranging.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Make an effort to suit ambition to inclination. There's no point struggling to achieve what you don't really wish to have.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Facts and figures must be apprehended and employed in order to do any good. Imagination brings reality into surprisingly accurate focus.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Your own dominant personality makes it easy for you to take the lead on the home front today. Don't overdo the authoritarianism, however.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Listen to another's opinion --but don't feel you have to accept it as your own. You would do well to know -- and state -- your own mind.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Present employment difficulties fade with new knowledge of what you want out of life. Ask the right questions for the right answers -- directly.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Matters important to your future must not be set aside. Altruistic action brings you another's gratitude -- but no material gain.

Relative Calm Today

By JACOB LOVE

As the Sun passes through the secretive and emotionally explosive sign of Scorpio, our own hearts (which the sun symbolizes) follow suit. We have ten more days left of the Scorpio season, and if we have so far escaped attack from this sign's ruling planet, Pluto, we are possessed of a luck which may soon run out. Pluto symbolizes the energy of atomic adrenalin, and leads to explosive excitement with which we may heal or destroy. Because most people are afraid of high-energy emotional intensity, the Plutonic energies are the most often repressed. Scorpio is often termed the sign of Sex-and-Violence and people born in that sign are treated as outcastes, often-enough, because those born in other signs can't handle their energies up-front. Because this type of energy is so consistently repressed in our culture, it's only outlet is explosive and thus it more often destroys — instead of healing.

There are five more major waves of scorpionic blow-out energy rolling in between now and the end of the Sun's motion through this sign. Today, while the sky is relatively calm, we might benefit from an analysis of the rough week behind us and prepare ourselves for the potential challenges coming up by focusing on the healing power available from scorpionic intensities. (Call it "primal therapy" if nothing else, but sometimes it feels good to scream and shout.) Several minor blow-out waves will peak Sunday morning and three major waves will threaten to swamp our soul-boat on-and-off Monday. We can best weather these Plutonic storms if we focus on the purpose of the season — partnership productivity. We alone must decide if our partnerships are valuable enough to weather the storms or if we must grab a life-jacket and jump into the foamy brine to go it alone.

Today's calm is soothing enough with the em-oceanl Moon in her home sign of Cancer til midnight. She makes five harmonious connections with major planets thru the day, forming mellow waves of talkativeness and extroversion around noon. It'll be a good time to go out and take-care-of-business. Towards 5:30 p.m. the Moon will form an angle of maximum harmony (120 degrees) with Jupiter, the joy planet, so the evening will get off to a happy start. But, towards 7:30, minor disillusionment may flow through if our dreams are too far removed from the emotional necessities of those around us. Towards midnite and on into the morning, Mercury (communication) and Mars (extroversion and sometimes aggression) will line up in the same degree of Scorpio. So we could have a high-time talking or a low-time fighting. It's up to us.

The Moon flows on into Leo, the sign of the Lion-and-Actor, around midnite and will pull us emotionally thru the week-end towards acting out our feelings. Which is OK if we don't hog center-stage. Saturday morning she makes a challenging connection with Uranus (sudden changes) but the sky mellows out towards evening. Sunday could be rough off-and-on, especially around 10:30 a.m. If we try not to get too selfish, the remainder of Sunday will only be mildly difficult. Otherwise, our situation could continue to deteriorate thru Monday.

Venus, the goddess of love, moves into Capricorn, the sign of uphill struggle around sunrise Sunday. So we're not going to get anything free from the lady for a month, when she moves on into Aquarius. Meanwhile, love is always worth the struggle.

Despite state supreme ccurt's decision

Utah governor delays convict's execution

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — Utah Gov. Calvin Rampton yesterday stayed the execution of Gary Gilmore, who had persuaded the state supreme court he should die "like a man" before a firing squad Monday morning.

Rampton said he wanted the State Board of Pardons to decide whether the admitted-killer deserved the death penalty. The board meets Wednesday.

Before the governor acted, the 35-year-old Gilmore had said he was relieved by the court's refusal to delay the execution and wanted a six-pack of beer as his last meal, his lawyer reported.

The governor acted four days before Gilmore was scheduled to die before the firing squad at Utah State Prison for the slaying of a Provo motel clerk during a $400 robbery.

The stay halted what would have been the first execution in the United States since 1967 and the first in Utah since 1960.

Gilmore, an Oregon parolee who admits killing motel clerk Bennie Bushnell, 25, last summer, was described as "angered and disappointed" by the stay.

The condemned man personally persuaded the Utah Supreme Court Wednesday to let him accept the death penalty "with dignity, like a man" at 8 a.m. Monday.

But Rampton decided to halt the execution. His stay remains in effect until next Wednesday's regular meeting of the pardons board at the prison.

The board will hold a public hearing on Gilmore's case and then decide whether to grant a further delay, commute the sentence to life imprisonment or let the execution occur at a new date to be set by the sentencing judge.

Both Attorney General-elect Robert Hansen and Dennis Boaz, Gilmore's lawyer, said they would urge Pardons Board Chairman George Latimer to move up the time of the meeting so the convict could still die Monday morning.

But Latimer, a former Utah Supreme Court justice and a defense attorney for Lt. William Calley in the My Lai massacre case, said the meeting could not be held any earlier under state law.

In addition, American Civil Liberties Union lawyers said the execution could not be held legally on Monday because the 30-day period between judgment and execution required under Utah law won't end until Friday.

Boaz called the governor's action "an irresponsible act."

"The execution will go on," Boaz predicted. "People opposing it are hypocrites. They are not acting on his behalf. They are doing it for their own motives. He has a right to individual justice."

Latimer said the pardons board would hear testimony on all "facts or circumstances justifying the board in reducing the punishment imposed," but that he would not permit any discussion of the constitutionality of the death penalty. "That's not within our bounds," he said.

Close eye turned to flu shot program in upcoming weeks

ATLANAT (AP) — More than 14 million persons — about 10 per cent of the program's target total — have been inoculated against the swine flu, officials said yesterday.

The program — funded by a $135 million congressional appropriation — got under way in early October after being delayed about two months by vaccine manufacturing problems and arguments over side effect liability.

The intent was to vaccinate all Americans 8 years and older, but officials won't say now how close they think they'll come.

"The next several weeks are the critical ones because it's probably easier to get the inoculations now than it has been or than it will be as the program is winding down in December," said Don Berreth, public information officer for the national Center for Disease Control.

The flu season is approaching, and the shots usually do not become effective until two or three weeks after they are received, he said.

Berreth said 4,355,289 persons were reported to have received swine flu inoculations during the week ended Nov. 6, bringing the program total to 14,182, 152.

"The figures are encouraging in that they've been increasing every week," he said.

Berreth said the over-all total is "very conservative" since it does not include the large number of shots given to military personnel.

The government had originally called for vaccination of more than 200 million persons but later officials estimated between 140 and 150 million would receive the shots.

Berreth said vaccine now is "pretty generally available" at mass immunization clinics after several weeks of concentrating on giving shots to the elderly and chronically ill — theyare considered to have a high risk of contracting swine flu if an outbreak should occur.

The program was begun after swine flu struck several soldiers at Ft. Dix, N.J., last winter, killing one.

Pats have chance Sunday to slice Colts lead for first

BALTIMORE (UPI) — The first-place Baltimore Colts will be fighting to increase their two-game lead in the American Football Conference's Eastern Division Sunday while their opponents, the New England Patriots, desperately need the victory to narrow the gap.

East Division

Team	W..L..T
Baltimore	8..1..0
New England	6..3..0
Miami	5..4..0
New York	2..7..0
Buffalo	2..7..0

Colts' coach Ted Marchibroda called Sunday's confrontation "our biggest game of the season."

During the first Colt-Patriot showdown, Marchibroda said his club was "afraid of New England," but Baltimore prevailed, 27-13.

"They have excellent personnel and it certainly was a dog fight," he said. "They showed everybody after that game they could play.

"I certainly hope that the extra preparation we took before that first game does us some good."

Besides claiming first place in the division, the Colts, 8-1, are going into the game at Memorial Stadium with other top honors.

The Colts are the NFL's No. 1 scoring club with 278 points. Their defense is also the leader in quarterback sacks with 44 in the NFL and the offense takes top honors in the AFC.

Individually, quarterback Bert Jones leads the NFL in passing while running back Lydell Mitchell leads the AFC runners and needs only 113 yards to reach the 1,000-yard mark.

New England was the last AFC team to beat Baltimore in regular season Oct. 19, 1975. Since then, the Colts have managed to win 17 of their last 18 regular season contests.

The Colts and Patriots, 6-3, both realized easy wins last weekend as Baltimore romped over San Diego, 37-21, and New England beat Buffalo, 20-10.

Last week, New England rookie cornerback Mike Haynes became the first player in the club's 17-year history to return a punt for a score. He missed an opportunity to set the mark in pre-season when he spiked the ball at Cleveland's five-yard line.

Patriot running back Sam Cunningham's best-ever 141 rushing yards added to Haynes' performance in the New England victory. Cunningham now has 779 yards rushing and 25 catches for 275 yards to lead the club.

UMass coaches, he is a much better passer now.

Defensively, co-captain Bruce Huther mans a unit which has not give up more than 24 points all year. Last week against Rhode Island, in a 31-6 Wildcat win, the senior linebacker made 13 tackles and assisted on four others, while playing the first half and just two series in the second.

For UMass, running backs Billy Coleman and Rich Jessamy once again lead the ground attack. McNally, at quarterback, draws admiration from New Hampshire.

"He is the best passer in the conference and UMass has an excellent concept of when to throw," said UNH backfield coach Dino Folino. "We will find out this week how good our pass defense is."

And we will find out much more than that. Sometime around 4 p.m. tomorrow, when all the passes are thrown, all the hits made, and all the emotion drained, we will look out over Alumni Stadium and see the Yankee Conference champion trounce proudly off the field. And we will witness a dejected loser, slowly heading toward the locker room to subsequent gloom.

For after comparing all the stats, how UMass has played teams like Rutgers, and UNH teams like West Chester, we can only wait...

Johara Chapman, Maggie Crowley and Sue Swartz have been swapping positions in the latest meets and will be attempting to carry themselves to the front with their intense rivalry.

Jane Welzel will hopefully be approaching the level of conditioning she was at last year when she finished 37th in this meet. She has been nagged by injuries this year and hasn't come close to her prior performance.

One of the keys to the meet will be how Debbie Farmer runs. She has been improving steadily since coming back from an injury, she had a good race at the Easterns, and has looked good in workouts since then.

"Debbie has looked exceptionally good," said O'Brien. "She's running better than anytime in the last two years.

"I think they're still on the upswing, and I'd look for them to challenge for anywhere from 4th to 8th."

Can Dad persuade Dave

COLD SPRING, Ky. (UPI) — Dave Cowens' father said Thursday his son's surprise leave-of-absence from the Boston Celtics is "open-ended," but added, "I feel sure he will go back to the Celtics."

"Dave called me last night and said he would be home in four or five days," said Jack Cowens. "I expect him this weekend or by the first of next week, and we'll sit down and chat.

"I don't know what the problem is. He didn't tell me on the phone and I didn't press on it. He assured me he was in good health, so I'm not overly worried.

"I don't think it's team related, and I don't think it was any spur of the moment thing. He's not that way. I feel it's just something he has thought about for a long time and he wanted to have a little time away from the game.

"I feel sure he will go back to the Celtics. When, I don't know, but I just feel that way. You have certain kind of feelings as a parent and I feel he'll go back."

Dave, 28, a 6-foot-9 center and seven year pro basketball veteran, was granted a leave of absence Wednesday by Celtics' General Manager Red Auerbach.

Said Auerbach of his conversation with Cowens, "he told me that he's got some problems and that he can't do his job properly." He did not elaborate.

Cowens is remaining in the Boston Area for the next several days until he returns to his parents' home in this Cincinnati suburb, said his father.

Mountaineers hope to upset Pitt

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — If you're forced to listen to any song long enough, chances are good you're going to begin to hate it — and perhaps even any image that the words conjure up.

This week, therefore, Pitt coach Johnny Majors has been force-feeding his top-ranked Panthers the mellow strains of John Denver's "Country Road", a ballad which sings the praises of West Virginia.

He's trying to strengthen what already is a deep hatred of the archrival Mountaineers who invade Pitt Stadium Saturday for a sellout game on regional television.

The song has been blasting at the players over and over again from a tape player at Pitt Stadium during every practice session, stopping only when the coaches needed a few minutes of quiet to give instructions.

Majors did the same thing last year, but it was not enough. The Mounties, playing on their own field, had even more blood in their eyes than the Panthers did and upset them, 17-14, with a field goal on the last play of the game.

"It'll work this year," said one red-shirted Panther who stood on the sidelines of practice this week, listening to "Country Road" for the umpeenth time of the day and remembering Pitt's embarrassment before a regional television audience last year.

But West Virginia has even more reasons this year to want to upset Pitt, for a win would spoil one of the few unbeaten records remaining in the nation and likely knock the Panthers from the No. 1 ranking they have been enjoying for only a few days.

The Mountaineer team, 4-5 on the year, is not as strong as the 8-3 team that went on to win the Peach Bowl last year, but as wise old football observers have been saying around here all week "you can throw records out the window when those two teams get together."

Islanders tie Bruins on third period goal

BOSTON [UPI] — J. P. Parise's rising slap shot early in the third period lifted the New York Islanders into a 2-2 tie with the Boston Bruins last night in a battle of division leaders.

The tie extended the Islanders' unbeaten streak to seven games and Boston's unbeaten skein to four. The tie was the first for Boston this year and the first blemish on its home record. The Bruins had won all six of their previous home games this year.

Parise took a Jude Drouin pass from the corner and drilled a 40-footer from the slot past Boston goalie Gilles Gilbert's glove side at 4:45.

The Islanders and Bruins traded first period goals by Gregg Sheppard and Denis Potvin. Dave Forbes, normally a penalty killer but taking a regular shift in Rick Middleton's absence, deflected home a goalmouth pass from Don Marcotte past goalie Bill Smith's right skate for a 2-1 Boston lead.

Middleton suffered a strained muscle in his left shoulder last night.

NJ Jets?

NEW YORK (UPI — The New York Jets, tired of being treated as second class citizens in their fight with the Mets over the use of Shea Stadium, are contemplating moving to the Jersey Meadowlands next season to share the new football stadium with the Giants, a club spokesman said Thursday.

The Mets, who control the lease of the city-owned Shea Stadium, once again voted Wednesday not to allow the Jets use a Shea Stadium until the end of the World Series, which stretches through the third week in October. The previous years the Jets could offer little resistance to the Mets' decision, but the Jersey Meadowlands complex offers them an alternative they may wish to pursue.

"It's something we have to consider," said Frank Ramos, Public Relations director of the Jets. "The Jet owners would prefer not to leave Shea, but we feel not being able to use the field in September and October is hurting our club.

"It hurts our football team to play the first four games every year on the road, and it's not desirable for our fans. We've been getting lots of letters from our fans, complaining about so many home games in December when it's so cold here."

A big factor in the Jets decision to move would be if the National Football League decides to expand its regular season schedule next year from 14 to 16 games.

Underdog spikers gear for tournament

By MIKE WITOWSKI
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team travels to Worcester Polytechnical Institute for an all day tournament sponsored by the MAIAW (Massachusetts Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women) tomorrow. Participating along with the Minutemen, who are seeded 4th, will be teams from Springfield College, Boston University and Bridgewater States, the 1-2-3 seeds, and Mount Holyoke and Boston College, seeded 5 and 6.

UMass' first match in the single elimination tournament will take place at 11:30 and pit the Minutewomen against Mount Holyoke, a team they played one of their best matches against during the regular season. If they win this match, they will proceed to the semifinals at 3:15 against Springfield, a team that has a first round bye. The championship game takes place at 7:00.

Coach Diane Thompson will start a much smaller backcourt than she has used for much of the season as Lynn Decosmo and Pat McGrath get the starting nod. Freshwoman Diane Mandragouras will start as a spiker, but you can bet Dianne Bunker-Hannula will see plenty of action.

"We're one of the underdogs in this tournament," said coach Thompson, "but in tournament play, underdogs can really be surprising, and we're really up for these games. Springfield is a team we're really had some trouble with, losing twice, so the women are out to get Springfield."

Another UMass-UNH game; this one on the younger side

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

The football game tomorrow between UMass and New Hampshire for the Yankee Conference title won't be the only gridiron action between those two rivals this weekend. The junior varsity teams from both schools will play a 1:30 game Sunday at UNH.

UMass is hoping to finish its season undefeated and also keep its winning streak intact. The Minutemen, 3-0-1 going into the contest at Cowell Stadium, tied Dartmouth 20-20 in their first game of the year and have since defeated every opponent, UConn excepted, rather easily.

New Hampshire is 2-3 this season, having defeated Boston University and Northeastern while losing to Maine, UConn, and Dartmouth. UMass' JVs defeated UConn, 9-7, in their last game, while coming up with the Dartmouth tie. The Minutemen did not play any of UNH's other opponents this year.

Coming off that close call last Monday against the Huskies in what coach Tom Mullen termed "a real team effort," UMass will find three of its injured players back in the lineup. Halfbacks Cliff Pedrow and Bob Ridley, who were sidelined for all of the last game with slight shoulder injuries, should be set for Sunday, as will flanker Kevin O'Connor. The Minitemen's top receiver this season, O'Connor bruised a shoulder against the Huskies and was forced to sit out most of the game.

Quarterback Mike McEvilly, who was bumped up a bit by the aggressive UConn defense and its blitz, should also be fit for the contest.

UMass' offense was sluggish in the second half against UConn, but it certainly wasn't the fault of fullback Hank Sareault. The hefty sophomore plowed his way to 127 yards on 23 carries in the game, as most of the rushing work came his way with the loss of the two top halfbacks.

"He had a great day rushing," Mullen said. "He was powerful and broke tackles all day."

The Minutemen's depth also came into play in the game due to the injuries. Sub halfback Jerry Flanigan gained 32 yards and blocked well for Sareault, while reserve flanker John Fitzgerald filled in admirably for O'Connor with six catches worth 81 yards.

The defense, meanwhile, limited its foe to 99 yards in total offense. Safety Brian Heyworth intercepted a UConn pass to stop one drive, while the entire corps of defenders functioned well as a unit, according to Mullen.

UMass—UNH games are developing into as much a rivalry as UMass—UConn affairs, and the JV Minutemen are doing their part to add to the big football weekend.

UMass hosts Cats for title

Is UMass number one? Will these fans be smiling after tomorrow's game between UMass and New Hampshire? We'll soon find out... (Staff photo by Jim Higgins)

By RON ARENA
Collegian Staff

The incentive is there for both teams as UMass hosts New Hampshire in a battle for Yankee Conference football supremacy tomorrow at 1 p.m. at Alumni Stadium.

Both UMass and the Wildcats boast 3-1 records in YanCon play to lead the five-team pack and set up a rematch of last year's decisive battle between the two teams to decide the conference championship.

Hopefully, for the Minutemen, the game will be just that — a rematch, and not a replay of last year which saw New Hampshire stop UMass short of the conference crown and a Division II Bowl bid, and gain the honors itself with a 14-11 win.

For UMass then, a note of revenge may play a key role in the emotional aspect of the game. Last year, despite an 8-2 overall record, the Minuteman football season was not considered a success due to the loss at Durham. But in 1976, in spite of its disappointing losses to Harvard, Connecticut, and Rutgers, and in spite of its up and down play all year, a win tomorrow will give UMass what it set out for last April in spring sessions — the Beanpot, symbolic of league champs.

To gain that goal will be no easy task, as the visitors flaunt a 7-2 overall record, a chance for another NCAA playoff berth, and in junior Bill Burnham, perhaps the best running back in all New England.

Burnham, out of the tailback position, has rushed for 2197 yards in two seasons, to put him as nearly a sure bet to become the all-time leading ground gainer in New England before he finishes his career. Burnham needs just 640 yards to surpass Yale's (and the Detroit Lion's) Dick Jauron.

Physically, both teams have been hampered by injuries. The Minutemen received a scare last week when the quarterback slot was nearly added to the infamous injury list. But both starting QB Brian McNally, who suffered a concussion, and back-up Mike Fallon, who was shaken up a couple of times, will be ready to go.

New Hampshire, like the Minutemen, has also been greeted by injury woes. Four players have been lost to the Wildcats for the season, including their top pass defender, junior Dick Duffy, who injured a knee three weeks ago. Burnham has been plagued with a bad ankle, and was forced to miss the Northeastern game. He was sub-par last week, and was held to under 100 yards for the first time all year.

Cat quarterback Greg Allen, who suffered only one interception all last season, will direct the New Hampshire offense. Allen has thrown seven passes into opposing hands this season, but according to

Women realize dream in Nationals tomorrow

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

A season's quest will be realized at noon tomorrow when the UMass women's cross country team faces the best women's teams in the country in the AIAW Championship at the University of Wisconsin at Madison.

Since the first meet in the forests of Lowell, the nationals have been on everyone's mind, even to the exclusion of the regular season meets and the championship meets held up till now. It seems as though the women have run each race with some future goal in mind — never fully extending themselves.

This year's meet will be held on the three mile course at the Yahara Hills Golf Course in Madison. The layout is flat and fast, which may hinder the Minutewomen, who are more at home in the mountainous orchard course.

The women will be trying to improve on their 9th place finish of a year ago. Iowa State won the team title, with Peg Neppel the individual champion. She will be back to defend her title this year. Her chief challenge will probably come from Kris Bankes of Penn State and Cynthia Wadsworth of Michigan State. Those two teams, along with Oregon, Florida, Kansas State, Wisconsin and Middlebury, if they go to the meet, should be in the top ten, along with UMass.

The women have had a good ten day work period since the Eastern meet, and according to Coach Ken O'Brien, "they're ready for their best effort of the year."

O'Brien will be sending the same team that finished third in the Easterns two weeks ago, minus Anne Bradshaw. Only five people are needed to score, so that won't hurt their chances at all.

Julie Lafreniere has the best shot at a high finishing position in the meet. She has been running better and better as the season has progressed, and will probably continue to improve her performance.

Residents vote tomorrow on rent control question

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

Amherst voters will go to the polls between noon and 8 p.m. tomorrow to vote whether or not to implement rent control in the town.

It will be the first time in Amherst's history, the issue has gone before the electorate. Rent control proposals have been defeated by Amherst Town Meeting four times in the last seven years. After special town meeting defeated the Amherst Rent and Eviction Control Act last month, 145-44, the Amherst Tenants Association (ATA) gathered enough signatures, over 700, to bring the issue before the people.

At least 20 per cent of the registered town voters, or 2,800 people, must vote in favor of the rent control act for it to pass by majority vote.

If passed, the act would go before the Mass. State Legislature for approval.

Voting booths will be set up in all seven precincts in town at the same places used for the recent presidential elections.

Groups interested in the referendum accelerated their advertising campaigns around town and in the local press in the past week, and will continue in their attempts to sway voter opinion through tomorrow.

The ATA, which is spearheading the drive for rent control, is bringing the issue to referendum because it believes town meeting has not been representative of town voters in respect to the issue.

The Amherst Rent and Eviction Control Act, which the association presented to October's special town meeting, asks the General Court to declare the house situation in Amherst a public emergency because of a "severe shortage of rental housing accommodations and abnormal rises in rent."

Amherst presently has a reported 1.1 per cent vacancy rate in rental housing, one of the lowest in the state.

While opponents to the rent control proposal recognize the housing problem, they do not see rent control as a viable solution.

The Amherst Board of Selectmen, in a recent statement in opposition to rent control, said: "Amherst's housing problems are rooted in our economy" and claims inflation, inadequate personal income and shortages of rental housing near UMass are contributing problems which rent control cannot solve.

The rent control act would roll back rents to May, 1976 prices and create a five-member rent control board to make future maximum rent adjustments "at levels which yield to landlords a fair return on investment."

Rent control proponents claim the low vacancy rate and control of the rental market in Amherst by a few people prevents competition which would keep rents down.

Opponents to the act claim that one way to help people who can't afford to pay rents is through state and federal subsidy programs to improve the supply of low and moderate income housing in the area.

However, rent control backers insist that present rates are so high, few rental units are now eligible for Section 8 federal subsidies.

The Board of Selectmen, in their statement, claim the town is already taking positive steps to develop solutions to the rental housing problem in Amherst. They point to last month's decision by town meeting to give staff assistance to the town Landlord-Tenants Relations Committee (LTRC) to help facilitate complaints between landlords and tenants and provide information to the town concerning rental housing.

ATA members voted against this measure at town meeting because the LTRC has no power of enforcement, and at least one member said he thought the committee was an inadequate solution to the town's rent problems.

The Rent and Eviction Control Act has the power of enforcement. Violators would be subject to criminal penalties.

Opponents to rent control claim that implementing rent control will result in loss of tax revenue to the town from area landlords. As a result, they claimed homeowners would be forced to carry more of the tax burden in town.

Opponents point to the fall in net income for landlords after the rollback in rent prices to May, 1976 prices. With loss of income, opponents say landlords will not be able to maintain their properties as well as before, and resultantly, the property will deteriorate and devaluate, which could contribute to a decrease the tax base.

Proponents insist that under the rent control act, landlords would be assured a fair return of investment. Some proponents feel current operating costs for rental units are inflated, and therefore landlords do not pay as much taxes as they should. Proponents point out that the rent control act would force landlords to open their books so that the rent control board could determine a true estimation of operating costs.

Both proponents and opponents to rent control agree the rent control act will not solve the housing shortage in Amherst. However, opponents claim that even with a provision in the rent control act that stipulates units constructed after the end of this year are exempt from the act, developers will be scared-off by the prospect of competing with units charging lower rents.

The Board of Selectmen's statement claims said small investors would incur great losses under the rollback provision of the rent control act. It says the small investor would be hurt between the time rent prices were rolled back and the future rent adjustments the rent control board might make after it completed its review process.

"Small investors, whose rent increases in the meantime had been necessary to avoid bankruptcy, may not be able to withstand several months of deficits," it says.

The proponents of rent control maintain that all rent increases will be directly tied to cost increases.

Currently, the only towns with their own rent control laws are in some of the denser communities surrounding the Boston area.

Southwest to decide pornography issue

By DEBORAH GOODWIN
Collegian Staff

A referendum on pornographic films will be voted on today by residents of Southwest. Voting will take place between noon and six p.m. upstairs in Hampden Dining Commons.

The question reads: "Do you support Southwest Assembly (SWA) Bil 38-0219-01, which reads: Be it resolved: That the SWA not allow pornographic films to be shown in Hampden Student Center because of the sexist and oppressive nature to the men and women of our community."

At least 40 per cent of the Southwest population need to vote on this issue or it will be unbinding. If this happens, the Southwest Assembly would then decide the issue, according to Diana Fessenden, vice-president of SWA. The assembly would remain with the stand taken last semester banning the showing of pornographic films in Southwest. If residents vote in favor of showing pornographic films, then they would be held in the Hampden Student Center and would be sponsored by Baroque Enterprises.

Albert Sparks from Baroque Enterprises challenged last semester's referendum. He felt that the SWA was not representing the resident of Southwest. He also felt that the wording should be changed from 'pornographic films' to 'censored films.'

Sparks wanted the referendum to read: "Are you in favor of censorship of pornographic films?" He also wanted a longer voting period, and disagreed on the location picked for the vote.

After a debate at an Oct. 26 SWA meeting, it was decided that the referendum should remain unchanged. The opinion of the SWA members was that Sparks wanted the word 'censorship' used to make it appear that the assembly was trying to take away the rights of Southwest residents. Open voting by the students themselves was felt to be the most practical way to settle the matter clearly once and for all.

Last semester a similar referendum was voted down unanimously by the SWA. The assembly makes an effort to sponsor non-sexist programs.

Amherst rent control: referendum summary

(The proposed Rent Control Act requires 6½ single space typewritten pages. The summary here covers the major provisions. — Editor's note)

The preamble and Sections 1. Declaration of Emergency, 2. Acceptance of this Act, and 13. Severability involve routine procedural matters and are not summarized.

Section 3. Definitions. The terms rental unit, controlled rental unit, rent, and services are defined. Under the definition of controlled rental unit, certain types of housing are exempted (motels, hotels, certain subsidized housing, cooperatives, institutional quarters, "sabbatical rentals", 1-, 2-, and 3-unit owner-occupied complexes, etc.). Units constructed after January 1, 1977 are exempted.

Section 4. Rent Board. A five-member elected board would administer the law. The board would receive no compensation. The board would have subpoena power. (Under the Town Manager Act, the manager would be required to provide an adequate budget and staff for the operation of the rent control act; the budget would be subject to Town Meeting approval).

Animals are Jenkins' science

[Editors note — Reporter Nikki Aronson has been following students on campus around as they go through their daily routines of classes, entertainment, and just plain living. Each week she chooses a student from a different major randomly and spends an average of three days with her-him.

This week Nikki spent some time with Jim Jenkins, an Animal Science major.

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

More than two hours have passed since he boarded a chilly bus to Sunderland to attend a horse management class. It is 10 a.m. and Jim Jenkins sits in a class in SBA transcribing the words of his organic professor onto paper.

The first thing you notice in this large hall is the pencils; they fly, they flash, they never seem to stop writing. Almost never. Occasionally a hand waves in the air in what appears to be some sort of spot circulation therapy.

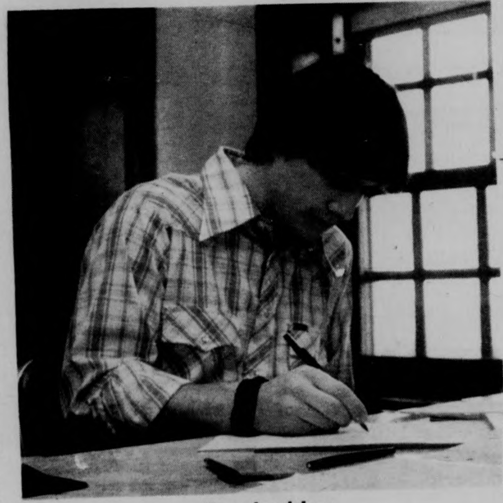
I lean over to Jenkins and ask why he engages in such frantic note-taking. My answer is a shrug; there is no time to answer questions while yet another chemical reaction is being scribbled onto a chalkboard.

After class empties out into the sunshine, I again pose the question, "Why welcome writers cramp?" Jenkins smiles. It is the science major's dilemma. For those who tackle the scientific obstacle course, he explains, the consequences were understood before the undertaking.

Jenkins then turned and started off at a brisk pace back to his dorm in the Central area. I stood alone, watching all of the students with chemistry notebooks rush past me and wondering why anyone enthusiastically pursues the college life of an animal science major.

Jenkins allows himself the lunch period of a businessman. A slight half-hour later he is preparing for an 11:15 class in Animal Pathogens. It will be a long day for him as it will be for all science majors. Courses are crammed into schedules that include frantic classes, lengthy labs, and quiz splattered discussions. Occasionally additional time must be found for conferences with advisors.

One such advisor is Iona Mae Reynolds of Stockbridge School. An associate director, Reynolds is in charge of personnel and advising, in addition to teaching courses. She admits the life of science majors, especially those students in the animal sciences, are difficult. Reynolds said, "Most people don't realize the arduous schedule imposed on two-year Stockbridge students, let alone the four-year people like Jenkins."



Chris Turner

Jim Jenkins

Reynolds is aware of a stigma attached to Stockbridge School, and animal science majors. The chemistry department is thought of as more elite than we are, or so they like to think of themselves over there," said Reynolds, "but Stockbridge boasts chemists, physiologists, and other professional persons."

The College of Food and Natural Sciences is the largest school at the University, second only to the College of Arts and Sciences. "Some students may look down on us, but they're still knocking down the doors to get in all the same," Reynolds said.

Stockbridge Hall is not the only setting animal science majors receive instruction in. During some semesters of his college career, Jenkins has taken courses at the experimental chicken labs at Tillson Farm and at the cow farms at Sunderland.

"Most people aren't even aware this farm exists," said Jenkins. "Animal science labs are held here for nutrition, physiology, and other courses. But non-science majors are missing the opportunity to learn anything about a small-scale farm or watch how cows are milked by today's methods.

Late in the afternoon, Jenkins gives me a tour of the cow farm, explaining the functions of the various types of machinery and the steps in farm management. As we walk past the many stalls, Jenkins explains the various ages and functions of the cows. A few of the experimental Holsteins bear plugs on their sides that cover painless openings in their stomachs. Through these surgically made holes students analyze different gastrointestinal products. Jenkins adds that visitors are able to view the internal workings of the animal. "When a lab meets here during the week the teacher removes the plug."

I emerge from the trip with a new understanding of one of the many facets of agriculture. Jenkins said, "Land and livestock are big business today. To run a farm at a profit farmers must be aware of the latest technologies involved in the care and feeding of his animals."

Jenkins' major is two-fold, encompassing studies in animal science and pre-vetrinary. These are but two of the four options available to students interested in agricultural studies. Pre-vet is a major of "frustration and anger." With only 19 vetrinarian schools in the United States, the future looks dim for majors in this field.

"The state," said Jenkins, "will pay thousands of dollars to reserve a few spaces in New York and Pennsylvania schools, but won't put that money towards a vetrinarian school in New England." Jenkins joined the Pre-Vet Club existing on campus, but said "there are few seniors in the club because as the years have gone by they've seen how little their chances are for getting into a vet school and so they switch majors."

Iona Mae Reynolds sympathizes with Jenkin's protests. "You know," she said, "I'm tired of the picture of the man behind the plow. And the picture of the woman scattering grains to the hens, and I'm tired of hearing that Massachusetts is not an agricultural state." This last argument, she said, was a weak excuse offered to the demands for a vet school in New England.

With such unfavorable odds for acceptance to a school in this country, I asked Jim Jenkins what he felt his future held for him in regards to vetrinarian school and alternative careers. Though his home life in Hudson, Mass. has given him skill in shearing sheep as well as experience at raising the family menagerie of animals, Jenkins is interested in dealing primarily with large livestock. His ambition remains to become a licensed vet.

"A few kids I know are over in Italy now studying to be vetrinarians," Jenkins said. "They're sent over three months before the semester to learn the language. So far they've made it a year." Jenkins will try to contact the Italian Consulate in Boston to make similar arrangements for himself if he fails to gain acceptance to a school in this country. While waiting for a December graduation, Jim Jenkins ponders career alternatives and makes out vet school applications.

An animal science student has a rough time of it over the course of his, or her, four prepatory years at college. Jenkins has the additional burden of working for a living. When he is not running through his eight-to-four class schedule three days a week, he is working long hours in Springfield.

While animal science directors concern themselves about the image of their programs, Jim Jenkins stands as an exception to the stereotypic science major. Jenkins left the playing fields of Hudson High for a football scholarship at Mayville State in Mayville, North Dakota. Though he has always shone as a star linebacker on the grid, his academic concerns were of greater importance. After time off to work, and a semester at Worcester State, Jenkins transferred here to UMass.

For the dedicated student, parties are sacrificed for studies. But even the most austere of science majors manages a short visit to friends in Southwest or a quick trip to the Pub. The social life that is attainable for almost anyone here at the University is lost to Jenkins as he combines exams with the responsibilities of a job. By necessity Jenkins has learned to function efficiently on a few hours of sleep a night.

Such a long, hard and expensive road. Why does Jenkins put up with the rigors of an animal science major? Why science? Why a field such as agriculture? As Iona Mae Reynolds sees it, for students such as Jim Jenkins, "It is a living and lifegiving study concerned with the health and welfare of man and animals. It is concerned with how to clothe and feed our population, how to satisfy its aesthetic tastes, and how to provide interests and activities for leisure time. Agriculture and science in general is concerned with every phase of living."

PULSE survey reveals

Food Services 'adequate'

By PATT BEINAR
Collegian Staff

A PULSE student opinion survey on the quality of food in the Hatch, Blue Wall, Coffee Shop and Top of the Campus, will help decide whether or not the Campus Center Food Services contract will be renewed.

According to the survey, directed by Maynard Davis, the majority of the students polled responded that the four Campus Center restaurants provide adequate quantities of food and speedy service.

The quality, appearance, and temperature of the food is also satisfactory, according to the September 22 survey.

The majority of students also find the food preparation areas adequately clean, the food prices reasonable, and the management responsive.

Eighty-five percent of the students surveyed said they are satisfied with the cleanliness of the eating utensils and the courteousness of the food service employees.

Students were most dissatisfied with the inadequate dinner selection.

Eighty-five percent of the women and seventy-eight percent of the men expressed positive sentiment toward the Food Service. The survey also revealed that more males than females frequent the Blue Wall, as compared to the Hatch and the Coffee Shop.

The Coffee Shop is used most frequently by the people surveyed. Two to four times per week is the average amount students make use of the food facilities.

Though the Food Service's fate lies in the hands of the administration, the survey will be important for the final decision in a few months.

UMass Debators sponsor largest HS forensic event

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

If you happened to be walking through Herter Hall, Bartlett, Hasbrouck, Machmer, or parts of the Campus Center this weekend, you would have heard a series of vigerous debates concerning penal reform in the United States.

But the debates were not between UMass students or faculty, they were between 700 high school debate team members who came to the campus for the 16th annual high school debate tournament.

The tournament, sponsored by the 40-member UMass Debate Team, was the largest high school debate event every held. All the teams debate on the same topic throughout the school year. This year's topic — whether or not a comprehensive program of penal reform should be adopted in the United States.

Teams came from 13 states and the District of Columbia, and as far away as Wisconsin and Tennessee to participate.

Tournament co-director David O'Brien said the UMass team was a bit apprehensive about the size of the event at the start of the weekend.

He said the group had no idea the tournament would be so large until a week or a week and a half ago, when many of the confirmations were received.

O'Brien said that the event proceeded without any major problems, thanks to the help of the UMass team members.

Other kinds of problems soon presented themselves, however. Not only were the rooms in the Campus Center already booked for Sunday night because of an insurance convention, but Amherst College had its homecoming weekend, so local hotels were already filled.

O'Brien said he heard that some teams were staying as far away as Springfield and that some of the judges from other colleges and universities were staying in the dorms with friends on the UMass team.

Some of the major reasons the UMass Debate Team hosts these and other tournaments is to help raise money for their program, to recruit new members, and to give high schoolers an opportunity to experience a large tournament.

O'Brien said that for a team to break even on this tournament 400 participants were needed. Since 700 attended, the team stands to make money, although this is not their major goal.

The debate team received no funding from the Undergraduate Student Senate, add support from the Communications Study Department is not enough to finance the team's trips to other tournaments throughout the year, he said.

According to O'Brien, debating, as an extra-curricular activity, is on the rise in high schools. He said there are several high schools who participated in the tournament that have never registered in a tournament before.

No Massachusetts high school placed high on the list of winners, although South Hadley High School placed third in the Varsity division.

During the day on Saturday, the two person team in each of the three divisions — Championship, Varsity and Novice — participated in a series of debates to decide their standings on Sunday. 16 championship teams qualified for the elimination rounds on Sunday, and the top two teams in the Varsity and Novice divisions were chosen for a final debate yesterday evening.

Debates take place between two teams of two persons each, with one team arguing the affirmative and one the negative. The teams do not know until ten minutes before the debate begins which side they will have to argue.

The teams conduct research on the topic, putting information down on file cards. The files rapidly multiply to an impressive level.

One team in the finals of the Championship division had eleven files one foot deep in addition to other information contained in notebooks.

The debates, which take about an hour and a half to complete, alternate between affirmative and negative arguments, and cross examination. Debaters are judged on their logic and if they respond to all points their opponents bring up.

Because of time limits on their presentations the debaters must talk extremely fast and sometimes forget how far they have come in their arguments.

If they forget, a piece of evidence, most debaters will keep on talking as they walk to their desks to retrieve it. At the high school level, speaking quality is not as important as organization.

Boston College High School Coach Eric J. Seiler, a Harvard student, said his team of 35 to 40 members works between 10 to 25 hours each week on their research. He said very little time is spent practicing debating.

The coach of the year award was presented to Richard Sodikow of Bronx High School of Science in Bronx, New York. Bronx Science did very well in the tournament, finishing second in the championship division and first in the Varsity division. Fred Cohen placed second in the speaker awards for the Varsity division and Steven Gold placed third in the Championship group.

CAOS talk focuses on older students

By ELIZABETH S. KENT
Collegian Staff

Counseling Assistance for Older Students (CAOS) will be sponsoring a fishbowl discussion to be held tomorrow, from 12 noon to 2 p.m. in CC 804-808.

The discussion is part of the Student Affairs Speakers Series being sponsored by CAOS and will involve students, university staff and faculty. Eight or nine people will be selected to sit in the fishbowl and members of the audience can also join in. University staff and faculty will sit outside of the central group and will answer questions and respond to concerns voiced by the participants. Charlotte Rahaim, special assistant to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, will moderate the discussion.

"We hope that it will highlight the concerns and needs of older students and non-traditional students and point out their interaction with the total campus environment, including housing, financial aid, social environment, and student activities available to the older and non-traditional students," said David O. Baillie, program coordinator for CAOS.

Baillie said, "47 per cent of the entire student population is over 25. A lot of students under 25 are non-traditional students. CAOS caters to older students and non-traditional students. They're kind of synonymous."

Any person who did not come directly to an institution of higher learning after high school graduation is a non-traditional student.

CAOS was originally sponsored by the Non-Traditional Student Assembly (NTSA) which now shares its office space with CAOS. CAOS became a separate RSO group this past summer.

There are no dues to become a member of NTSA. It is more of a "feeling, a philosophy of how you feel the institution is meeting your needs. If you don't feel that it is meeting your needs, NTSA is one of the places that you can go," said Baillie.

CAOS is a counseling agency and does not restrict itself to older students. It is an RSO group and its office is located in SU 308. The monies for CAOS are from the Graduate Student Senate but its bookkeeping is done by RSO. Some monies also are from NTSA and are allocated for salaries.

The CAOS office has a 35 person staff which includes seven student interns, two volunteers, and 13 work-study students. CAOS developed its own in-service training program which involves 70 hours of training in one semester. The training includes a three credit course in the school of education, CASIAC training (each trainee becomes a certified academic counselor through CASIAC), and weekly update sessions.

"The average age of the persons who come into CAOS is 30, though that figure varies from semester to semester," Baillie said. "Fall semester of last year we saw 1500 people during the 16 week period. Most were here for academic services, problems and needs. This past spring semester we saw 800 during the semester many of whom were referred to some type of long term counseling service. CAOS serves as a referral agency because it was not built for long term counseling."

Baillee also said that NTSA serves as an advocacy for students. If students identify a problem with any administrative or departmental problem on campus, they should go to NTSA which will either offer help to the student or write letters to those people involved.

Last year NTSA did a Needs Assessment Project which surveyed the needs of a non-traditional student at UMass, Amherst. The survey will be published locally and nationally by the beginning of 1977. CAOS is presently assisting in an update of the survey which is in the form of a resource book, entitled 'If Only I Had Known.'

"Free 'the five' ... free Puerto Rico ... right now!"

A crowd of several hundred chanting supporters marched through the streets of New York last Saturday, expressing a collective desire for the freedom of the five Puerto Rican Nationalist Political Prisoners.

Rallying later in front of the United Nations building, a delegation of speakers representing the National Puerto Rican Solidarity Committee condemned United States imperialism and C.I.A. terrorism in Puerto Rico and also called for the unconditional release of the five Puerto Rican nationalists.

Arrested 22 years ago and labelled as terrorists, Lolita Lebron, Rafael Cancel Miranda, Irving Flores, Andres Figueroa Cordero and Oscar Collazox have become the longest held political prisoners in the Western Hemisphere.

"But are they the real terrorists," one speaker exhorted, "when Andres Figueroa Cordero is dying of cancer because the medical staff of the federal prison did not diagnose his illness correctly?"

"Who are the real terrorists," he continued, "when 35 per cent of Puerto Rican women have been sterilized in this country?"

"The United States and its politicians have created an unbelievable state of unemployment, destroying the basic function of human beings to produce and provide for their families and each other, and we ask, 'Who is the real terrorist'?"

Deviating momentarily from the central theme of the demonstration, the crowd cheered unanimously when the solidarity committee, on behalf of all those present, also expressed their international solidarity with the Cuban people and with the struggle in South Africa.

"The same way you are here today, you must come to support the struggle in Africa. Support for the National Liberation group in Africa is to support the struggle in Puerto Rico and the campaign for the unconditional release of the five Puerto Rican Nationalist Political Prisoners."

How old is South College? What is it used for?

Old South College was one of five original buildings on the UMass campus. It was built in 1867 and contained a dormitory, classrooms, and a museum of natural history. It was destroyed by fire and rebuilt in 1885 into the South College that stands today.

For many years, South College housed the music and theater departments. Today, it is used for a variety of things. It contains the deans' offices for the College of Arts and Sciences, the linguistics department, the comparative literature department, the UMass debate team, music practice rooms, the mail room for the library, and a television studio for the communication studies department.

Carter's church decides to open membership to all

PLAINS, Ga. [UPI] — The congregation of the Plains Baptist Church averted a personal and political crisis for Jimmy Carter yesterday by opening its membership to all persons — including blacks — "who want to worship Jesus Christ."

The vote, taken behind closed doors, cleared the way for a new attempt by the Rev. Clennon King, a black minister from Albany, Ga., to seek membership in the all-white church where Carter and his family worship. King said he would make his try next Sunday.

"I was proud of my church, God's church," Carter told reporters after the two hour, 45 minute meeting. "I'm completely satisfied with this church action, and I'm very proud of my church. I believe our church will now be unified."

Asked if he had influenced the decision, Carter said: "I was just one of the church members and they all know that."

One congregation member told a reporter that there was no bitterness at the meeting.

The congregation voted 120 to 66 to abolish a 1965 rule barring "negroes and civil rights agitators" from membership. The assembly also overruled, by a 107-84 vote, a recommendation by the deacons that pastor Bruce Edwards be dismissed for opposing the rule.

Future applicants for church membership will be considered by a "watch care committee" under a new rule, adopted in a third vote, which opens the church to "all persons who want to worship Jesus Christ."

Carter, who supported all three votes, said the committee's actions will be limited to questioning applicants to determine "if their intent is sincere. There is an understanding it will not be based on racial considerations."

Mood relaxed, inside church

PLAINS, Ga. [UPI] — Jimmy Carter spoke several times as a compromiser and peacemaker during a meeting yesterday in which members of his church voted to admit anyone, regardless of race.

According to some who attended the closed meeting, the general mood inside the Plains Baptist Church was subdued, calm and conciliatory during the two-hour, 45-minute meeting.

"Nobody just got up and screamed and yelled and acted ugly," said Ruth Carter, wife of deacon Hugh Carter, the President-elect's cousin.

According to accounts of the meeting, Carter said he thought that under the circumstances, both the deacons and Pastor Bruce Edwards had done a good job but had made mistakes.

Gilmore awaits decision on his bid for execution

SALT LAKE CITY [AP] — Convicted murderer Gary Mark Gilmore wanted to die before a firing squad at 8 a.m. today. Now he awaits a Board of Pardons meeting Wednesday where his lawyer says he will once again ask for an early date with death.

Meanwhile, attorneys fighting the execution so legal questions can be resolved said on Sunday future legal efforts will depend on the board's decision.

Attorney V. Jinks Dabney of the American Civil Liberties Union said ACLU representatives will attend the Wednesday hearing, but their particular strategy is undecided. The ACLU opposes death sentences as cruel and unusual punishment.

Attorney Robert Van Sciver, representing other death row inmates, said he will not attend the hearing. Van Sciver earlier asked for recognition as a friend of the court because Gilmore's execution could set precedents damaging to his clients' appeals.

On Saturday the London Daily Express quoted Gilmore, 35, as saying he wants to marry his girlfriend, Nicole Barrett, in a death row ceremony. His lawyer, Dennis Boaz confirmed that Gilmore had mentioned the idea, but the lawyer said he had not asked prison officials whether a wedding could take place. Prison officials said the request would be considered if it is ever made.

Mrs. Barrett, in her twenties, is a divorcee mother of two children from Springville, Utah. Boaz, has asked that they stay of execution be lifted so his client can avoid the "lingering death" of waiting.

The execution of Gilmore, convicted of killing a motel clerk in a robbery, was stayed by Gov. Calvin L. Rampton last week pending a review by the pardons board.

Boaz said Gilmore should be released because the state's failure to kill him leaves him in prison without a legal sentence. Boaz said last week that he might file motion in federal court for release.

Who's Afraid of Robert Woolf?

Heidi Berenson

Athletes today are being paid phenomenal amounts of money to entertain sports enthusiasts. Newly settled contracts are always in the media.

Did you ever wonder who makes these financial arrangements, or what the eventual outcome will be? You the fan should know as the athletes skyrocketing salaries are reflected on your raised ticket prices.

One man has been involved nationally in many sports deals. He refuses to negotiate a price where he feels the player is not worth it. This man is sports attorney, Robert Woolf.

Recently, ex-UMass basketball star Julius Erving, better known as Dr. J., became a "former" client of Woolf's. He was traded from the New York Nets to the Philadelphia 76er's a month ago. The story surrounding Erving's success is a good example of Woolf's uncompromising morals.

While Erving was a student here, breaking all sorts of records on the basketball team, he was also attracting the attention of the pro basketball scouts. Head UMass basketball coach, Jack Leaman had heard of Woolf's fine reputation. Leaman explained, "I didn't know what to do and I knew of his honesty." Leaman wanted the best assistance for Erving and so he sent Woolf with Erving to speak to the prospective team's coach.

Erving was offered a contract stipulating $125,000 for his first year. The funny thing about the transaction was that after he had signed the contract, it occurred to Woolf, and the new coach and his team that they had not actually witnessed Erving in action.

The rest is history. Erving proved to be a great investment. When Erving wanted to renegotiate his contract recently, Woolf refused saying that it was terrific if he had played well. But, what if he had played poorly. Would he have offered to give them back the money?

Erving said that he had an agent who would renegotiate the contract and that was where client and attorney parted.

Woolf is not only connected with the basketball team here, but also with the football team, and other teams as well. Woolf grew up with his head football coach, Dick MacPherson. He expressed his sentiment towards the UMass sports scene and Minuteman football, "I'm very proud of the progress that UMass has made, they have built up a fine reputation."

Woolf participated in college sports himself. He played basketball for Boston College for four years. He loves playing tennis and often has basketball games at home with the stars of all sports. He has played with Jim Plunket, Randy Vataha, Derek Sanderson, Calvin Murphy, and Louis Tiant at their sports.

Woolf recently completed a book that as he says, "gives a behind the scenes look to stories of national attention." His intention in writing the book entitled, Behind Closed Doors, was to clear up the falacies about sports that are around through media attention.

Woolf elaborated by saying: "I tried to tell about the athletes in the light that I saw them; that they are human beings, wrong or right."

In his 12-year career, Woolf has negotiated over 1000 contracts. He has dealt with the biggest names in the pro sports world: John Havlicek, Bobby Murcer, Geroge McGinnis, and carl Yastremski, just to name a few.

Woolf expressed that he "grows very fond" of most of his clients. In many cases, he said, "their lives are in my hands". The checks of Derek Sanderson and Calvin Murphy are sent to his office directly, and Woolf does the managing of it.

New heart technique developed

WASHINGTON [AP] — Scientists have developed a method of making computer-reconstructed movies of the heart while a patient vigorously exercises — something they say can't be done with standard ways of making internal heart pictures.

The National Institutes of Health researchers say the technique also is much less expensive, painful and dangerous to the patient than other forms of angiography, as cardiac picture-taking is called:

In a report to be delivered today in Miami at an American Heart Association meeting, the researchers said pictures taken while the heart exercises can reveal problems not evident when it is at rest.

With traditional angiography, an incision is made into an artery in the arm or leg and a tube is pushed through the vessel into the chambers of the heart.

Either a contrast dye is put into the heart through the tube and X-ray pictures taken, or a radioactive isotype is used instead of dye and images made from radioactive emissions.

Dr. Jeffrey S. Boret, "a senior cardiology scientist at the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute, and Dr. Stephen L. Bacharach and Michael V. Green of NIH's Clinical Center say their method will replace or at least supplement the older techniques.

Zarb predicts 'good chance' for no oil price increase

WASHINGTON [UPI] — If reason prevails, there is a "good chance" the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries will decide against raising prices at its December meeting, Federal Energy Administrator Frank Zarb said yesterday.

Those who talk about an impending increase of 10 to 20 per cent are involved in a "self-fulfilling prophecy," he said.

"We shouldn't take for granted that we're going to have to accept a sizeable increase. We don't need to have one, and they aren't entitled to one."

Zarb said the issue must be considered in the overall conduct of international relations.

"There are members who will continue to hold out for no increases," he said in an interview on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation."

Saudi Arabians "have been responsible members of the world community," he added, and they are likely to keep urging OPEC colleagues to be moderate.

"It seems to me that if reason prevails and good judgment prevails and those responsible members of OPEC are able to prevail, there is a good chance there will not be an oil increase," Zarb said.

"One cannot be defended based on any reasonable standard in international commerce." He also predicted the next session of Congress will review the question of taxing energy consumption.

"I would expect the gasoline tax would be one of the issues raised," he said. "But more importantly an across-the-board excise tax on energy consumption will be explored very carefully.

"The last two years of debate has been very constructive... And now the nation seems to be ready to take the steps necessary to get the job done. One of those questions will be prices we pay for energy and the extent that taxes can play a role in reducing consumption."

He said any energy tax would be phased in over several years. This would allow consumers, for instance, to buy smaller cars with the advance knowledge that gas would cost more soon.

Zarb said the administration proposal to deregulate natural gas will be before Congress in January, prior to Jimmy Carter's move to the White House.

Kuwait ponders oil price hike

KUWAIT [UPI] — Kuwaiti officials said yesterday they had not decided whether to support an increase in Arab oil prices this year, but added that an American diplomatic campaign against a price hike "will not scare anybody."

"We have not yet decided to increase our oil prices," Foreign Minister Sheikh Sabah Al Ahmad said. "That decision is the responsibility of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries when it meets in Qatar Dec. 15."

"We must not be surprised or excited by American charges that a price increase would harm the world economy, as we have become used to this kind of campaign," the foreign misister said.

Arab oil experts have said they anticipate the OPEC meeting will decide on a price increase of from 10 to 25 per cent, probably to take effect in January.

State Department spokesmen said last week the United States has undertaken "urgent consultations with other industrial nations" to express "strong opposition" to a price hike.

Foreign Undersecretary Rashid Al Rashid told reporters, "The United States will realize sooner or later that their policy is not ideal for creating understanding.

"But we think the present American administration will not take any measures that could make things difficult for President-elect Jimmy Carter."

Israel: Prime Minister ready for peace talks

JERUSALEM [UPI — Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said yesterday Israel is more than ready for peace talks with Egypt, but not if it means establishment of a hostile Palestinian state.

He said Israel wants "peace that gives defendable boundaries, a peace that solves the Palestinian issue in a way that will not be a seed that will arouse a lot of trouble and will serve as a time bomb for the future."

"If this is what President Sadat has got in mind, he'll find more than readiness on the part of Israel to do it," Rabin said, referring to Anwar Sadat's statement in Cairo last week to a delegation of visiting U.S. congressmen.

One high-ranking sources said Sadat's offer to open talks with Israel was "a good public relations loy." He said it was not clear whether Sadat wanted the talks to depend on conditions Israel previously rejected — withdrawal from all the territory occupied in the 1967 war and establishment of an independent Palnestinian state.

The sources said Israeli leaders did not know whether Sadat was referring to "real peace or peace in the next generation."

"We'd rather — excuse the expression — hear it from the horse's mouth," he said.

The source said Israel is always ready for negotiations towards an end of the state of war with the Arab countries, with the help of the United States or in direct contacts.

He said American concurrence with the U.N. Security Council resolution against Israeli occupation policies in the West Bank of Jordan should be seen as "an attempt to return to a posture of neutrality after several months of pro-Israeli gestures" during the U.S. election campaign.

The source said Sen. Abraham Ribicoff's suggestion for Carter to name Secretary of State Henry Kissinger as a special envoy for peace in the Middle East was "ill-conceived, ill-timed and ill-placed."

In Cairo Sunday, the Connecticut Democrat repeated his belief that "the one man who has the confidence of both the Arabs and the Israelis is Kissinger."

Syrian tanks advance on Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon [AP] — Scores of Syrian tanks rolled down from the mountains toward Beirut yesterday as the Syrians prepared to shut down the last active battle front of the Lebanese civil war — that dividing the capital itself.

The move to separate warring Moslems and Christians in the center of Beirut had been widely expected Sunday. However, it was delayed to give time for the reinforcements to get into place and to add at least a symbolic sprinkling of non-Syrian troops to what is supposed to be a pan-Arab peacekeeping force.

Reports circulated that the downtown occupation was now slated for dawn Monday. The reports could not be confirmed but were given credence by the tank movements and the sight of Syrian troops loading up supply trucks.

Sporadic sniping and shelling between Moslems and Christians continued in the port area, but reduced from earlier levels. Hospital and militia sources reported 10 persons killed in 24 hours, almost all in overnight shelling of civilian areas.

Syrian military police in red helmets closed off roads east of the capital for the columns of camouflage-painted T-54 and T-62 Soviet-made tanks. They clanked into position alongside some 170 armored vehicles and 6,000 troops in and around Beirut since Wednesday.

"Every tank in Syria must be on its way here," said a retired Lebanese civil servant who watched the armor move in.

Artillery batteries lined up at vantage points on hills east of the city to be ready to back the takeover operation in case of resistance. Six tank-mounted cannons eight yards long were seen in the southern suburbs, pointed toward the battle zones.

Lebanese liaison officers said a Saudi Arabian contingent joined the Syrian troops in southeastern Beirut, but declined to say how many. Syrian soldiers picnicking under a nearby olive tree said only a few dozen were involved.

DiGrazia hits Boston politics

BOSTON [UPI] — Former Boston Police Commissioner Robert J. diGrazia characterized city politics as "nefarious and byzentine". Sunday, while Mayor Kevin H. White said a controversial report issued by the commissioner "smacked of McCarthyism."

A report by a special investigative unit created by diGrazia alleging the police department's District 1 was fraught with corruption and incompetence was a sore point for both men in interviews aired by radio station WEEI.

DiGrazia said he was disappointed in the way the 572-page report was received, claiming it was "administrative tool" which was working all the better for the publicity it received.

White said the report was full of innuendo with nothing substantial on which he could take action.

"One of the most disappointing things to me is the reaction; the claim that it was a dig at the mayor; the claim that this was developed just at this particular time," said diGrazia, who left last week to become police commissioner in Montgomery County, Md.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Ford wraps up vacation

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. [UPI] — President Ford Sunday closed out a desert spa vacation that trimmed off some weight, improved his health and set him up for what aides said would be a busy final two months of presidential work.

He and Mrs. Ford were returning to Washington Monday morning from an eight-day vacation devoted to golf, sun, swimming, privacy and reflections upon the future.

But two White House sources said that Palm Springs may soon be seeing much more of Ford as an ex-president in residence.

They said that although he has made no final decision, Ford is still leaning toward this exclusive millionnaire's resort as a base of operations in private life because it combines three attractions dear to his heart: A variety of lush golf courses, a dry and sunny climate year-around and a residential community that includes many of the business executives and celebrities who have been his friends for years.

Attorneys seek Hearst's release

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — Patricia Hearst's attorneys worked yesterday on plans to protect her from being "rubbed out" in hopes of persuading a judge to release her from prison on bail this week.

Attorneys F. Lee Bailey and Albert Johnson, seeking bail for the newspaper heiress who was convicted of taking part in a bank robbery with the Symbionese Liberation Army that had kidnaped her, were told by U.S. District Judge William H. Orrick Jr. to submit plans assuring her safety.

Orrick told Bailey at a hearing Friday to offer a "plan of release" which would remain sealed. He said he would then rule on it. Bailey and Johnson said they hoped to have the plan in Orrick's hands early this week.

Bailey, pointing out that Miss Hearst, 22, has cooperated with government authorities by giving information, told a news conference she was a "potential witness in some very serious cases."

"People have been rubbed out in the past, and for a lot less," he said.

He said his office has received a message saying that the next time the terrorist SLA would send her home "in a paper bag."

Udall breaks both arms

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Rep. Morris K. Udall, D-Ariz., who lost his bid for the Democratic nomination to Jimmy Carter, fell from a ladder while repairing the roof of his suburban Virginia home Saturday and broke both his arms.

"This hasn't been my year" the 54-year-old Arizonan told UPI Sunday, referring to his loss to Carter.

Udall was treated and released from Bethesda Naval Hospital where a cast was put on his left arm, and a less seriously fractured right arm was put in a sling.

Udall was spending his first weekend at home since being elected to a ninth consecutive term in the House on Nov. 2.

"I'm a Harry Homeowner type and a lot of work piled up around the house and one of the jobs was to repair a leak on the roof. It was my own fault. I didn't place the ladder correctly and it collapsed on me."

Udall said he would be immobilized for at least 10 days, forcing him to cancel hearings planned this week by the House Interior subcommittee on energy, which he chairs.

N.E. governors huddle, urge economic aid for region

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y. [AP] — With a collective and hopeful glance south at President-elect Jimmy Carter, seven Northeastern governors put together yesterday a specific list of federal programs they want to help their region's slumping economy.

The seven Democratic chief executives, joined by some 100 economists, business and labor leaders, politicians and academics, spent the weekend here hammering out an "agenda" for Carter and the new Congress.

Although enthusiastic about their new unity, the governors acknowledged that their real hope for salvation and economic recovery lay in Washington, and not in this city famous for race horses, high rollers and healing baths.

Bishop Edwin Broderick's invocation at Saturday's dinner even included an appeal for more federal aid.

Gov. Milton Shapp of Pennsylvania spoke in terms of "B.C., before Carter."

The governors agreed to call on the Carter administration for an immediate boost in the federal contribution to welfare payments, at an estimated yearly cost of about $2.5 billion, to ask for relief from high foreign-oil prices and for federal loan guarantees for a new regional energy development corporation.

The governors of New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island and Vermont are all feeling the continuing pinch of the recession and are seeking quick help. The emphasis was on "doable, affordable" proposals, rather than on sweeping reforms.

For instance, the most urgent call was for an immediate increase in the federal welfare share. The governors endorsed a long-range, welfare reform plan, with federal minimum benefit levels, but stressed that they wanted the dollars first.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y. — Northeastern governors met yesterday to map plans for boosting the region's economy. Four of the seven governors in the group start the meeting with a handshake.

Commissioner to be sworn in BOSTON [UPI] — Joseph Jordan will be sworn in as police commissioner of Boston today with part of his new command already under criticism for alleged incompetence.

Jordan is to be sworn in by Mayor Kevin H. White to replace Robert J. diGrazia, who resigned to take a similar job in Maryland.

Jordan, who came up through the ranks, is expected to speak briefly at the installation ceremonies about the controversial report which charged police incompetence and corruption in the downtown District 1 area.

Ironically, Jordan will be sworn in at the District 1 police headquarters.

Indian claims considered

GAY HEAD, Mass. [AP] — Voters in this village at the tip of Martha's Vineyard will be able to decide in a special town meeting Nov. 23 whether to continue the legal battle with Wampanoag Indians over 250 acres of common land.

The decision resting with 180 registered voters will be whether to let selectmen take the steps necessary to return the land to the Indians. The tribe made its claim nearly two years ago and more federal court suit action is anticipated.

The Wampanoags claim the land was taken from them in violation of the Indian Non-Intercourse Act of 1790. That said any takeover of Indian land had to be approved by Congress.

The Wampanoags contend the land had been theirs long before white men settled on Martha's Vineyard and the 1790 act was violated when the town was incorporated in 1870.

Electric bills to double

BOSTON [UPI] — Electric consumption — and costs — will double in New England by 1985 primarily because of expenditures for new plants, according to the Massachusetts Energy Facilities Siting Council.

The report was based on information supplied by six of Massachusetts' largest electrical companies.

Consumption in 1985 will be about 49 billion kilowatt hours, the council said, shifting the industry emphasis from oil costs to construction costs. About 28 billion kilowatt hours were produced in 1975, it said.

"The utilities are forecasting that the days of declining electricity prices have permanently disappeared. Electricity is going to be more costly in the future," the council said.

The six utilities said the average cost to them to produce a kilowatt hour was 2.7 cents. The council predicted the cost would rise to 4 cents per kilowatt hour by 1985.

Nursing home suit planned

AUGUSTA, Maine [UPI] — Nursing home operators in Maine are considering a class action suit because the state Department of Human Services is considering placing a ceiling on the amount of government money nursing homes can receive for Medicaid patients.

Human Services Deputy Commissioner William Carney said over the weekend Medicaid is paying out too much, often because of inefficient or over-staffed nursing home facilities.

The ceiling is suggested in a report prepared recently by the department.

Nursing homes in the state are now receiving $32.5 million for Medicaid patients. Of that amount, $9.7 million is provided by the state.

from our perspective

If anyplace needs rent control, it's Amherst, Massachusetts. With the quick expansion of the University and the current moratorium on building, we now have a severe housing shortage.

A shortage of housing is measured by the vacancy rate. The Department of Housing and Urban Development has said "a vacancy rate under five per cent indicates a serious shortage." In a study done last year, the Amherst Planning Board concluded that "over the last half decade the vacancy rate in Amherst has been one of the lowest in Massachusetts (1.1 per cent) and there is no indication so far that it is substantially improving."

Housing is one of the few commodities whose price or market value increases as it deteriorates and gets older. This is because the value of a piece of property reflects the amount of income it can produce for its owner, and not its true value as a place for tenants to live.

When there is strong demand for housing, profits and rents go up rapidly. This makes property values go up too. And when a building is sold at a higher value, the rent goes up again — to pay for higher mortgage and property tax costs, which are based on the property value. This vicious cycle is a major symptom of the housing crisis here.

Under rent control, the value of a building will still be based on its profitability to the owner, not on its true worth to tenants. But since profits and rent increases are limited, values should go up less rapidly or stabilize.

Housing is a necessity. It should be provided and maintained to meet the needs of people who live in it, not the profit needs of banks, landlords, managers and realtors.

Rent control has stabilized rents, controlled arbitrary evictions and improved the housing conditions in other Massachusetts communities. It will work in Amherst if the referendum passes tomorrow.

We urge you to vote Yes for rent control.

Pornography perpetuates sexism in society

To the Editor:

In light of today's referendum, (12-6 p.m., Hampden), I will try to state very simply my views, which I believe to be the views of the majority of the SW Assembly. First of all, I am not opposed to sex on the screen. The Assembly cannot be compared to the past Supreme Court in that respect.

What I am opposed to is pornography which perpetuates the stereotyped roles and sexual inequality in our society. These sexist roles, we must realize, do not have adverse effects just on women, but on men also.

Secondly, Mr. Sparks, Chairperson of Baroque Enterprises, and I have other philosophical differences. I do not beliive that blatantly racist films such as Birth of a Nation should be shown in Southwest, but Mr. Sparks has no problem with that. He even went so far as to say that the Ku Klux Klan should exist, a statement that I strongly disagree with.

The main question is whether, in an educational environment which strives to be anti-racist and anti-sexist, the sole criterium for showing a film or making any presentation should be MONEY.

If we truly strive to be anti-sexist, then there must be other criteria.

I would also like to take this opportunity to thank the Southwest Woman's Center, the Southwest Men's Center, the Everywoman's Center, and many others for their support. Thank you for your time.

Christopher R. Durkin,
President,
Southwest Assembly

The U.N. and Vietnam

To the Editor:

"He hasn't made up his mind yet. If he has a position on the matter in the morning, we'll phone you," replied a secretary in U.N. Ambassador William Scranton's press office.

I recently phoned 212-826-4524 to inquire what the U.S. representative will do when Tuesday rolls in.

Tomorrow, Lame-Duck, et al. will decide to accept or reject admission of Vietnam to the United Nations.

After providing her with my number, name and address, I offered my advise: "Please tell the Ambassador to vote with World opinion, and accept Vietnam's bid for United Nations membership."

In the fall of 1975, the United States alone voted to exclude Vietnam. That should not happen again.

We are the United States. Phone Mr. Scranton. Remind him. Tell him we have not forgotten 60 million people. Perhaps he will vote his conscience.

Appeal for reconciliation. We must ... Lest they forget.

Vote 'Yes' for rent control

To the Editor:

The campaign to defeat the proposed rent control law in Amherst has generated more distortions than one could hope to correct in a single letter to the editor.

Thus I will attempt to answer only the most outrageous allegations by our local realty industry.

Opponents of rent control have spent quite a bit of money to buy ads claiming that local property taxes will increase and single-family homeowners will bear the unfair brunt of these tax hikes if rent control is instituted. This statement is, at best, undocumented speculation, at worst, pure false fabrication. In fact, rent control in time could actually lower the tax rate because:

—Data obtained from the Town Assessor's office suggest that some apartment owners in recent years have been inflating their cost factors in order to lower their tax bills. This would be corrected under the proposed rent control law, since the law would allow the rent control board to examine landlords' records, including cost factors, as a condition of adjusting rent levels, and landlords would no longer be able to escape paying their fair share of tax revenue to the town.

The proposed rent control law would require apartment owners to improve maintenance, which will keep property values up in neighborhoods containing multiple apartment units.

Opponents of rent control have insinuated that if the law is approved, developers will be discouraged from constructing desperately-needed new rental housing in Amherst. In fact, the proposed law addresses this concern directly by specifically exempting any such units started after January, 1977. The law also exempts owner-occupied units, sabbatical homes, hotels, and non-profit institutions.

Opponents of rent control have raised a paranoid spectre of tenants, students, "transients," etc., controlling rent levels in town because a majority of the rent control board "would" be tenants. This notion is absurd. The proposed law stipulates that the five-person rent control board shall be elected townwide at the annual town election. Any Amherst citizen will be eligible to run and the residents of the town — tenants and homeowners alike — will have the right and the responsibility to elect the five best-qualified candidates. What this DOES mean is that for the first time realtors and absentee landlords will no longer control the rental market. Rent control will, in fact, be initiated by the people through the democratic process, as it should be.

I urge my fellow Amherst residents to join with me in voting "YES" on the rent control referendum this Tuesday, November 16th.

People's Arts Festival

To the Editor:

Introducing! A People's Arts Festival, December 13, in the Student Union Ballroom and other areas of the campus center complex. On December 13, a display of video, film, music, and other artists, anyone who's interested is to be held. This will be the only time this semester that all the diverse organizations on this campus can combine their efforts to celebrate the humanities and arts in Amherst and the five-college area.

The preliminary work has been done by the student video project, by the program council music committee, by Hampshire films, to put together visual arts to be presented to the community.

I hope that from the idea behind this festival will grow future festivals and more importantly, greater involvement in this democratic process — which has allowed some rotten people to gain power; but which should also allow us to tell them what's going on through the media, through unity in housing, food, jobs, medicine, and other major issues. And if they don't agree, then they, like Nixon and Johnson, will say goodbye. And maybe we could stop ripping off Alaska and the blacks of South Africa and the people in prisons in this country and people at UPS whose union is being busted, I should know, I worked there.

But getting back to this university: since arriving here as an aspiring writer-musician-filmmaker and becoming a student senator-elect, I've filled two notebooks with writings about campus life, bureaucracy, education, people. I felt that the arts were being shoved back, especially from the people's point of view. For instance, the fine arts council constitution originally aimed to be of by and for the students; with faculty support; but now seems to have shifted to the right and student representation is being shafted. The stadium and the cage are off limits for concerts, while the ballroom is overcrowded, so the choice is the TOC or the Hatch or off-campus; yet we have a great facility here, several great facilities, which we could put to better use. Fleetwood Mac in the stadium? Leo Kottke in the concert hall? The fine arts council is strapped to last year's budget and administration veto. The program council is chained to the campus center complex.

My thoughts, and the thoughts of the people who've shared these ideas, from the music committee and program council, Barry Costa, from the senate, Brian Delima and Jay Martus, from the video project Dave Skillicorn, artist-in-residence John Furbish, Rita Russell, Michael Cuddy, from the Collegian, Joe Mahoney, from Hampshire college students with whom we are sharing this five-college area, are that something new is needed to inspire enthusiasm at this school and to overcome the lethargic republican repression of the '70's.

December 13 we are planning a festival of all media involving people from this community sharing their ideas with others. The festival will be free of charge, sponsored by the Program Council and video project.

We will be meeting next week. We've been talking to musicians and artists in the surrounding community, but we need more supporters so that we can make this school democratic and representative as it doesn't always seem to be.

Take one day off from your studies — December 13 — help to organize for the future.

The meeting will be held Wednesday the 17th at 4 p.m. in Campus Center, 805 809. All invited.

Censorship in Southwest:

Vote NO

Without doubt the most controversial issue on campus right now is pornography, and the question of whether and how it should be censored. Today residents of Southwest will have the opportunity to vote on a referendum dealing with that issue, and it is one vote which should not be taken lightly.

The question residents will be voting on, unless it has been altered since it was last stated in the Collegian, is: "Be it resolved: That the Southwest Assembly not allow pornographic films to be shown in Hampden Student Center because of the sexist and oppressive nature to the men and women of the community."

It seems that the most vocal and best-publicized opponent of the referendum is one Albert Sparks, the unchallenged king of UMass pornography promotion and head of Baroque Enterprises, a group which wishes to show porn flicks for profit in Southwest and other places. It is at best unfortunate that this man has emerged the principal spokesperson against the censorship measure, for he has repeatedly shown himself insensitive to the problem of sexist oppression, and argues against the referendum for all the wrong reasons.

Sparks and others have claimed that pornography is not really sexist, or if it is, it is oppressive to both sexes, and thus somehow of less concern. This is absurd. Pornography does depict people — and especially women — in demeaning and oppressive roles. Because movies do affect the way we think, pornography is to some extent oppressive.

But there is more to consider in dealing with this referendum. After reading it some frightening questions come to mind. Just what is a pornographic film? And who, exactly, will decide when a film will not be allowed?

Obviously, the Southwest Assembly (SWA) or some committee thereof will be entitled under the resolution to review and possibly censor any films to be shown in Southwest. One must thus also assume that the SWA will be determining what constitutes pornography, and will be using whatever criteria it deems appropriate to do so.

Pornography?

Putting such power into the hands of a relatively small group is blatantly elitist, and I suppose it could be argued that our lives are governed by elitists of assorted types, so why not be consistent? But the resolution is not just elitist — it is bad politics as well.

I would agree that society (and that includes Southwest) would be much better off without pornography, but the fact is we have pornography and must work not only toward its elimination, but toward the elimination of the attitudes that perpetuate its popularity. That can never be accomplished by imposing censorship.

Censorship has no educational value whatsoever. How can we deal with a problem when the "powers that be" insist on telling us how to think? Anyone who harbors sexist attitudes is more likely to react negatively to censorship than reform his or her ideas. We would do much better to allow Sparks and his money-grubbing brethren to show their trash, and picket the site of the movie armed with sensible ideas rather than elitist compulsion.

Certainly the SWA will bring change to Southwest if their referendum passes. But if it is not change in the wrong direction, it will be no more than superficial change. Much as I hate to find myself siding with Albert Sparks, I refuse to forfeit what little freedom I have in this world to the SWA or anyone else. Let's battle oppression in a way that doesn't assume all Southwest residents are hopeless sexists and require the dictatorial censorship of the divinely inspired Assembly. Please join me in voting NO today.

Free to be themselves

By MELANIE JOHNSON

Once upon a time there was a little girl who wanted to contribute something important to her society when she grew up. She easily became bored with the dolls and toys with which her mother plied her, and preferred rather to sit and dream of her future as a famous writer, a scientist, or President. She built cities from bricks and woodblocks while her dollhouse rusted in the closet. Her dolls she used only to populate the cities, in which the women became the leaders and the men helped them achieve their noble causes.

This same little girl went to elementary school and amazed her teachers with her quickness and curiosity. One teacher told the mother that her little girl would always be bored in school, because the classroom did not offer enough resources to challenge her active mind. The little girl loved school, however, and proudly displayed all her projects and papers.

As she grew older, she realized how isolated she was from other kids her age, who didn't understand her love of knowledge. She retreated further into her own world. She read piles of books: Gulliver's Travels, Alice in Wonderland, biographies of famous women, and the "classic" novels, which often bored her the most. She wrote about her loneliness; her first love who didn't know her name; her confusion; and her desire to find a place where she could act and think as she desired.

These diversions offered only temporary solace. Eventually, her anger and anguish would return, and she cried herself to sleep at night, desperately trying to understand what was wrong with her.

When she entered high school in a new town, she decided to try a new approach to her world. She stopped reading and dreaming and started to conform to the standards of her peers. She watched soap operas in the afternoons and giggled over the phone half the night. She scorned studying, especially math and science, and never told anyone her grades, particularly if they were high.

She very quickly had many friends. She sang in the chorus, worked on the yearbook staff, and lived for dances, parties, and football games. She fell passionately in and out of love with regularity, and often defined herself in relation to her friends. Finally, her class voted her "Most Fun" and she felt as though she had finally found her niche in society.

But still she could not completely shut out the person that lived within her. She wanted to go to college and begin serious work on a career. Suddenly, she started to take her education seriously again, and resented those who looked at her curiously when she seemed more excited by college than the senior prom. She didn't understand why the men she loved laughed at her ambitions and treated her like a toy. Their mockery hurt and confused her, making her wonder if they did indeed love her.

At college, the same problems that had plagued her at other schools continued to haunt her. Her roommate resented her interest in her classes and her high grades. Many of her male friends teased her about being a cute little girl, and were amazed to discover that she was often much smarter than any of them. She spent many lonely weekend nights in her room, brushing off others' ridicule, and questioning herself.

At times she would abandon her resolve and play the games of pursuit and conquest. She would flirt at parties, get drunk, and laugh the next day about how great a fool she hade made of herself. While she laughed, however, she wondered why she felt so torn, tired, and hurt. These questions brought on more confusion, tears, anger, and fear. She cut herself off from many of the people she had known in high school and tried, once again, to find herself.

She still hasn't found all the answers. Admittedly she's happier now and more sure of her direction. She isn't afraid to pursue her interests and needs. She discovered that she doesn't need to identify herself with an image, and she's no longer afraid to be different. An understanding and tight group of friends have given her the greatest support, with whom she has spent many tear-stained nights, and without whom she might still be floundering. Yet, the frustration and confusion still lingers.

She still feels awkward when people ask her why she doesn't want to go to the Blue Wall. She feels at a loss when men tell her she's attractive. She doesn't understand when she sees people hurt themselves or others. And she's impatient to have her questions answered.

She wants to end all her sisters' suffering. Often she strikes out blindly. Other times she backs away, unsure of what to do.

She realizes now that she must struggle against an environment that has no room for her. As liberated and free as this society purports to be, it still leaves little room in which women can find their identities and fulfill their needs. When people point to the great strides women have made in assuming men's roles, one must remember that these roles are just that: men's roles.

What does our society have to offer the needs of women? As they grow older and realize that their potentiality is being squashed and denied, they too will suffer and cry. They too will feel the constraints upon their actions and attitudes. Some will conform, some will find small pockets of support; others will rant and rage. I doubt if any will be entirely happy. Most will experience some degree of fear; fear of change, fear of an uncertain future, and perhaps, fear of themselves.

Ultimately, no simple answers exist. Our little girl has become a woman who questions her world and tries desperately to understand why she and her sisters continue to suffer. She and others have taken the first in many steps to the achievement of their final goal: freedom. Someday they will be free from their doubts about themselves, free from the constraints of a limited social order, free from pain, and most importantly, free to be themselves.

WHAT'S IN A NAME? Shakespeare would have delighted in the knowledge that the person who oversees the student newspaper at Pepperdine U. (Cal.) goes by the handle, Beth Ogle.

ADD HEADY HEDS: after the second round of the Great Debates by Carter and Ford, the Indiana Daily Student ran a commentary under the headline, "A verbose dose of the bellicose."

WHERE IT'S AT DEPARTMENT...CASS advertising of Chicago, an outfit that acts as advertising sales rep for many college newspapers around the land, undertook a survey that reveals college newspapers as being the "most honest and credible" medium of communication by 30 per cent of those polled. Magazines scored 21 per cent, and t.v., six per cent.

Of all students surveyed, 88 per cent said they had read their college newspaper within the last seven days, while only 58 per cent of the students had read a city newspaper.

Time and Playboy are the most popular magazines among students. The poll revealed 36 and 34 per cent, respectively, had read the latest issues.

CONTROVERSIAL CHEERLEADER Glen Williams at Miami-Dade (Fla.) Community College made the headlines in a half-page feature by the Falcon Times sports editor, recently. editor, recently.

"I'm gay and everyone knows it," the only male cheerleader on the squad is quoted as saying. "When I'm with the girls, I feel like I'm a normal girl. I don't feel funny."

Cheerleading Captain Dorothy Vail says of him: "He is good...People will come to the games just to see him jump."

The features, complete with pictures of the cheerleader in action, was tied to the headline, "Just another one of the girls."

RECENT CENSUS FIGURES show that 33 per cent of all college students are over 25 years of age (47 per cent at UMass). And there are a million college students over age 35.

No wonder the campuses are so quiet, this year.

'Good old days' were worse

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (UPI) — The problems of our cities — pollution, crime, riots, planning, transportation — are bad but they could be worse. In the "good old days" for instance.

Cities have changed and grown during the past century. The basic problems pretty much the same, according to Dr. Charles Adrian. But he believes things may be a little better now.

Adrian, a political science professor at the University of California, Riverside, cites pollution from automobiles as one example. It may be bad, he says but horses were horrible.

"Horses were special problems. The amount of horse manure generated was really something terrific when cities were becoming quite large.

Motor vehicle tips suggested

With fuel costs at all-time highs and with the need for conservation still present, Registrar of Motor Vehicles Robert A. Panora, reminded motorists today that pre-winter tune-ups are more important than ever.

"A pre-winter tune-up not only contributes to safety and convenience, but has the added advantage of improving fuel economy," Panora said.

Along with the usual tune-up which should include an inspection of the electrical system and the emission control devices, the registrar said it was even more important to check those equipment items that directly affect winter driving safety, such as tires, tire chains, brakes, windshield wipers and washers and lights.

He made the following recommendations as part of the motorist's "do-it-yourself" checklist:

—TIRES — Tires with good treads are important all year 'round, but especially when pavements are covered with snow and ice. Snow tires are particularly helpful for pulling through loosly-packed snow, but they offer no advantage in stopping on icy pavements. For icy conditions, studded tires improve both stopping and pulling ability.

—TIRE CHAINS — That old standby, reinforced tire chains, provides the most help for pulling through deep snow or driving on ice-covered pavements. Carry them in the car truck and be prepared to use them for severe snow and ice conditions.

— WINDSHIELD WIPERS — Replace streaking blades and be sure windshield washers have adequate anti-freeze.

—LIGHTS — Clean lights more frequently during the winter months to remove snow, slush and road-muck. This should include headlights, tail lights, stop lights and directional signals.

—BRAKES — A brake that grabs or pulls to one side is a serious matter at any time, and particularly when pavements are slippery. If you feel your car pulling to one side when stopping on a dry pavement, it's past time for an inspection by a competent mechanic.

"Check your car, then double-check your driving habits," Panora concluded. "Safe winter driving requires a little extra time, a little slower speed, a little extra care and a little more common sense."

Panel of specialists discuss 'Prenatal and Infant Nutrition'

"Prenatal and Infant Nutrition" will be the subject of the first in a series of community discussions sponsored by the Valley Health Plan, University Health Services and Amherst Medical Associates tonight at 7:30 in Skinner Auditorium.

A panel of health professionals will discuss topics including feeding schedules, weight gain, breast and bottle feeding, diet modifications, homemade foods, and problems resulting from malnutrition. The panel members will include Lisa Lambiase, R.D., clinical nutritionist; Kathryn Pope, R.N., pediatric nurse practitioner; and Samuel Topal, M.D. and David Shifrin, M.D., specialists in obstetrics and gynecology. Bob Olson, M.P.H., health educator, will serve as moderator for the panel. Each panelist will make a brief presentation and general discussion will follow. It is open to the public without charge.

"Prenatal and Infant Nutrition" was selected as the subject of the first community discussion because of the importance and timeliness of this health issue to local residents. Jean Mayer, a professor in nutrition at Harvard, said in a recent article that "A sound diet before pregnancy is one of the best ways to give birth to a healthy baby." Some clinicians suggest that "certain characteristics of the adult individual, including adult mental retardation, obesity, hypertension, and atherosclerosis, have their origins in early feeding patterns." (Dairy Council Digest, March-April, 1976, issue). Malnutrition before birth is a major factor in low birth weight, which is associated with one half of all infant deaths and a large number of physical and mental handicaps.

Parents and couples planning a pregnancy often have many questions about this subject, and this panel discussion will seek to answer them.

Anyone with an interest in prenatal and infant nutrition is invited to attend this opening community discussion.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Artist displays etchings at Smith

An exhibition, "Etchings for Emily Dickinson, Ten Poems," and "Susanna, An Image of the Truth of God" by Gary Niswonger of the Smith College art department, is currently on view in the lobby and rare book room at Neilson Library at Smith.

The library exhibition has been arranged to coincide with a Niswonger exhibition, "Recent Pages: Images of Unconsciousness" at the Smith Museum of Art.

On display in the lobby of the library are the title page and the first of five etchings of "Susanna." Recently, Niswonger gave copy number six of 15 copies of the work to the rare book collection.

The text of "Susanna," printed at the Gehenna Press in 1976 by Harold P. McGrath, was taken from an edition of the Bible which is in the rare book collection.

The portion of the library exhibit which is in the lobby is open during library hours: Monday through Saturday from 8 a.m. to midnight and Sunday from 10 a.m. to midnight. The rare book room is open weekdays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. The museum's hours are Tuesday through Saturday from 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and Sunday from 2 to 4:30 p.m. Both exhibitions will continue through Nov. 28.

Women's group to plan events

There will be an organizational meeting of the Title IX Task Force tonight at 7:30 in the Duke's Room, 310 Student Union.

The meeting is to plan events for Women's Week in March. The main topic of discussion will be: how to get funding, what events to plan, goals for the task force, and what the political implications of what women are doing are.

Anyone who is interested in having input into the format, contents, and planning of a week of women's events should try to make this meeting. If anyone is interested, but cannot attend, please contact rene Richards, Program Advisor, 416 Student Union, or Anne Thorkelson, senate office, 420 Student Union.

Israel environment is discussion topic

"Land Policy and Environmental Issues in Israel" is the topic of a panel discussion being held today in Campus Center room 904 at 4 p.m.

Dr. Irving Howard, professor of Political Science at UMass and author of a study on land use and resource management of Israeli municipal institutions, and Herman Brown, New England director of the Jewish National Fund, will be participants in the discussion. All interested people are invited to attend.

Preserving orchard subject of meeting

There will be a meeting of the Coalition for Alternative Agriculture and Self-Sufficiency tonight at 7:00 in Campus Center room 904.

Organizers say their immediate goal is the preservation and rejuvenation of the University orchard. "Its diversity, fertility, accessibility and natural beauty make it potentially and invaluable asset to the UMass campus and student life here," they claim.

A student survey to determine campus support for the orchard revival idea is almost complete, and there are people evaluating every fruit tree to determine if it can be saved or not.

All those interested in helping are invited to tonight's meeting.

Rough waves til sundown

By JACOB LOVE

The waves of time go up and down while we try to paddle along in our soul-boats, in our chosen direction. The Sun heats our atmosphere which causes wind which blows and causes waves. For one more week, the Sun is blowing from that part of the sky called Scorpio, the sign that looks like a scorpion with a huge stinger. The waves may tend to get stinging during this season but above the constellation Scorpio we can see the constellation of Ophiuchus. He holds a large tailing serpent in his hands as if he had tamed it. This is symbolic of the healing power which stands above the Scorpius for Ophiuchus is a doctor, a healer of troubled souls. We might hope to move above the sting today, whether it comes from us or at us. But in order to tame the serpent (rather than just hiding from its stinging power) we must overcome our feat of the sting (or bite, depending upon which end you're coming from).

Mercury, the planet of communication, has been moving thru Scorpio for several weeks now, stirring hidden thoughts and desires which dared not come to the surface in this secretive sign. But this morning Mercury will form a crisis-provoking connection with Pluto, the planet which "rules" Scorpio. Pluto is currently 45 degrees behind Mercury, in the sign of harmony, Libra, mucking-up our ability to balance in relationships. So this morning, when Mercury finally feels provoked to talk, we may find someone's tongue to be very sharply pointed. And we'll have to stretch a bit or risk upsetting our relationship with someone close.

Venus, goddess of harmony, "rules" Libra, but she's currently in Capricorn, the struggle-up-the-mountain sign. Saturn, the dues-collector, rules Capricorn and insists that we have our climbing act together or knocks us off the cliff. Late this afternoon, Venus forms a crisis-provoking connection with Saturn which could stimulate responsibility and a committment to struggle or clamp a vise-like grip on our love energy.

Towards sundown, Mars opposes Jupiter. The former planet brings waves of extroverted energy (and it's often militant) and Jupiter brings waves of joy. If their energy is balanced, all is well. But Mars is in secretive Scorpio and Jupiter is in possessive Taurus so harmony will not come easily. A sense of sharing could be helpful, if we're sure that we're in a situation that deserves our open-heartedness. Otherwise, it may look like it's time for a change.

The Moon meanwhile is pulling our emotional tides thru the sign of Virgo, which promotes a sense of analytic practicality. If we use this emotional energy wisely, we can find a clear-cut picture of the pros-and-cons in our personal drama but oftentimes this energy tends to get overly critical and puritanical. Early this morning and late this evening she forms two connections of harmony which can mellow out the day if we focus on love and spontenaiety.

In any event, the waves will smooth out thru the evening and we'll find relative calm again tomorrow morning.

African nations move to save Rhodesia talks

GENEVA, Switzerland [UPI] — African states led by Tanzania urged black Rhodesian leaders Sunday to compromise on a date for transition to black majority rule and save the Rhodesia peace talks from a possible breakdown.

Nationalist leaders Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe, however, maintained their demands that the transition be completed within one year, a demand to which the white regime will not agree.

Ivor Richard, the British conference chairman, postponed a plenary session Saturday until Monday after the four "front-line" African states around Rhodesia told him they may be able to persuade nationalist leaders to accept a compromise.

The leaders of Tanzania, Zambia, Botswana and Mozambique, the four observer nations, met with Nkomo's and Mugabe's delegations through the weekend.

The two nationalists conferred privately Sunday on whether to modify their position or stick to their joint demand for a specific date to which all parties would be committed.

Richards wants the nationalist delegations and the white minority government faction to agree on the details of an interim government and then fix a specific date for majority rule.

The white government has agreed with Richard, saying the real test of the negotiations will be in reaching agreements on the formation of an interim government.

The nationalists, however, have threatened to ask for adjournment of the talks if the date issue is not resolved before other issues are discussed.

Section 5. Maximum Rent. Initially, the maximum rents would be those charged for May, 1976. The rent board is required to register all controlled units.

Section 6. Maximum Rent Adjustments. The board is required to adjust maximum rents to assure that they yield to landlords a fair return on investment. The board may classify units on the basis of age, size, location or other common characteristics.

In determining a fair rate of return on investment, the board is required to consider changes in property taxes, operating and maintenance expenses, capital improvements, living space, services, furnishing, and the condition of the property. The board must also consider the method of accounting used by the landlord. Other factors may also be considered.

The board may set a standard schedule of rent increases and decreases for improvements of deterioration of facilities and services.

The board may refuse to grant rent increases if the unit does not comply with the state sanitary code or other state or municipal codes. The board may refuse to grant rent increases if the unit does not comply with the state sanitary code or other state or municipal codes. The board may refuse to grant decreases if the tenant is more than 60 days in arrears in rental payment, except when the arrearage is due to withholding of rent under Chap. 239, Sect. 8 of the General Laws.

The board may decontrol any class of units and may later reestablish controls.

A landlord and tenant may agree to a rent less than the maximum.

Section 7. Rent Adjustment Hearings. The board must consider a request for a rental adjustment made by either a landlord or a tenant. A hearing must be held if either party requests one.

The board may, on its own initiative, make general adjustments by percentage for any class of rental unit. In such cases, a hearing must always be held.

The board may, without a hearing, refuse to make an adjustment if a hearing for the unit has been held within 12 months.

Section 8. Evictions. To recover possession of a controlled rental unit, a landlord must show cause (nonpayment of rent, destruction of property, illegal acts, etc.) or seek the unit for personal use or use by a relative or seek to remove the property from housing use.

Sections 9, 10, and 11. Judicial Review, Civil Remedies, and Criminal Penalties.

Decisions of the rent board are subject to review by the District Court.

Civil remedies and criminal penalties are specified.

Section 12. Revocation of this Act. The act may be revoked by a majority vote at an annual town election. The question can be placed on the ballot only by petition of not less than 2 per cent of the registered voters of the town.

Steelers roll on; eye playoffs

Compiled from Wires

Franco Harris rushed for 107 yards and a touchdown and reserve running back Reggie Harrison also scored a touchdown yesterday to lead the Pittsburgh Steelers to their first victory over the Miami Dolphins, 14-3, in a nationally televised game.

Harris scored the Steelers' first touchdown on a 21-yard run and Harrison scored the other on a one-yard plunge after rookie quarterback Mike Kruczek completed a 64-yard pass to Frank Lewis, the pass play by the Steelers this season.

Rocky Bleier rushed for 113 yards in 21 carries, making the Pittsburgh backfield only the fourth pair of running backs in NFL history to have back-to-back 100-yard games. Harris' yardage, gained in 22 carries, was his 24th 100-yard plus game, making him fifth in the NFL in 100-yard game performances.

Walter Payton burst the 1,000-yard rushing barrier yesterday and tied a Chicago record with his 12th touchdown of the season to spark the Bears to a 24-13 victory over the Green Bay Packers.

Payton, playing with a sprained ankle, ran two yards for the Bears' first touchdown, equalling Gale Sayers' team record of scoring a touchdown in seven consecutive games. The Bears never lost the lead.

Quarterback Ken Anderson, faced with a desperation fourth down play with just 42 seconds remaining, connected with wide receiver Isaac Curtis for a 47-yard touchdown yesterday to give the Cincinnati Bengals a 31-27 victory over the Houston Oilers.

Trailing 27-24, the Bengals had a fourth and four at the Houston 47, when Anderson spotted Curtis at the 35-yard line.

After grabbing Anderson's pass, Curtis jitter-bugged his way around several Houston defenders and into the end zone with the game-winning touchdown.

Fran Tarkenton threw a five-yard touchdown pass to Stu Voigt late in the fourth quarter yesterday to lift the Minnesota Vikings to a 27-21 victory over the expansion Seattle Seahawks.

After the go-ahead touchdown with 4:52 left in the game, the Vikings still needed a goal line stand in the final minutes to preserve the victory.

Joe Namath came off the bench late in the first quarter yesterday to spark a 24-point first half and New York's defense turned in its first shutout in 13 years as the Jets routed the winless Tampa Bay Buccaneers 34-0.

Namath threw for one touchdown and set up two others as the Jets, who had scored an NFL low of only 76 points in nine previous games.

"I should be able to run well," said Quinn. "My stomach was tied up in knots for the first few days of last week but I took it easy and I feel better."

Breaking into his first varsity championship race is the brother of John McGrail, Neal. Neal McGrail, replacing senior Chris Farmer, is the most improved runner this season, according to coach O'Brien.

"Neal has worked really hard this year and has shown tremendous improvement. In almost all of the varsity races he has been in, he has been in the top five for the first four miles, but hasn't been able to hang on. But I think he runs well at Van Cortland and should help us," O'Brien said.

O'Brien feels his runners have an excellent chance of winning today's championship race but he hopes that none of his runners will reach a peak.

"We still have one more meet after this one as a team if we do well, and our goal for this season was not to run and peak for one particular meet. We hope that our best performance lies ahead of us," he said.

Bosox outpricing the fans

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

If you haven't heard by now, the ticket prices for Boston Red Sox games in Fenway Park have been increased 50 cents for the 1977 season.

Starting in April, box seats will now cost you $5.50, reserved grandstand seats $4.50, general admission $3.00 and bleachers $2.00.

In a statement released to the public last Thursday afternoon, Red Sox General Manager Dick O'Connell said, "We have always been reluctant to raise ticket prices. However, I know New England fans are aware of the constantly increasing costs in all phases of baseball operation."

In response to Mr. O'Connell's statement and the decision of the Red Sox to raise ticket prices, I offer the following rebuttle.

Dear Mr. O'Connell,

Why is it that the baseball fans of New England have to continue to put up with your escalating ticket prices? It certainly takes a lot of nerve on your part to raise the ticket prices after the fans supported your disappointing and stumbling team very loyally all season long. Nearly two million fans jammed into your tiny ballpark last season, and you say you still have to raise the ticket prices?

I may be making a big-to-do about a 50 cent raise in ticket prices, but at the rate you are going, you are going to outprice your product and you will lose your most loyal fans, the middle-class sports fan.

Through thick and thin, it has been the working people in the New England region that have faithfully supported your team, and now you turn around and reward these people by raising the price of tickets.

No longer can a family of four enjoy an afternoon at the ballpark, not having to worry about spending a whole lot of money. Not too long ago, a family of four could purchase four box seats for no more than $15. Now for the same seats, it will cost that same family over $22.

Even the bleachers are no longer the great bargain they once were. When will all this end? When will we be able to stop worrying over rising ticket prices?

Is this your way of attempting to buy an American League pennant? Is this the only way you can raise enough money to pay off all the primadonas on your team and that ugly commercial scoreboard in center field which totally destroyed the uniqueness of Fenway Park? Go ahead, continue to take the money from our pockets and you'll see how loyal the Red Sox fans remain.

Go ahead Mr. O'Connell, go sign another free agent for another one million dollars. Go ahead, Mr. O'Connell, continue to pay your ballplayers 10 times their actual worth. Go ahead, buy yourself another pennant. Go ahead and continue to downgrade the sport of baseball and its fans.

Sincerely,
A Disgruntled Fan.

For their internship, each student is free to choose the level they wish to work at. If you have interest in the administrative aspects of the professional ranks, you have the opportunity to intern with such pro teams as the Celtics, Red Sox, Patriots, Denver Nuggets, Buffalo Braves, New York Nets etc. However, if your interests are geared more toward the collegiate ranks, you have the opportunity to serve an internship with the ECAC headquartered on Cape Cod, or with any cooperating athletic department across the country.

If you are interested in community recreation, you are given the opportunity to work in local YMCA's, health camps or town recreation centers.

The internships serve not only as a great educator, but it also gets one foot into the industry for you. You may not land a job with the team or organization you intern for, but other people find out about the work you did.

Any student enrolled in the University is eligible for admission into the program. For further information, see Dr. Coffey in the Boyden Building, or drop by the Sports Studies office in Curry Hicks.

Tomorrow a look at the sports communication program.

Spikers ousted early

It was an all-day tournament in Worcester Saturday, but for the UMass volleyball team, it was a short afternoon.

UMass lost in the opening rounds of the single elimination MAIAW tourney to Mt. Holyoke, 15-13, 10-15, 3-15 to make for a quick and disappointing trip.

Mt. Holyoke then advanced to the quarter finals of the six team tourney, only to lose to the eventual champion, Springfield.

"The team was just trying too hard," UMass coach Dianne Thompson said after the game. "They were uptight, and they just beat themselves."

UMass, in its final action of the year, will participate in the Easterns this weekend in Edinboro, Pa.

Sports Studies dept. growing at UMass...

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

Editor's note — This is the first of a two-part series acquainting the University with the Sports Studies department.

Once again it is that time of year when UMass students have to sit down with their advisors and plan their course of study for the upcoming semester. For some students, the pre-registration period is nothing special because they have everything pretty much planned out and are anxiously awaiting graduation.

However, for other students, the pre-registration period is an agonizing and frustrating week because they aren't exactly sure of what they want to get out of their four years of college. For those of you who remain undecided and want to take up a new major, I have some good information for you.

If you are unhappy with your major and present course of study, drop your number two pencil and put you pre-registration form aside for a moment.

Undoubtedly, if you are reading these pages, you must have some interest in the sports field. However, why should your interest in sports stop on the sports pages? How would you like to apply your knowledge of sport to a course of study? Who knows, with your knowledge and ideas, you may revolutionize the decaying sports scene.

Now you may wonder how you go about to enter such a program. Let me tell you that it's very easy. As a matter of fact it's right under your nose.

The Department of Sports Studies is one of four departments in the School of Physical Education at UMass. With its main offices located in Curry Hicks, adjacent to the Cage, the Sports Studies department offers all University undergraduates and graduates the opportunity to major in sports administration, sports communication and sports studies.

Officially approved by the University on August 6, 1975, the Sports Studies department at UMass is one of eight schools across the country that offers programs in sports administration. Other universities that offer such a program are: St. John's University, Western Illinois, Ohio University and Biscayne CC. So as you can see, UMass is one of the few universities across the country that recognizes the need for study in the sports administration field an offers a program to its students.

Under the direction of Dr. Harold Vanderzwaag, head of the Sports Studies department, and Dr. Guy Lewis, faculty advisor, the sports administration program is growing rapidly and becoming one of the more popular programs of study.

The sports administration program is basically designed for those students who seek an administrative position in some sport organization, or in a sporting goods industry. Sports administration majors combine physical education classes, such as the history, sociology, psychology and philosophy of sport, with several business classes. Among the business classes taken by sports administration majors are accounting, finance, marketing and management.

However, a student in the sports administration program doesn't receive most of his learning experience in the classrooms at UMass. Sports administration majors receive the most important part of their learning experience while serving a one-semester internship in the outside world.

...offering a unique course of sport study

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

So maybe you root for a number of sports teams. So maybe you read Sport, Sports Illustrated, The Sporting News, or any number of sports magazines. So maybe you attend baseball, football, or other kinds of sporting events. So maybe you know the Baseball Encyclopedia backwards.

But have you ever wondered what made you tick?

Well, an experimental course which is slated to be offered by the Sports Studies department next semester will do just that.

The Sport Fan, or, if you will, Sport Studies 190B, will examine who sport fans are and why they devote so much time, money, and energy to following the team of their choice.

The course is the brainchild of professor Judy Toyama, who gives several reasons why she decided to teach about a large segment of the American population.

"Most Sport Studies courses are involved only in examing athletes. coaches, and referees," Toyama says. "Most of American society is involved in sport, though, and they have been neglected for a long time."

Toyama adds that she has always been interested in certain types of sports fans, and wrote her master's thesis on the behavior and language of Green Bay Packer fans.

"I've always been amazed that some fans will root for a pro team if it has its favorite college teams players on it," Toyama relates. "My family, for example, does that with USC graduates and their pro teams."

Her course will deal with a number of factors which go into shaping sports fans, while also examining the psychology of the fan as well as the "special types" of fan. Some of the fascinating labels Toyama gives them are 'groupie,' 'frustrated referee sport fan', and 'specific ethnic sport fan.'

Toyama plans on using the newly-published Fans! How we go Crazy over Sports as her text.

"A journalist, Michael Roberts, wrote it," she explains. "It's by no means a scholarly book, but we plan on using it as a springboard for our discussions and other things."

Those "other things" Toyama plans on doing include analyzing letters to the editor in Sports Illustrated (known as the 19th Hole) and studying the psychology of gambling. in addition, she says that her class will do some "fund thing", such as going to games.

What? Three credits for attending a game?

"If we go to a game, we'll observe fans and their behavior," Toyama explains. "It has to do with a section on collective behavior — what happens when people get into a crowd and the characteristics that make them behave this way."

Toyama also intends to study the woman sport fan ("a neglected study — should be interesting") and cartoons. Peanuts, Doonesbury, and Tank McNamara had best beware when the class get its hands on it.

For those of you who have a bugaboo about course requirements, Toyama will base her grades upon two exams and three short assignments.

"The assignments will be pretty structured," she says. "Things like going to games, noticing the placements of certain sports on sports pages, and other such ideas are examples of the king of things that could be expected."

Toyama sums up the purpose of her course by saying, "I hope to make people stop and think what a sport fan is."

half down by just 9-0, I figured we could adjust and get back in the game," said MacPherson. "But New Hampshire wouldn't let us. We just couldn't make the big play on offense or defense," he added.

The Minutemen did move to the UNH 39-yard line near the start of the second half, the big gain coming on a 15-yard face-masking penalty on the Wildcats. But the drive ended when UMass quarterback Brian McNally drilled a three-yard pass into the surprised arms of UNH defensive tackle Bill Logue at the line of scrimmage.

Four minutes later, Wildcat quarterback Jeff Allen hit flanker Ray DiPietro for a 50-yard score to put the game out of reach, 16-0.

UNH closed out the scoring in the fourth quarter when tight end Bill Wharff gathered in a five-yard TD pass from running back Bill Burnham on a halfback option play.

The much-heralded Burnham carried 28 times on the day for a bruising 88 yards, while teammate Tim Pendry carried 11 times for 64 yards.

Pendry set up UNH's first touchdown with a 39-yard romp, onto which was tacked 15 yards when UMass defensive back Vic Jeffries tackled Pendry by the face mask. Two plays later, Allen hit DiPietro for an 11-yard score which, combined with Tom Leavitt's earlier 26-yard field goal, gave the Wildcats their small halftime lead.

For the Minutemen, the most exciting play of the day was, fittingly, a John Romboli punt which, including a 30-yard roll, traveled 73 yards.

Pats derail Colts; defense keys win

BALTIMORE [UPI] — Quarterback Steve Grogan ran for two touchdowns and cornerback Mike Haynes intercepted a pair of Bert Jones passes yesterday to lead the New England Patriots to a 21-14 victory over the Baltimore Colts.

Grogan scored on a pair of short plunges and set up the Patriots' third touchdown with a pass to Al Chandler.

Haynes stopped two Colts' drives in the second half with interceptions off Jones, who had been intercepted only five times previously this season.

New England's win closed the gap in the AFC East to one game. The Patriots, who improved their record to 7-3, snapped a six-game winning streak by the Colts, now 8-2.

The Colts lost a chance to score with 10 minutes left in the game when running back Lydell Mitchell fumbled on New England's 21 and the Patriots' Sam Hunt recovered.

Less than a minute earlier, Patriots running back Andy Johnson had fumbled on his own 28 with Colts safety Bruce Laird recovering.

Grogan climaxed a 68-yard drive with a two-yard touchdown pass to tight end Al Chandler to give the Patriots a 7-0 lead in the first quarter.

Baltimore tied the game, 7-7, after safety Jackie Wallace recovered a fumble by Patriots tight end Russ Francis at the Baltimore 44. Jones took the Colts 56 yards in nine plays, hitting Roger Carr for a 22-yard touchdown pass.

The Patriots' Don Calhoun ran 54 yards to the Colts' 15-yard line to spark a 77-yard march capped by Grogan's one-yard touchdown plunge, giving New England a 14-7 edge.

Aided by Carr's 55-yard pass reception, the Colts drove 74 yards to tie the score on Don McCauley's two-yard run.

The Patriots got the benefit of a rare roughing the kicker call with a minute left in the half after Doug Beaudoin's 44-yard kickoff return put the ball on the Colts' 45. John Smith, attempting a field goal from the Colts' nine, was hit by defensive back Tim Baylor to give New England an automatic first down at the five.

Cap unbeaten season

JV gridders annihilate UNH

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

The UMass junior varsity football team traveled to New Hampshire yesterday with the memory of Saturday's varsity outcome fresh on its mind. And by the time the Minutemen were done with UNH's JVs, the pain of the Yankee Conference title loss was eased a little bit.

The Minutemen capped an unbeaten season with a 45-0 annihilation of the Wildcats, who must be wishing that some of their school's varsity magic could have rubbed off on them.

It was a runaway from the first quarter on. After the first UMass march was stopped, halfback Cliff Pedrow made amends for it with a touchdown run the next time the Minutemen had the ball. In the second quarter, Mark Curley kicked a 30-yard field goal on a fourth and one, and after another UMass drive was killed off by a UNH interception, rover Peter Russell returned the favor as he picked off a Wildcat pass and returned it for the second UMass touchdown.

The Minutemen exploded once again right at the start on the second half, as Pedrow romped straight up the middle of the field for a 90-yard TD return with the second-half kickoff.

"The wedge gave Pedrow some great blocking," UMass coach Tom Mullen said.

In the fourth period, quarterback Mike McEvilly hit flanker Chris Kurtz with a 30-yard scoring pass, and then the subs took over. But the touchdown parade didn't stop there, as second-string QB Don Roeder bulled over on a one-yard keeper for the fifth UMass TD. Then, to round out the scoring binge, Roeder again romped to paydirt from 43 yards away after faking a handoff and keeping it himself. In a rout of this magnitude, many things are bound to go right, and this one proved to be no exception.

"We forced UNH into making mistakes, and we capitalized on them," Mullen said. "The defense came up with the big play to give the offense good field position."

"The offense had momentum, and the whole team played with great emotion and execution," he continued.

Mullen had praise for a gang of people, including Russell for his touchdown-producing interception, cornerback Dave Michaud, who also picked off a Wildcat pass, linebacker Tony Grasso, who recovered a UNH fumble, and offensive tackle Tom Griffin, who fell on two of his teammate's fumbles.

Offensively, the coach lauded Pedrow and fullback Hank Sareault ("they both ran awfully well"), reserve running backs Jerry Flanigan and Steve Milkiewicz, and Roeder.

"He did a great job of running our second offensive team," the first-yard coach related.

Mullen also said that the UMass lines did a good job of controlling the line of scrimmage.

The Minutemen finished their campaign with a 4-0-1 record, and also won their last four games in a row.

Pats pay the price

BALTIMORE [UPI] — The price of victory Sunday for the New England Patriots caused them injury to three players.

The second place Patriots gained a much needed 21-14 win over the AFC East Division leaders, the Baltimore Colts, but lost the services of running back Sam Cunningham, linebacker Steve Nelson and tight end Russ Francis.

Cunningham suffered a jammed right shoulder when he was hit by Baltimore's 254-pound defensive tackle, Joe Ehrmann. The game was only 8:42 into the first quarter when Cunningham was taken off the field.

Nelson, the Patriots 6-2, 230-pound linebacker, dislocated his knee during the Colts' march for a touchdown at 5:46 into the second quarter. Nelson was carried into the locker room on a stretcher.

Francis ran off the field and straight into the baseball dugout after completing a 33-yard pass play from Steve Grogan. Francis emerged from the dugout with a pulled hamstring of the left leg and was escorted directly into the locker room.

Sub harriers in Easterns

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

Legere, Scheer, Farmer, McCusker, Levy. Names that may not be as familiar to cross country buffs as Alitz, Merrick, Treacy or Quinn. One thing they do have in common, though, is the fact that they'll be sharing the course and the spotlight today in the IC4A Championships at Van Cortland Park in the Bronx, N.Y.

Although it's the sub-varsity race they'll be running in, it means just as much to the 12 UMass runners who will compete, whether it be their last tuneup before moving up to the varsity, or their last cross country race in a UMass uniform.

The sub varsity will run the same five mile course as the varsity, and will take the gun at 1 p.m.

The IC4A's, which are recognized as a sort of Eastern championship, will include the best teams in the East, as well as the teams UMass faced in the New Englands. UMass should do well, with freshman standout Jay Legere, veterans John Scheer and Chris Farmer, and sophs Kevin McCusker and Rick Walls leading the team.

This will give the sub varsity men, who have been training all year, a chance to show their stuff in a championship meet. These runners train as hard as the varsity all season long and usually don't get recognized for it. One exception to this has been Neil McGrail, who was moved up to the varsity for this key meet.

Mi-noot-men bid fades

By BOB HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

When it was over, the score was 23-0, but even that doesn't show just how one-sided it was.

Because, had it not been for a lot of real tough play by the UMass defensive unit, the University of New Hampshire football team could have run up a much more humiliating score Saturday before the 10,900 frigid faithful at Alumni Stadium.

As it was, UNH left no doubts as to who is number one in the Yankee Conference, winning the conference title for the second consecutive year, closing out its season with an 8-2 mark (5-1 in YanCon), and speculating once again about Division II post-season play.

For UMass it was simply its poorest showing in two years. The offense showed absolutely no sign of life, garnering no first downs in the first half and just five for the game, two on penalties.

With a disappointing 5-4 record now, the Minutemen are virtually assured of a .500 season, with the very frightening Boston College Eagles visiting next week to finish the season.

The statistics bear out UNH's domination Saturday. UMass mustered a pitiful 45 yards of total offense to the Wildcats' 388. UNH won the first down battle, 18-5. And the Minutemen were forced to punt 10 times, the Wildcats just four.

"There's no doubt that we played our best game of the season ... you don't beat UMass like that unless everyone plays well," said an excited UNH coach Bill Bowes after the game.

"They did the job on us — there's nothing else to say about it," a dejected UMass coach Dick MacPherson stated quietly in the UMass locker room.

MacPherson was asked if it was the UNH defense or his team's poor execution that caused UMass' offensive woes.

"When they have a four-man rush and they're getting to the quarterback like that — they weren't blitzing or anything — I don't know if you call it execution or getting the crap kicked out of us," said the coach.

"Our execution was terrible," admitted MacPherson. "We had motion penalties, fumbles, it was awful."

It took UNH a long time to capitalize on UMass' feebleness, however. Although the ball was in UMass territory for all but six plays in the first quarter, and seven in the second period, the Wildcats could manage no more than a 9-0 lead at the half.

Women harriers place fourteenth in AIAW championship meet

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

Welcome to the world of big business.

The harsh reality of the place of the "Almighty Dollar" in big time intercollegiate athletics was sadly realized by the women's cross country team Saturday in the AIAW National Championship held at Madison Wisconsin.

In its short lifespan, women's cross country on the national level has turned into a marketplace where the best runners are "bought", or, if you will, given full scholarships by schools which can afford such luxuries for sports such as women's cross country.

For the record, Iowa State successfully defended its team title with a total of 62 points. Cal State (Northridge) was second with 110 points. Host team University of Wisconsin (Madison) was third with 177, with Big Ten rival Michigan State fourth with 181. An indication of just how tough the competition was, lies in the fact that Eastern champ Penn State, which ran away with that title, was only fifth with 188 points. UMass was 14th.

Julie Brown of the University of California at Northridge was the individual champ, as she ran a time of 16:29 over the three mile Yahara Hills Golf Course course. This time was almost a minute faster than any time the Minutewomen had run up against this year. Brown last year was the world cross country champ which gives an idea of the type of world class runners that UMass was up against.

UMass assistant coach Gary King pointed out that there is no national system of communication among women's cross country coaches, so no one knows what everyone else has in the way of talent. This led to UMass anticipating a higher finish, simply because it didn't know of the other top teams.

One thing that the coaches and fans have been able to count on all year has been the performance of Julie Lafreniere. She once again was the number one harrier for UMass. Although her finishing position, 67th, and her time of 18:11 do not seem exceptional, the fact that she was only five seconds behind New England champ Lavinia Muncy and the fact that she beat Amherst's Marina Buckley for the first time in her career put her race in a somewhat brighter perspective.

The rest of the team ran afoul of the heavy traffic in the middle of the pack and suffered because of it. Maggie Crowley was 91st with a time of 18:32. Sue Swartz finished 117th in 18:56. Johara Chapman was 130th with a time of 19:08 and Jane Welzel was 160th in 19:35.

Worthy of special note was the race run by Debbie Farmer. She was 119th and ran a time of 18:58. This was the first time she had broken the 19 minutes barrier all year, and reflects the improvement she ahs been undergoing. After being injured earlier in the year, it's unfortunate that the season doesn't extend further to see how far she could advance, but with indoor track coming up, she'll get a chance there to continue to prove herself.

The footing over the course was described by King as "Firm", and the weather was somewhat windy and cold, as the temperature was about 35 degrees. The gun sent 240 runners out on the course, representing 74 schools and 27 complete teams. Only 222 runners finished the race.

The rather slow times by the UMass women were attributed to the congestion of the middle of the pack, according to King. To run a fast time it was absolutely necessary to break out of the pack. Some women managed to do this, as 11 runners managed to break 17 minutes, which is an outstanding accomplishment.

Best harriers in East meet for IC4A title

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

In the setting where so many championships have been settled, the UMass cross country team seeks to capture the IC4A's at Van Cortland Park, in the Bronx. N.Y. today. Varsity meet time will be 12 noon with the JV race to be held at 1 p.m.

This is the 100th anniversary of the IC4A's, known as the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America. One hundred and two colleges will compete for the recognition of the best cross country team in the east. Runners from as far north as Maine to as far south as North Caroline will be on hand for the five mile race.

Last year's defending champion, Northeastern, returns to challenge for another title. Other teams in the running include the harriers from UMass, Princeton, Harvard, Dartmouth, Villanova, Georgetown, and UPenn. According to UMass coach Arnie Morse, it's anyone's guess as to who the top three teams will be.

The top three teams from this championship qualify for the Nationals to be held November 22, in Denton, Texas.

Dave Merrick from UPenn and an All-American, who has run the best time on the course (23:50) will return to defend his IC4A individual title. The only other runner to break the 24-minute barrier this year has been Kurt Alitz of West Point who will also challenge Merrick for the top spot.

Up until Alitz had broken 24 minutes, UMass's Mike Quinn held the second fastest time on the course with a 24:40 clocking.

The course itself has various landscapes. The first mile consists of a fast, sprint type path that leads into rolling hills and horse paths for the next 1 ½ miles. The runners will then repeat the same loop around the horsepaths and lead into an extremely difficult and steep hill which Morse terms "Heartbreak Hill".

"This is where the men are separated from the boys," Morse said. "It's a long steep hill which needs a strong effort from every runner. At this stage of the course, a lot of runners are tired and drop out. This is where the good runners will make their move."

The race concludes with a flat surface for the last half mile.

An interesting statistic which UMass runner Frank Carroll points out is that for the last three years, whenever UMass finished second in the New Englands, the team managed to capture the IC4A's.

In that three year span, the Minutemen won in 1973 and '74. Last year, However, UMass finished 19th. This year the harriers have gone undefeated on the Van Cortland Park course beating Northeastern, UConn, Syracuse, Manhattan, St. John's and URI.

"This is a course that is built for our team," said UMass co-captain John McGrail. "Franklin Park is built for the sprint-type cross country runner where here it's the strength and endurance that the runner has on the hills which determines the runner's finish."

The UMass lineup consists of one new runner and one questionable one. Coach Ken O'Brien will bring Mike Quinn, John McGrail, Frank Carroll, Cliff Staples, Louis Panaccione, Bob Martin, and Neal McGrail to the meet. Limited in his workouts this past week was star runner Mike Quinn.

Quinn, the second place finisher in the New Englands, has had stomach problems which has caused a loss in weight and general tiredness.

Southwest Assembly porno ban upheld

By DEBORAH GOODWIN
Collegian Staff

The Southwest Assembly (SWA) decision to ban pornographic movies at Hampden Student Center was upheld yesterday in a referendum that drew only a four per cent response from the area.

The original SWA bill resolved that the assembly would not allow pornographic films to be shown in the center because of the sexist and oppressive nature to the people of the Southwest community.

Of 243 votes cast, 156 voted not to support the bill, and 87 voted to support it. Two thousand votes were needed to make the decision binding.

Because of the low turnout, the decision will remain as it was last semester. At that time, a similar referendum was voted down unanimously by the SWA.

The organization backs non-sexist activities and felt that pornographic films ran counter to their interest.

SWA President Chris Durkin and Vice-President Diana Fessenden said the low voter turnout was due to several reasons.

One reason was Massachusetts Daily Collegian, which contained a front-page story in yesterday's paper about the referendum, arrived in Southwest only an hour before the voting ended because of a press breakdown at its printer, the Ware River News. Durkin and Fessenden also said they felt students just didn't care about the issue, or that by not voting, students backed the decision of last semester banning the showing of the films due to their sexist nature.

Unless SWA changes its decision, which will be unlikely, according to Fessenden, pornographic films will not be allowed to be shown in Southwest.

According to Durkin, the Undergraduate Student Senate will be running a campus-wide referendum on pornography. A censorship board of 30 people, representing groups such as the Gay Alliance, Southwest Women's Center, and the Southwest Men's Center, would be set up, he added.

If a percentage of the board found a film to be adverse to them, it would be banned. The campus-wide referendum is still in the working.

Everywomen's Center backed the SWA decision of last semester along with the Southwest Women's Center and the Men's Center in Southwest. It was their opinion that pornographic films were deterimental to their sex for the encouragment of sex-roles.

Black culture stifled — Lynch

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

A former associate professor in the Afro-Am Dept. last night told 40 listeners that "cosmetic culture", mainly in the form of television and popular music, is in the process of stifling legitimate culture in Black communities in America and throughout the world.

Acklyn R. Lynch, speaking in Thompson Hall, received a standing ovation for his hour and a half speech, which advocated increased awareness of the "plastic bubble" of national culture as it now exists in America, and its exportation into Third World nations around the globe.

He cautioned Black academicians not to fail to educate Black students to the challenges of changing the cultural decay in inner cities and the Third World.

Lynch is currently working in Washington, D.C., organizing parent-teacher groups to discuss the problems of lack of cultural education in public schools. He was brought to UMass by the Distinguished Visitors Program to speak on "Culture and Education on the University Campus."

Lynch began his talk by defining culture and its importance to society.

"Culture is a fact which embraces the whole life of a people," he said, from their beginning, to their constitution, to their modern organization. Culture can bring man to a "secret awakening", he said, to where he can decide his destiny.

Because of the scope of the "cosmetic culture" in the form of television, movies and disco, creative force is no longer a part of people's lives. He said the current lull on campus communities does not represent a turning inward of academia, but acceptance of these "canned communities" by students and faculty alike.

Lynch said "slickness" has become a valued characteristic in the cultural world.

"Even when Gil-Scott Heron comes to the University, we remember 'The Bottle', but forget the messages of 'Watergate' or 'Johannesburg'.

Lynch told the group that culture, specifically in the form of music, "could provide the link between the ivory tower and the real world."

The results of our highly technological society, he said, have been "cultural sterility and academic mediocrity." As a result, there is a lack of spirit to question reality, and said drug use has become widespread.

Lynch said the bourgeoise class has preserved myth-making to promote the status quo. He cited the myths of equal opportunity and equality as examples of this.

There is increased danger in exporting this canned culture to Third World nations, he said.

"The invaded begin to respond to the standards, values and goals of the invaders."

Lynch said it is the function of the universities not to install students in the "mirage" of popular culture. He said "students are spending more time looking at the tube than attending classes."

"While TV does its best work in channeling reality to the masses, most of its work is done in entertainment, at a crude level," he said.

Lynch pointed to the innovation of Black musicians today as examples of creative energy for students and faculty to follow.

Citing the lyrics from Stevie Wonder's "Sir Duke" — "Just because a record has a groove, don't make it in the groove," — he asked college students not to forget how to improvise.

"Black music contains the most complete rendering of the Black experience in North America," he said, but the music is still not included in university curriculums.

During a question and answer period following the talk, Lynch said he advocates getting Blacks elected to local boards of education as a means of furthering Black culture in local communities. He also suggested moving "progressive young teachers" into labor unions where they could provide leadership for others.

Lynch said that by "re-using" the resources of Black culture, it would be possible to reorganize schools so fewer teachers would be needed.

'Serious study a political act'

By NOREEN PRINCIPE
Collegian Staff

"Serious disciplined study is a highly political act," said Professor Johnnetta B. Cole of the Afro-Am department. "It is our responsibility to know, not merely for the sake of understanding, but to know in order to constructively change society and make it a better place to live."

Cole, who has been at UMass for six years, said her position as an educator relates to a quote by Karl Marx which says "we must study and describe the world in a way that we can both understand and change it."

"Study aimed for change is the correct political attitude," she said.

Cole founded an Afro-Am department at Washington State University in the early 60's, "during a period of black consciousness," she said.

"Black students were making a statement on being Black, yet education was not being presented to them from a Black point of view."

The Black studies program at Washington is still in operation today.

Cole feels Africans and people of African descent are bound in two ways — culturally and by conditions. She was always aware of the cultural aspect and discovered, as she developed both politically and academically during graduate studies at Northwestern University, Illinois that both groups were subjected to oppression in the form of economics and political forces.

Other groups such as Puerto Ricans, Native Americans and poor whites are also oppressed, yet the problem within our society is that racism divides people at the same condition, she said.

"One of the functions of education is for people to learn what in fact are similarities and differences."

She is currently doing research on race and class structure in Cuba. Cuba has made good progress in eliminating racism and the country is a model for other nations she said.

"Prisons are a real model of society," Cole said. She has been working for three years through University Without Walls, teaching in Norfolk and Walpole prisons. The program offers a UMass degree to prisoners.

"One can learn an incredible amount by people in prisons on how racism oppresses," she said.

The program itself is a "victim of economic oppression" that must be discontinued because of lack of funds, she said.

Previously, Cole visited two different prisons once a week. Now she is working with the few remaining students on completing their programs.

She also worked at Framingham prison for women.

Cole said Black women are subjected to "triple oppression" based on race, sex and class. She said much of what she sees today relates to a popular phrase by Martin Delaney, which has been used by Marx and Castro, essentially saying: "If you want to know the condition of a people, you only have to look at the condition of their women."

She feels there is another side to the issue of Black women, mainly concerning their resistance and their "creativity in survival."

She teaches a course with UMass Professor Esther Terry on Black women, using biographies and autobiographies, and is presently writing on the oppression of Black women, referring back to times of slavery to show how they were particularly oppressed and leaders of resistance.

Cole is involved with three political groups. She is a member of the Angola Support Conference and spoke in New York last Thursday, the first anniversary of the independence of Angola.

The goal of the Conference is to raise funds for medical aid to Angola. There are about six million people in Angola and only seven doctors, she said.

"This is also an educational project," Cole said. "People should understand what the struggle is about before they lend financial support."

Cole's major political work is with the Venceremos ("we will win") Brigade, a political educational process, originated in 1969, which sends students to Cuba to understand its society through work.

Students do mostly construction work, without the convenience of modern technology. Three years ago Cole worked on construction and said it was an "incredible experience."

She worked with a pick and shovel and found digging ditches "equally productive" to teaching.

"I found there was no difference between manual and intellectual labor. It was an interesting experience — not what most professors do."

The Southern Africa Support Committee is five-college based and seeks to educate people about South Africa's situation.

Cole said within this committee there is a drawing together of students, faculty and staff, and it is multi-racial. "This doesn't happen a lot, even on campuses in the 70's." she said.

Cole and her husband did research in Liberia in preparation for their Doctorate degrees in African Study from 1960-1962.

The elite and ruling class in Liberia is black. Cole feels living in Liberia was an important experience for her husband as a White North American, in that this was the first time he was a minority and could gain insight to the entire racism concept.

The eldest of the Cole's three boys was born in Liberia.

Concerning the Black Power movement in the 70's, Cole admits in the 60's there was more activity but feels "Black people are presently coming to grips with the root cause of their problem."

"The 70's seem quiet and apathetic compared to the hyperactivity of the 60's yet it seems Black people are stepping back and examining their situation realistically. It takes that kind of understanding before we can pull off any fundamental change.

Cole feels the UMass Afro-Am department is "exciting to be in." She maintains an adjunct professorship with the Anthropology department, working with grad students, and feels she has "the best of both worlds."

Relations with SGA discussed

By KAREN PARMENTER

"We don't want to have control, just to have equal status with other bargaining organizations," said Brian DiLima, speaker for the Undergraduate Student Senate, in response to a question about student unionizing brought up at the Central Area Government meeting last night.

"We haven't really got the students educated about why we need a union. When we decrease apathy and increase interest, it'sll be easier to organize."

Thomas Kerrins, senate treasurer, said one problem was that the student population is a transient one; another was that the administration "has come down harder" on academic standards, so that many students do not have the time to be involved with anything other than their studies.

DiLima and Kerrins both emphasized the importance of area government representatives in getting other members of their respective dorms involved with the concerns of the area government. Nkrumah Olinga, a Central resident, agreed, saying "any organizing has got to come from this level."

Also meeting with the Central Area Government was Robert Campbell, assistant director of Residential Resources Management (RRM), along with Ann Koski, also of RRM. Campbell outlined the responsibilities of the organization which is located in Berkshire House. RRM handles individual and collective bills, including telephone bills, budgeting analysis and housing assignments. Campbell described the last as "one of our biggest bottlenecks."

Many of the questions put to Campbell concerned the pending $6 rate increase for the use of dorm phones. Said Campbell, "We are not responsible for rate increases, we are processors. We have been challenged on this by Rents and Fees, and I think rightly so."

Campbell added, "When in fact there are established hearing dates

Grad senate critical of Dean's actions

By GARY McWILLIAMS
Collegian Staff

Actions of the Acting Dean of the Graduate School, Vere Chappell, came under renewed discussion last night as the Graduate Student Senate (GSS) criticized Chappell's decision to withhold funds the senate authorized to the Graduate Student Employees Union (GSEU).

After receiving notice from the University Comptroller's Office the senate had voted to grant $1,000 to the GSEU. Chappell directed University counsel Sidney Myers and labor counsel Arthur Menard to examine the allocation for possible legal violations.

Menard found the payment to violate a state code that prohibits employer's funds from being used to establish a collective bargaining unit.

Menard said GSS monies, since they are collected and distributed by the university fall under the employer's funds category.

Michael R. Federow, graduate senate president said he will contest Chappel's findings at a meeting tomorrow with Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery.

Federow said he plans to argue that the senate is an independent governance body not subject to the rulings of the Acting Dean.

"The money is student funds, not University funds," he said.

Senate Secretary Barbara A. Stack said the issue of "governance priority" in Chappell's action is being investigated by the UMass Legal Services Office (LSO).

"Our attorney in the LSO said that while the law stands as it is written, we can make a case on the grounds that the money is the senate's, and not the University's."

Stack said the senate may seek an "injunctive relief" should the decision on the priority continue without a finding from the Chancellor's office. The relief would place the issue of the GSEU allocation in the hands of a state judge for final decision.

Stack said the administrator's actions were overruling the decision of the senate, a constituted governance body.

"On paper we are a governance body, but we are still being handled as if we are a student group," she said.

The senate executive committee, consisting of the four GSS officers, issued a Governance Policy Challenge enforcing their contention that the senate is the only body with the authority for their funds.

The policy challenge would set final determination for the responsibility of the monies either with the GSS or with the university, as Chappell contends, Stack said.

Senate Vice-President Timothy R. Austin said he felt the challenge would be returned favorably to the senate.

"It is my belief that nobody will contest our primary responsibility in governance here," Austin said.

In response to a question from senator Kenneth Ross, Austin said the completed challenge would then be forwarded to Bromery for final decision.

"The Chancellor will decide primary responsibility, and he will have to prove his decision," Austin added.

In a telephone interview last night, Bromery said he would "listen to what they (GSS) have to say," but he added that he didn't expect to go against the lawyer's "legal finding."

If the groups involved decide to accept GSS's primary responsibility, the senate could be held legally responsible for the violation of state law in their granting of funds to the GSEU, Federow said.

He said he views this possibility as "unlikely".

"I don't think this would be a problem because there is only one group — the GSEU — seeking to organize graduate students."

If you're looking for something different to light up with, why not try a hand-made pipe? Sam "Bird Lifes" Gilford makes them at his home in Turner's Falls and sells them outside the Student Union. (Staff photo by Chris Bourne)

Fast takes place Thursday

By CAROL FLYNN
Collegian Staff

A conference for the Oxfam-America fast day for students wishing to donate one or two of their meal tickets that day in a symbolic gesture to provide aid for underdeveloped nations in the world, will take place Thursday at UMass.

According to Howard I. Goldman, a senior human nutrition major involved in the University Without Walls Program, the Oxfam-America is a non-profit organization to raise money for underdeveloped countries and has been very successful in the past in raising money.

For the past three years, students at UMass have given money or donated one or two of their meal tickets for the project, he said, and the dining commons then gives the money from the meal tickets to the project.

"The program helped raise my awareness of the need for personal involvement in helping underdeveloped nations. It gives the individual a real sense of accomplishment," Goldman said.

The program is going one step further this year, by organizing a conference to be held Thursday evening in the Public Health Auditorium in the Public Health Building from 7 to 9.

Three professors will speak at the conference. One of the professors, from the UMass Food Science and Nutrition Department will speak about diseases incurred in early childhood such as kwashiorkor and marasmus.

Another speaker from the UMass Graduate School of Public Health has served overseas in Bangladesh for 13 years, and will discuss the politics of food.

The third speaker from Hampshire College will talk about the irreversible effects of brain damage caused by starvation in young children.

A discussion and slide presentation will follow the lecture.

A booth will be set up on the Campus Center concourse today and tomorrow. Anyone interested in fasting for the day can stop by the booth and give their meal tickets or they can be left at the People's Market. This must be done in advance so the Dining Commons can prepare less food on that day, thereby enabling them to reimburse Oxfam-America for the difference.

The money collected from this effort will help small farmers grow more food for their families and their communities. Oxfam-America does not believe in donating food, they concentrate their efforts on helping people to be more self-sufficient.

This year's fund raising efforts will help the Fulani and Sonrai farmers in Sahelian Upper Volta improve their crops and farming methods. It will teach women in Bangladesh how to read and write as well as improve nutrition and farming techniques.

The program is unique, according to Goldman, because it gives the individual a chance to do something effective. "I got into it because it gave me a means and an alternative to griping about world poverty."

Task force plans Women's week

By JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff

Next Spring's International Women's Day will be just one aspect of a week of activities oriented towards women if preliminary plans of the Title IX Task Force for the week of March 6-12 materialize.

While workshops and speakers dominated much of the Campus Center-Student Union complex last International Women's Day, plans for next Spring call for a week of women's entertainment, art exhibitions and other activities in addition to the workshops and speakers.

Planning months in advance, Susan Birmingham, Irene Richard and Ann Thorkelson have secured the Student Union Ballroom for the week, except when Program Council movies are scheduled, and the Campus Center Auditorium (CCA), except for one night when a speaker from the Chancellor's Lecture Series will be in the CCA.

They also have requested that there be no conferences scheduled for the week so that meeting rooms will be available, and there will be women's entertainment in the Bluewall, Hatch and the Top of The Campus.

Richard says she thinks there should be a refocusing of activities because money is spent to bring men to campus all the time yet very little is spent on women.

"In my eyes, it isn't that I want to see women take over, but that you can go anywhere and see a woman artist, for example ... if we can monopolize it (the week) we will, so people can react to it," explained Richard.

The task force will be going to area governments, the Program Council, the Undergraduate and Graduate Student Senates and the Distinguished Visitors Program to request funding. The force is in the process of contacting prospective speakers and workshop leaders.

Possible workshop topics include poor women, women and the media, lesbianism, women and health care, sexuality, and graduate student women. Also, Third World women, women and politics, older women, women and art, women and professional careers and feminist counselling.

Thorkelson said, "The workshops will provide the basis to effect the integrated change which will be more permanent than the monopolized change of the week."

The task force will next meet on Thursday, December 2 and welcomes input from students.

Woman in science seminar tonight

There will be a seminar-discussion "Women in the Sciences — Graduate School and Onward" tonight at 7:30 in Rooms 911-915 in the Campus Center.

Participants will be Dr. Laurie Brown, assistant geology professor at UMass, Dr. Susan Goldhor, dean of natural sciences at Hampshire College, and Dr. Saundra Dyewole, assistant microbiology professor at Hampshire College.

Goldhor is the editor of a national newsletter "Women in Cell Biology" and has published a pamphlet on jobhunting.

Three major areas to be discussed are balancing your personal life and your career, jobhunting and getting promotions.

In the 35 science departments at UMass there are 40 women faculty members. The nursing department's faculty is all women.

A University students are invited to attend the seminar.

we will go there and make a presentation to whomever we have to. I guess the Department of Public Utilities (DPU) which established the rates."

Janice Perry, Central Area president, asked Campbell if any dorms were slated for renovation. Campbell explained none would be since there was a "hold-up" with the Barriers Board, regarding "how they feel about handicap modifications". Campbell then outlined the potential costs of some of the modifications needed to adhere to the required codes, such as elevators. These, Campbell said, could cost between $10,000 and $15,000 a flight to install an elevator. He estimated it would cost $45,000 per floor, depending on the building, in handicap modifications alone, using last year's figures. "Until we get over that hurdle," he said, "nothing else can be done."

Another question from Perry concerned the possibility of the dorms getting new furniture and being repainted. Campbell said some furniture might be available, but no painting would be done. He noted that it cost $90,000 to paint the dorms last year, on an outside contract.

In other business Perry handed out petitions requesting the "University Administration to take all actions necessary to gain an exemption for the University from the telephone rate increase". Perry asked that the petitions be returned to her by this Thursday.

The Central Area Government voted to approve a request for $125 for a Third World Coffeehouse. Perry asked all area centers to submit their budgets for the previous month at next week's meeting.

15-year conservatory employee passes away

Volunteer Services offers mini-fair social service

By D. A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

The Student Volunteer Services (SVS) is offering a mini-fair of the social services agencies in Western Massachusetts for students interested in doing part time internships on Thursday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on the Campus Center Concourse.

Tables will be set up on the Concourse by the SVS to direct students to the various agencies' information centers located in rooms 804-808 of the Campus Center. There will be representatives from these agencies who will introduce themselves and their agencies and talk to students about what each program entails.

According to Betty Shaw, coordinator of the SVS, the SVS is one of the components of the Office of Internships at UMass. The SVS deals with part-time placements in various social service agencies.

"Part-time internships are a good way for students who would like to venture out into a field practicum to get experience while still taking courses," Shaw said.

"They would also supplement the theoretical component students get in the classroom. It is a prelude to the real world situation," she added.

"Some areas for students to venture into are education, health, human services, legal aid, and human development. Social services is a broad field," Shaw added.

These social service agencies are in the Amherst - Northampton - Springfield - Holyoke area, so they are accessible to students who are living on campus and continuing to take courses.

On November 18, tables will be set up in the Campus Center concourse for a recruitment drive for the SVS. Staff personnel will be available to answer any questions students may have concerning the SVS.

Black light can be harmful

By SAM JUDSON
Collegian Staff

The special effects of lighting in local discotheques may be getting greater reactions than the owners or their clients know.

Dr. David Klingener of the UMass zoology department said that black light in discos can increase mutation rates and damage genetic material.

"Ultra-violet light, which is a conglomerate of black light, poorly penetrates the human body, but was once used to a potentially dangerous degree in discos," he said.

Klingener said scientists have been using it in the laboratory to induce mutations in bacteria and tissue cultures.

He said it has been determined that black light is dangerous to human tissue and genetic material.

"However, the extent that is used in discos today is accepted as safe," he said.

Scientists still confirm that, although the probability is low, escessive exposure can damage the retina, or cause skin cancer.

Swirling and flashing lights in discos today often include mixtures of black light. The beam gives light colored clothing a fluorescent or brilliant white quality.

Klingener said that people who work in discos often experience burning sensations in their eyes when they go home at night.

If wave lengths of ultra-violet light in discos exceeded 260 millimicrons, there would be sufficient cause for concern, he added.

The light may strike a chromosome and its DNA (deoxyribose nucleic acid) directly, producing a break in the chromosome, or a change in the DNA molecule.

It may also alter the chemical compounds within the cell it contacts. These changes in turn affect the DNA of the chromosomes, producing mutations, he said.

Protein synthesis must take place within a critical time interval after cells have been hit by ultra-violet light to produce the most mutations, according to scientists.

Under other conditions, ultraviolet light is absorbed by tissues, and lesions form similar to those caused by X-rays, though not nearly as severe. The lesions give rise to mutations.

Specific enzymes are involved in the repairing of DNA damage that help to protect us from the sun's ultra-violet rays.

Excessive exposure to intense sunlight over many years can invoke skin cancer in white people. It has little or no effect on Blacks Klingener said.

Skin cancer depends on heredity and environment according to Dr. Edward C. Colin in "Elements of Genetics."

On the beach in the summer, people get a tan because the sun's ultra-violet rays stimulate the development of pigment in the skin, if one has the proper genes. Molecules in the earth's atmosphere help to reduce the intensity of penetrating ultra-violet rays.

"Researchers greatly dislike experimenting with ultra-violet light in the lab since they often have to put their hands under it," Professor Klingener said.

Carter names first staffer at conference

PLAINS, Ga. [UPI] — Jimmy Carter said yesterday he anticipates a jobless rate of 5 to 7 per cent during the first years of his administration as he works to balance economic recovery with no new rise in the rate of inflation.

One of Carter's main campaign promises was to work to cut joblessness. He frequently criticized President Ford for concentrating on stemming inflation while ignoring the plight of America's unemployed.

At a news conference near his home town, the President-elect also said that a new strategic arms limitation agreement with the Soviet Union "will be a top item" on his agenda.

He also made his first staff appointment, announcing that Jody Powell will continue as press secretary.

Powell, 32, was press secretary when Carter was governor of Georgia, and was his chief spokesman during the two-year presidential campaign.

Despite the indication his economic recovery program would be gradual, Carter said he would not permit the nation's economic condition to delay his programs for tax and welfare reform and for national health insurance.

Carter was not specific on what he would do about unemployment or taxes, but he repeated his campaign pledge that he could reduce the jobless rate from the current 7.9 per cent to 4 or 4.5 per cent by the end of his first term.

Asked if that meant tolerating unemployment of 5 to 7 per cent during the first years of his term, Carter said, "I would guess that would be a likely prospect."

He said once employment dips to 5.6 per cent or less, "You have to start making tradeoffs" to avoid inflation.

Carter said he would meet with Burns and with Cabinet officers when he visits Washington next week. Asked if he would ask Burns to resign, Carter said such a decision would best be left until after the meeting. But he said his current feeling is that he would not do so, especially since Burns has said he would not resign.

PLAINS, GA: Jimmy Carter, president elect, points to a reporter at a news conference yesterday at which he named Jody Powell as his news secretary. Carter warned the nation it would have to tolerate 5 to 7 per cent unemployment for the first few years of his administration. This was Carter's second news conference since his election two weeks ago.

Committee asks FBI and CIA to release reports on assassinations

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House Committee on Assassination held its first formal hearing yesterday and outlined plans for a staff of 170 to investigate the murders of President John F. Kennedy and Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. "no matter where it leads."

Rep. Thomas M. Downing, the committee chairman until he retires at the end of the year, told reporters following a two-hour closed session that the panel had asked the FBI and CIA to surrender all documents and memoranda bearing on both cases.

These would include a reported FBI memo found after a new search of bureau files at the committee's request alleging that Lee Harvey Oswald told Cuban officials he would assassinate Kennedy.

Both Downing and Richard A. Sprague, committee chief counsel and staff director, said they had not seen the memorandum, the essence of which was made public Sunday by the New York Times.

Supreme Court decides to review law accommodating employee religious needs

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Supreme Court agreed yesterday to take another look at a federal law invoked by employes whose religion forbids work on Saturday.

The justices upheld the law in question by a 4-4 tie vote on Nov. 2, but this dealt with a single case and did not set a precedent.

Since 1972, the law has required employers to make "reasonable accommodations" to the religious needs of workers. Companies must justify firings or refusals to hire for religious reasons on the basis of undue hardship to the business.

Opponents argue that the law is an unconstitutional breach of the wall between church and state.

The new case accepted for review originally was filed in Kansas City by Larry Hardison, a member of the Worldwide Church of God, against Trans World Airlines and the machinists union.

A collective bargaining agreement in effect at the time controlled the assignments of 15,000 employes. Thus the case dealt not only with Hardison's rights but with TWA's claim that favoring Hardison would violate its contract with the union.

Hardsion sued after he was fired for refusing to work on Saturday, the sabbath observed by his sect.

U.S. District Judge John Oliver ruled against him, but the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed as to the company. The opinion affirmed the finding in favor of the union on the ground that it had not been directly challenged on appeal.

Short supply threatens Ford's flu shot program

WASHINGTON [UPI] — In the latest setback for President Ford's swine flu immunization program, the U.S. Public Health Service said yesterday only one in every 10 American children may get the shots because of a vaccine shortage.

There will be enough vaccine, however, to immunize chronically ill children between 3 and 18, the health service said.

The PHS also announced that its advisory committee on immunization practices now recommends a second swine flu shot, four weeks after the first shot, for young adults aged 18-24.

"While it is clear that we have the formula to provide a safe and effective vaccine for children, it is also clear that not nearly enough will be available before the influenza season nears its end," assistant Health, Education and Welfare secretary Theodore Cooper said yesterday.

He said only 8 million doses of the split-virus vaccine suitable for children will be available before February.

Since two innoculations would be necessary for each youngster, only 4 million of America's 40 million children between ages 3-18 could be immunized. These shots are also to be given four weeks apart.

Cooper has nursed the President's $135 million swine flu campaign through malpractice insurance problems, scattered scientific opposition and, more recently, public apathy in some areas toward getting the recommended shots.

"We would have preferred to have had sufficient vaccine to offer it to all children, who are as susceptible to influenza as adults," he said of the latest problem. "Fortunately, healthy children do not have the same risk of serious complications as older individuals."

A PHS spokesman said the shortage became evident three weeks ago when it was determined that children would need a split rather than a whole virus. Whole-virus vaccines caused more fever and other side effects in children during field tests.

Admitted killer faces bells instead of guns

POINT OF THE MOUNTAIN, Utah [UPI] — Admitted killer Gary Gilmore wanted to die yesterday. He got engaged instead.

"I told him today, 'Yes, I will,' and he got a very surprised look on his face," said Nicole Barrett, a 20-year-old divorcee and mother of two who accepted the proposal during a two-hour meeting with Gilmore on Death Row.

"But I don't think any of the prison officials would ever consider it," the petite brunette added as she left the hand-holding rendezvous at Utah State Prison.

Warden Sam Smith said she was right.

"What for?" he said of Gilmore's desire to get married. "I see no basis for it."

But the warden said he hadn't formally been asked to allow a marriage and would give it "due consideration" if he were.

"If the death penalty is set aside, then that would be a different ballgame," Smith added.

Miss Barrett said she and Gilmore, 35, who faces the death penalty for the murder of a Provo, Utah, motel clerk, had been discussing marriage since his arrest in July.

Asked if she really wanted to marry someone who had begged the state to execute him, she replied, "Yes, you can understand that, can't you?"

Brezhnev and Tito meet to settle relations

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia [UPI] — Soviet leader Leonid I. Brezhnev and President Josip Broz Tito greeted each other with smiles, bear hugs and kisses yesterday. Yugoslavs hailed the Russian's three-day visit as a "major event" in their relations.

Tito, 84, with a full head of dyed wavy red hair, appeared tanned and robust following a two-month illness. Brezhnev, 70 next month, looked pale and older by comparison as he walked alongside Tito. He wore a hearing aid behind his left ear.

With the amenities and a private lunch out of the way, the two Communist leaders began their first of three rounds of formal talks about six hours after Brezhnev arrived in this drab but busy capital on the Danube River.

Brezhnev's trip was his first to this independent Communist Balkan country in five years. He has owed the visit to Tito since the aging marshal toured the Soviet Union in 1973. They last met in June in East Berlin.

Yugoslavia's weekly Communist party magazine, Komunist, described Brezhnev's visit as a "major event in the development of Yugoslav-Soviet relations."

Disagreements between the two men were expected because of the different applications of communism in the Soviet Union and Yugoslavia's far more open society.

But relations between the two counties generally are good following a period of activity against hard-line Stalinist Communists in Yugoslavia that forced Brezhnev to cancel a visit to the country in the spring. Belgrade split from Moscow in 1948.

Hundreds of persons, including children let out of school for the occasion, lined Brezhnev's motorcade route from Surcin Airport to Tito's White Palace residence in suburban Dedinje. Hundreds of uniformed and plainclothes police kept security tight.

A small boy and girl from the Soviet embassy greeted the general secretary of the Soviet Communist party with bouquets of red roses wrapped in cellophane. He smiled and bent low to kiss the children.

Soviet leader Brezhnev (L) visits Yogoslavia and President Tito (R) for the first time in five years. Relations had been "cool" due to communist policy disparity.

Syrians sweep across Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon [AP] — Syrian tanks and troops silenced the guns of Beirut on yesterday in a massive occupation that handed Lebanon its first real chance for peace in 19 months of civil war.

Joyful Moslems slaughtered sheep in a traditional Arab gesture of welcome. Women sent up Arab cries of joy and dowsed Syrian soldiers with rose water and rice as columns of T62 and T54 tanks swept over the city from three directions.

"Allah is great," shouted bystanders as the camouflage painted tanks clanked by. "Arabs will be victorious."

The welcome was subdued in Christian quarters, where rightist militiamen ordered civilians to stay off the streets. Christian leaders seemed to feel more strongly the sting of Beirut's first foreign occupation since U.S. Marines landed to stop an earlier war in 1958.

Only a few instances of resistance were reported as the 6,000 troops and 400 tanks took over, all in Moslem and Palestinian-controlled areas. The Syrians fired only a half dozen grenades and a few rounds of submachine gun fire in a six-hour sweep that began with the first light of dawn.

By nightfall, they had established control over Beirut's battle zones, Palestinian refugee camps, radio stations, government buildings, the airport and key intersections. The sound of gunfire died away for the first time since an earlier cease-fire more than nine months ago.

Earthquake strikes Peking by surprise

HONG KONG [UPI] — The strongest earthquake since the July tremors that killed tens of thousands of persons rocked Peking yesterday night. China kept silent about the series of shocks, but scientists around the world said they were damaging.

Western correspondents' reports from Peking said Chinese fled their homes and ran for earthquake shelters dug in the capital since the July disaster.

The U.S. Geological Survey, which estimated the Monday tremor at an intensity of 6.5, said it was the eighth "significant" quake to hit China this year.

The West German news agency DPA said in a dispatch from Peking that two violent tremors shook the Chinese capital, catching residents by surprise and knocking pictures off walls.

The Japanese Kyodo news agency said the tremors felt stronger in Peking that the twin earthquakes in July that devastated the Tangshan area southeast of Peking.

DPA agency said Chines streamed out of their homes and moved into emergency quarters. Foreigners living in the capital moved into their embassies.

Scores of earthquakes have shaken China since the devastating series that struck Peking, Tsinsin, Tanshan and other cities July 28. Chinese authorities had no comment about the latest quake hours after it was confirmed by seismologists in other countries.

UN University celebrates first unproductive year

TOKYO [AP] — The United Nations University has no campus, no degree students and no courses of study, and isn't looking for any. But, on its first birthday, it is having financial troubles and wants some money.

"We are still in a time of difficult financial condition," said James Hester, the American rector of what was formally created a year ago as a world problem-solving agency.

He told a news conference yesterday that the university still was not understood around the world and that the use of the word "university" was confusing.

"We are a university that is not a university, has no degree students, campus or courses of study," he said. "Our method of operation, as a network of associate institutions, is not familiar to most people."

US begins deportation hearings of accused Nazi war criminals

By United Press International

The United States opened deportation proceedings yesterday against three immigrants it said took part in Nazi atrocities against Jews during World War II. Two said they were innocent and a third had his hearing postponed.

The three — Karlis Detlavs, 65, of Baltimore, Boleslavs Maikovskis, 72 of Mineola, N.Y., and Bruno Kaminskas, 74, of Hartford, Conn. — were accused of shooting Jews or selecting them for execution in Eastern Europe.

All three were charged with violating immigration laws by lying about their past. The U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service wants them out of the country.

Detlavs, a retired electrical worker who came to the United States from Latvia 26 years ago, pleaded innocent at his hearing in Baltimore. He refused to talk to reporters but said earlier, "I never did anything. I am not guilty."

After the plea, an immigration service hearing officer delayed further proceedings to study defense motions and other procedural matters. A date for the government to begin its case will be set.

Maikovskis, a retired carpenter who came to America from Latvia in 1951, declined to enter a plea and won a delay until Jan. 10 in his deportation hearing in New York city. His lawyer said he had not had enough time to prepare his defense.

The government said Detlavs, as a member of the Latvian Legion, took part in the shooting of Jews and the selection of others for execution, and personally assaulted several Jews in Latvia in 1941.

"I was not even in Latvia the whole time of the war," Detlavs, who lost a foot to cancer and now walks with a cane, Maikovskis, as a Latvian SS lieutenant, in seven instances selected Jewish men, women and children for execution and beatings in Latvia during the Nazi occupation of the Balkan country. He was kept under strict security and refused to talk to newsmen.

In 1965, a Soviet court convicted Kaikovskis in absentia of participating in mass murders and sentenced him to death. The Untied States at that time refused to permit his extradition.

BALTIMORE: Karlis Detlavs, 65, of Baltimore, is one of three immigrants accused of Nazi atrocities Jews during World War II. Detlavs is shown leaving an Immigration and Naturalization hearing after pleading innocent to the charges.

BOSTON [AP].— Massachusetts residents will be able to play the horses through the state lottery, starting today.

The new Instant Horse Race Game, offering top prizes of $1,000 a week for life and $1 million will go on sale today, Lottery Director Dr. William E. Perrault announced. The tickets cost $1.

The game, with instant wins and four separate race features, will offer nearly 2 million cash prizes, he said. Instant prizes range from one free ticket to $10,000.

The game is played this way: each ticket stub has the name of a fictitious race horse.

Bank suspends all operations

PROVIDENCE [AP] — The American Bank and Trust Co. of North Providence was placed in receivership yesterday by a Providence Superior Court, leaving depositors temporarily in limbo.

Robert E. Liguori, state director of business regulation, said all normal banking functions were suspended effective Monday and a receivership hearing would be held Nov. 23.

Liquori said American Bank and Trust did not have Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. coverage and depositors would be temporarily prohibited from withdrawing money from their accounts.

Career cop takes oath of office

BOSTON [UPI] – A career policeman who built a reputation for calm during fire during the violent desegregation of Boston public schools yesterday became police commissioner, taking over a 346-year-old department troubled by alleged corruption.

Joseph M. Jordan, 53, immediately vowed to restore integrity and accountability to the 2,309-member department.

Jordan, a 30-year veteran of the force, announced the creation of a field inspection unit to check police performance and transferred 25 vice detectives into the downtown district where an internal department report found police "incompetence and corruption.

"Like any large organization, we have our share of those who are not productive and efficient and who may take advantage of their position," Jordan told about 200 persons at swearing in ceremonies. "That cannot and will not be tolerated."

The public must "convince" the legislature and the courts to "take firmer action with persons who continue to violate these statutes," Jordan said.

The first rank-and-file policeman to become commissioner in the history of the department, Jordan made it clear he disagreed with public release of the internal report.

The document was released by Jordan's predecessor, Robert diGrazia, who resigned the $35,000-a-year post to accept a higher paying job with a smaller department in Maryland.

Nuke plant seeks rule reversal

MANCHESTER, N.H. [UPI] — New Hampshire's dominant electric company wants presidential and congressional influence to help overturn an environmental ruling threatening its nuclear power project at Seabrook, N.H.

William C. Tallman, president of the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire, told a news conference yesterday he asked PSC employes, the company's 35,000 stockholders, and labor union members and employes of other electric companies in New England to write to President Ford and their congressmen.

He asked them to protest a decision last week by John A.S. McGlennon, Boston regional administrator of the federal Environmental Protection Agency, revoking certification of an ocean tunnel water cooling system planned for Seabrook.

Tallman said the whole project could be threatened if a weekend appeal to EPA Administrator Russell Train to reverse the decision fails.

"If Seabrook is scratched," Tallman said, "the sunk costs money already spent would amount to $300 million."

Tallman said the PSC is financially qualified to build the $2 billion Seabrook plant. But he said if construction is canceled it "could have a serious impact."

Auto insurer files competitive rate hike

BOSTON [UPI] – Liberty Mutual Insurance Co. yesterday filed with Massachusetts Insurance Commissioner James M. Stone a 16.8 per cent increases in auto insurance rates for next year.

Liberty, second largest auto insurer in the state, was the first company to file under the state's new open competitive rating law. The increase will cost the company's 250,000 customers an additional $11.4 million next year.

Two smaller companies also filed. United States Fidelity and Guaranty Co. asked for a 37.9 per cent increase while AMICA filed a 20.6 per cent hike.

Most major companies are not expected to file until today. Increases are expected to average between 15 and 25 per cent. The largest increases are expected in property damage liability and option 2 collision coverages.

For a typical driver with full coverage, the new rates will increase policy costs by $45 to $80 next year. Increases for drivers in Boston, particularly those under 25, could be much higher.

The exact amount of the increases will not be known for some time, but consumers will get an indication of how much they will pay as companies file proposed 1977 rates.

Last year, companies were granted an across the board increase of $88 million or 20 per cent.

Under the new open competetive law, all companies selling auto insurance in Massachusetts must file with Stone intended rates at least 45 days before they are to take effect.

This means 1977 rates must be filed by 5 p.m. today if they are to take effect Jan. 1. If companies do not file new rates by the deadline, 1976 rates will remain in effect for at least part of 1977.

This year's rate filings differ from previous years in a number of ways.

Tube liberation

The TV screen fills with static. Then a voice announces, "The CBS Evening News with Walter Cronkite has been prempted in order to bring you the real news with the People's Video Access Project."

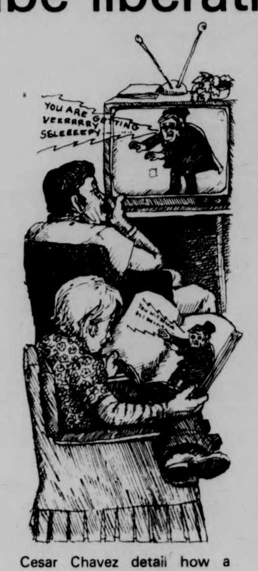
A national audience is captured. The revolution is not being televised, but there's something revolutionary on the TV.

Meanwhile, a camera has zoomed down a narrow city street. It freezes its clear focus on three people standing together outside a storefront. The three identify themselves as Arthur Red Elm, a council spokesperson from the Sioux people at Pine Ridge, Carole Larkin, a San Francisco gay rights activist, and Dick Gregory, well known human rights activist and comedian.

"We are your Anchorpeople tonight," they explain, "invited by the People's Video Access Project to help produce this newscast which will inform people about problems obscured by the nightly news. We hope to demonstrate that an alternative is possible. Tonight, we'll be taking you to:

The Pentagon — where the Secretary of Defense and the Chairman of Rockwell International, under the influence of Sodium Pentathol, are debriefed by Ralph Nader on how the military-industrial complex manages to manipulate the government and control the economy.

Oakland, California — to hear Cesar Chavez detail how a massive agribusiness media campaign costing some $2 million buried a ballot initiative that would have strenghthened union elections for farm workers.



Detroit, Michigan — where women garment workers organized to toss their factory bosses out and took over production.

Amherst, Massachusetts — to get the latest results of a referendum that would relieve tenants from skyrocketing rents.

At that point, I blinked hard and woke.

Aimed primarily at reinforcing its own credibility, packaged, "up to the minute" televised news influences people with not only what is said, but even more from what is not said. TV is used as an instrument of mental and political pacification, and, if it stimulates at all, it's unintentional.

The media will be more responsive to forces of change only when it's more democratically controlled.

But how can we liberate communications technology for popular use?

Open access to media is a long way off, to be sure.

It's only in its infant stages, but a movement to reform transform the TV status quo has hatched.

One local community group, the Center for Community Access TV in Amherst, has organized to facilitate public access cable programming — a virtually unknown FCC provision. For more information on them call 549-2800 or get in touch with the Student Video Project in Room 403, Student Union.

Do more than indulge your fantasies while you're flipping those dials. The media you transform may be your own.

On secret surveillance

Last mon[illegible]a Yule Mahoney revealed to one of Boston's un[illegible]rground newspapers his role as a secret FBI informa[illegible]he natural inference is that spying on left wing o[illegible]ations (which is what he did) is necessaril[illegible] thing.

But is [illegible]at would the reader think if the FBI gathered [illegible]eptitious information about a group calling itself the "National Socialist Party"? Probably, one's response would be that such surveillance is improper and immoral, if not also illegal. Now, what would the response be if the reader knew that the full name of this organization is "The Nationalist Socialist White People's Party", which is in fact another name for "The American Nazi Party"?

Probably, the response now would be that the aforesaid surveillance is right and proper, since this is an evil organization. Yet, nothing has changed save the readers perception of the organization's true nature. From this we learn that intelligence gathering itself is not inherently wrong; only the situational context and the methods employed determine its rectitude.

Why is it no one complains when the FBI gathers information about the Ku Klux Klan or the Nazis? Why is vocally public criticism raised only when leftist organizations are threatened? Some of these organizations, at least, are every bit as dangerous as the specific organizations cited above.

One possibly dangerous outfit stands out in my mind, namely, the Prairie Fire Organization, so named because they compare and desire violent revolution to overspread the country like a prairie fire. That's a pretty violent metaphor. It's easily imaginable that so surnamed an organization could be conspiring and committing violent revolution. I would very much like to know what laws such a group is violating, if any, and I would believe the FBI to be seriously remiss if it did not investigate such an organization.

Secretly spying on others isn't nice. It's too bad we live in a world where it's necessary. Given constitutional limits and legal safeguards, I would rather run the minimal risk of an FBI controlled police state than risk an unbridled invitation by left or right wing lunatics to commit armed anarchy.

The pitfalls of the tenure system

To the Editor:

One of the major monkey-wrenches in the UMass community machine is the present tenure system. Our norm of having a junior professor work for seven years, and in the seventh be given either life-long job security, or a boot in the pants, seems outrageously pernicious. And in the most subtle ways, it artificially destroys the market for good teachers, now in endless supply, and allows for so-called "seniority" of a most regressive nature. Tax structures, Hell — this is medieval.

Professors who attain tenure can, if they want to, get away with murder. Freed from all productive pressure, and ensured unshakeable status, they can rest on increasingly unearned laurels and, at their leisure, push around not only younger teachers, but students. I don't say all that many professors fall into this evil; in my experience only a very few have.

But any kind of job security so incontrovertable leaves such room for mistakes, if not laziness, and worse still, a kind of pedagogical fascism, that one wonders how many people honestly profit by it. And it is frustrating, almost beyond legal limits, to come across even one teacher infecting this campus with his [and it usually is his, by historical definition] fatuousness and neglect of the job's fundamentals — intelligence and compassion, and the ability to communicate them.

I am bound to be in a dream world proposing alternative systems, right? Tenure, after all, along with "publish or perish" and "the old-boy network", forms an unavoidable dark side in modern customs of higher education. But does it not make sense at least to have tenure mean a five or seven year contract renewable on condition of passing review?

Requirements might even be loosened up a bit, so long as there was no doubt the people were still working. And in the obviously necessary weeding out of meat-heads, a lot of new blood, in the form of Affirmative Action et. al., could be brought in.

The last year has shown a marked decline in student activism. A hopeful observer might attribute this to our frustration with attempts, too often repeated, at both holding and televising a revolution NOW. Perhaps we've been barking up the wrong proverb. Perhaps, instead of haranguing Whitmore, we should try to harangue professors more. They, after all, are what we pay for. And with them moving, who knows what'll happen down the line.

Rent control: Vote YES today

To the Editor:

We are compelled to speak out on the referenda issue of Rent Control. The facts about Rent Control are plain and simple. We have a situation where there exists an unfair market competition. Landlords are in control of both the supply and the price of the housing market, leaving the consumer with little say.

During the past five years the Consumer Price index has risen approximately 34 per cent. The rent, according to Amherst Planning Board, has risen 65 per cent. At present there exists a constraint upon the supply of housing. For the past five years, Amherst has experienced a very high demand. Again according to the planning board, we have had a vacancy rate of 1.1 per cent for that period. What is being done to make a consumer's position more equitable?

There is a referenda today to establish a new town board with the responsibility to adjudicate these matters. The vote to establish this board would create a more democratic system of control of the housing market. The board's mission is to reach a fair rate of profit. It would review increase or decrease requests and decide upon them. It would be charged with oversight in health and safety code enforcements. It would also see to it that retalitory and discriminatory actions would not be tolerated.

We urge all students who are registered to vote in Amherst to participate in today's vote on Rent Control. If we ever wish to relax the mandatory dorm requirement, we must first see Rent Control in Amherst. If we relax our dorm requirement we would flood the market even more than at its present level of 1.1 per cent vacancy and driving prices to unreal levels.

Jay Martus
Paul Cronin
SGA Co-Presidents

To the Editor:

I am writing to urge all graduate students to vote YES on the Rent and Eviction Control referendum for the Town of Amherst. Voting is between 12 and 8 p.m. today.

The large majority of graduate students at UMass are tenants in the Town of Amherst. If the referendum passes, we would be on the road to assuring that only justified, reasonable rent increases would be allowed. Thus, no landlord would be driven out of business, but they would not be permitted to take unfair advantage of a restricted housing market.

I would also like to take this opportunity to condemn the scare campaign being waged by some of the Town's biggest landlords. Threats of massive immediate tax increases, of refusing to repair their own property if the referendum passes, and presenting inaccurate figures as to what has happened in other parts of the state are not acceptable ways of getting to the merits of the issue. Rather, it suggests that perhaps the landlords have no facts or figures that really would support their case.

Michael R. Federow, President
Graduate Student Senate

To the Editor:

Today the town of Amherst goes to the polls to decide on a rent control referendum, calling for a rollback to last May's level and a panel to evaluate the rent situation for the future.

While the student senate gets stoned and plays with a mere million dollar budget, the big bucks in Amherst are sliding through the banks, the university, and a few real estate agencies, notably Puffer and D.H. Jones.

Local press and town government are against rent control. The reason, stated in the Amherst Record, is clear: it will cut tax revenue, thereby harming the school system. This reason is false. The high rents we pay go to profits; the landlords will still be able to pay their taxes.

Anybody who's a tenant, or living in a dorm, faces the other side of the coin. Most of us are overcrowded, unemployed, insecure. Are we worried about the Amherst school system, one of the richest in the nation? Or should we be more concerned with the economic processes in the larger arena of property rights versus human rights?

Assuming rent control goes through, and prices are rolled back to last May's level, every household will receive a $25 bonus [I'm guessing] as a monthly rent reduction, according to the referendum. So, we could all have a rent control party, or at least not worry so much about that big bad bill OR spend that money on music, travelling, books, films, day care, continuing education ...

At least the landlords wouldn't have it. They have plenty. So think what you can do with a few extra bucks in your pocket. Buy records, put it in the bank to buy your own house some day, take a skiing trip, yes even eat well.

Vote yes on Rent Control today.

Long live the Punk

Hippiedom ... For me and lots of other people a good hippie was something very worth being, if not the only thing worth being.

In a way I'm glad no one seems much interested in being a good hippie any more. It wasn't an easy thing to be. I hope the fact that no one wants to be a good hippie any more means the whole thing worked, that the world is slightly less the desperate, mindless, cruel nightmare of unawareness that gave birth to hippiedom.

Maybe everyone's part hippie now so that really good full-time hippies ... aren't needed any more. It's what the good hippies wanted all along anyway.

— Mark Vonnegut
the Eden Express

Hippiedom is dead, long live the punk. Yup, you heard it here. All sweet hippies have been replaced by The Punk. There are a few hippies left, but they are few and far between. I miss them and then again I do think that hippiedom, as it was, is past its useful time.

I could list forever the things I miss about having hippies around. There were so many of them, so many good things: all night guitar playing, how-to change-the-world-conversations, blue-jeans in used clothing stores for three dollars, army field jackets, long hair, dreams, pascifism, anger, involvement, rage, action, wanting to be a part of the whole — something better.

But long haired boys don't get beat up for being queer anymore and blue-jeans are ok for church. Women wear hardhats and mothers are more honest with their children. Consumers don't consume so blindly, and the war is over.

Now high schools are vandalized by thirteen year olds who have nothing better to do. Fifteen year old kids trip for kicks, no wonderous visions of the truth for them. Long hair is styled and everybody sleeps together — it's cool. Out for number one, that's now.

Really good hippies would have trouble swallowing the seventies, no perfect community to escape to now. But apathy — that all encompassing disease — killed them or they just copped out to do their own thing. What ever reason, they're not here now to deal with the very real problems that have not gone away.

Betty Friedan said, about a year ago, that the time for rage is gone, it is time to act. But you can't act on something when the people around you keep tearing it down, don't fund it or don't care at all. The time for rage isn't over yet. We overestimated the world. Hippiedom died before its natural time and I think, in the next few years, we are going to regret its total passing. I think, perhaps, some resurrecting may happen, but the attempt will pale next to the hopes we had.

Hippiedom is dead, long live the punk — the no good, no hope, disfunctionate antipathy of the hippie, that mimics hippie faults and abuses hippie lifestyle. Take what you can get — that's the word now, all across the board.

Grad women scientists meet tonight

To the Editor:

We, as women graduate students in various areas of science, in order to provide the opportunity for women in science in the 5 college area to meet and talk, have arranged an informal seminar-panel discussion for this evening to be held at 7:30 in Rm. 911 Campus Center. Graduate women, faculty, undergraduates and staff are welcome.

Women in science have remained uninvolved in activities for graduate women on campus. Certainly we share many common concerns that these programs have not met. Among them are: balancing career and family; job hunting; discrimination in hiring and promoting; and credibility in research. We hope that this evening's gathering will give us the opportunity to discuss these issues and that it will lead to continuing communication among women in science.

Mr. Robert's dream world

It seems nice to be here — inside — warm — and then cold by the dorm furnace. Friends are around and all seems pleasant and secure. It feels nice to lean back and rest in a large pillow talking — but really lecturing, spouting philosopher's names — spouting out theories of life — living in the fictional world of some writer.

And the person next door exists in his own fictional world, a world of physics problems and chemistry labs. All are immersed in the academics, totally alienated from the real world outside. We sit dreaming or hunched over our desks existing in our little fictional worlds.

There's politics here, too... imitations of the real world. There are two sets of bureaucracy — the administration living in Whitmore and the administration living in the Student Union. Each is hindered by Robert's Rules of Order, policy statements, red tape dictating the way things ought to be done and so they never get done, the practice that everything accomplished is actually motivated for and by self-interest and power manifestation. It's all the real world. Sad, it doesn't have to be that way because — it's set in a fictional world.

The committee meeting. Every Thursday at 2:15 the group gathers, the people who should be doing something for a community (or to it). And they gather bringing yellow pads and number two pencils. Speaker gets up. Agenda is followed through — fervently scratching down notes. Notes on what? Nothing, really. And all the "non-decisions" made are hindered by Mr. Robert's. It's blue book in last year's edition, yellow the year before, but the page numbers are the same because the publishers know how often a group has to look things up. Does it really matter how order is kept as long as order is kept and something is decided? More disorder is created in trying to decipher Mr. Roberts and all the arguments stemming from his mistreatment of the English language.

And once a decision is made, the policy statement. But policy statements are rather inadaptable to human nature. Human beings do not change their minds day to day. Not all situations are black and white. Each situation must be weighed and judged separately. That's fairness and fairness is the end "policy statements" are rigged to meet. That's an impossibility with "policy-rigidity" but feasible if we would depend on heart and mind.

And what's the use for setting up anything? There's the red tape to deal with. Fine to have rules and regulations and order. But does it really create order? It took me ten long distance calls all over the state of Massachusetts to find out scores received on CLEP tests I had taken. My first call was to Rm. 215 Berkshire House here on campus. Nine phone calls later and about eight dollars worth of dimes later, I found out the information was in Rm. 216 Berkshire House. That's the bureaucracy flow.

And the "procedure" is one "fact" an unrelenting ear can hide behind to say things just can't be done.

And the ego — it floats the halls of Whitmore and the third floor Student Union. People are out for themselves, for their own political motives, their own gains. Whitmore can never work because of it and neither can Student Government.

Sad to see a fictional world fail as the outside world, because fictional worlds are the only places dreams can be dreamt without guilt, without the constraints of society in view. And those dreams can't be mastered? — even in a dream world? (Or perhaps we're not dreaming hard enough?)

MacKimmie: Setting a good example

To the Editor:

For those who have been questioning the quality of human relations in the residence hall system a visit to MacKimmie House will provide an observation of the most promising model of Black-White, male-female, and staff-student relations on our campus.

Female residents speak of coeducational living as one of choice, recognizing its challenges to both males and females. They cite growth in the vital human areas of race and sex that could not otherwise take place in a single-sex residence hall.

Males not only agree with their female housemates, they attribute much of their awareness of sexism to the daily interaction with the female residents who point out certain aspects of sexism in the dormitory as well as in the larger University community.

The brotherhood between Bruce Rose, Bryan Lewis, Joe Andrews, Greg John, Tony Dallessandro, Ron Conyers, Rich Santello, Kelvin McShane, Ray Drew, Lawrence Frith, Ed Saab, Julren Pina, Alex Dougherty, Matt Schreiner, and Tom Doyle has been perhaps the most potent human force operating in MacKimmie. Since the warm days of early September to the bitter cold and rainy days of late October, these fine young men combined the positive essence of their Blackness and Whiteness into a powerful intramural football team known as the "MacKimmie Lions". They grew together and became the most discussed and envied team in their league. Although they lost the championship game 13-12 to a fraternity team, they emerged victorious as the champions of human brotherhood.

As Grantland Rice said in his "Alumnus Football", it matters not that you win or lose, but how you played the game." In no small measure, we are indebted to the "MacKimmie Lions" for they played the game with mutual respect for each other and an awareness and dedication to the humanity-house concept which has been uniquely associated with MacKimmie for several years.

Southwest and the University accrue immeasurably from the MacKimmie model. In this bicentennial year, it is indeed inspirational to see the egalatarian rhetoric of our Declaration of Independence and Constitution translated into meaningful human behavior.

Civil Liberties Committee role

To the Editor:

To the residents of Southwest:

The student government of Southwest is the Southwest Assembly – which consists of one elected representative for 274 or less residents in a dormitory and eight Third World representatives elected at large.

One of the functions of the SWA is to oversee the allocation of Southwest funds. The Civil Liberties Committee is a subcommittee of the Assembly. It is stated in By-Law No. 7: "No House shall receive monetary support from the SWA unless it has an ongoing anti-racism and-or anti-sexism program. The SWA Civil Liberties Committee is empowered to set up criteria for an ongoing program and also rule on whether a house's program meets that criteria." It is very important to note that no house shall receive money if their program does not meet Civil Liberties criteria.

We also act as a liaison body between residents and the Student Attorney General, University Judiciary, LSO, and the Student Senate. This means that if a resident of Southwest is being discriminated against because of race or sex, or that their basic civil rights are being violated, we urge him-her to come to us for aid in rectifying his-her situation.

In light of the fact that the stated goals of Southwest are to encourage a community that combats racism and sexism, it is crucial that residents understand the role of the Civil Liberties Committee in the Southwest Assembly and in Southwest.

Chairwoman,
Southwest Civil Liberties Committee

Women Voters on rent control

To the Editor:

On November 2 voters went to the polls to take part in choosing the officials and the laws which will govern us. On November 16 Amherst voters again have this opportunity to vote, to approve or disapprove of rent control in the Town of Amherst.

Housing in Amherst was one of the chief concerns of all groups surveyed in the Needs Assessment Report for the Town of Amherst, published in September, 1975. This report, "Who Needs What According to Whom," will be the subject of a public meeting sponsored by the League on Wednesday, November 17, at 7:30 p.m. in the Jones Library. Town officials will attend. Marietta Taylor, one of the authors of the report, will facilitate the discussion. Whatever the outcome of the November 16 referendum, everyone interested in the needs of different groups in Amherst is urged to come to our November 17 meeting.

The other is a meeting on Issues in Agriculture on World Food and Malnutrition and will be held in room 174 of the Campus Center. If one wishes to learn more, listen to MassPIRG reports on WMUA, tonight at 5:45.

Art festival meeting tomorrow

A people's art festival is being planned for Dec. 13 in the Campus Center.

The student video project, the program council music committee, the Hampshire College film workshop, members of the Student Senate, and others are coordinating the festival. It will feature local and student musicians, experimental films, live video and tapes, electronic music, poetry, photography, and is free and open to the public.

There will be a meeting in the Campus Center room 805-809 tomorrow, at 4 p.m. to coordinate the scheduling and programming of the festival. The intention of the festival is to bring the talents of the students into public view; to bring the people of the Amherst Community together in a common cause; and to support the rights of students in free speech and performance.

Amherst College sponsors author

Jeremy Brecher, radical labor historian and author of "Strike!" and the recently published "Common Sense for Hard Times," will speak at Amherst College tonight at 7:30 in Johnson Chapel.

Brecher's topic will be "Workers and Hard Times." He will relate his research on the current state of the American working class to what he sees as the various strategies for social change.

The event is the first of the Amherst Action Coalition's Series on the American working class.

Eclipse featured at People's News

A student-written, edited, and produced journal has come out in the Five-College area — an ECLIPSE which "challenges the traditional student-professor relationship and instead calls for student-to-student interaction."

The first issue of the student economic journal includes articles on the World Economic Crisis, Women and the Economy, Faculty and Capitalism, a Consumer Guide on Valley Banking, and more.

This afternoon at 4:00, there will be a meeting of all students interested in working on and contributing to the December issue, in room 100 Thompson Hall. Students are encouraged by organizers to bring their old papers and new ideas.

Eagle flight ruins romance

DETROIT [AP] — Can a high-flying lady eagle find true romance and happiness with a mate grounded by too much time in captivity?

No, and that is the sad story of a romance that never got off the ground. The hero and heroine, two bald eagles, were a lady nicknamed Amelia Earhart who took to flying right off when the U.S. Wildlife Service brought her to the Detroit Zoo and a gentleman who, as one bird watcher put it, was "eagle-pecked."

"He never adjusted and the female was very domineering," said zoo director Dr. James Savoy.

Ads for lawyers

BOSTON [UPI] — A group of legal authorities said Monday lawyers should be allowed to advertise their qualifications, fees and legal background.

A study group of 50 legal authorities, sponsored by the Roscoe Pound-American Trial Lawyers Foundation, also concluded attorneys should be compelled to pass a qualification standard test and have a certain amount of courtroom experience.

The foundation itself did not take a stand on the recommendations, made public at the 1976 Chief Justice Earl Warren Conference on Advocacy in the United States.

Other recommendations included:

—Trial advocacy in all courts should be classified as to specialty as in medicine.

—Medical specialists should be qualified according to standards set by a national bar association consisting in part of accredited continuing legal education after graduation from law school, trial experience and observation.

—Criminal and trial advocacy should each have its own identity.

The report and recommendations culminates nine months work by Dean Monroe Freedman of Hofstra University Law School, New York; Professor of Law James Jeans of the University of Missouri Law School; Professor James McElhaney, visiting Joseph C. Hostetler Professor of Trial Advocacy, Case Western Reserve university.

Directing the conference were trial attorneys Herbert H. Bennett of Portland, Me., conference chairman, and Theodore I. Koskoff of Bridgeport, Conn., Roscoe Foundation president and former conference chairman.

Bennett said the legal profession "is faced with tremendous public stakes revolving around lawyer advertising, legal specialization and standards to insure competency in the courtroom — major changes needed to meet society's demands."

SW features play

The play "Yanks 3, Detroit 0, Top of the Seventh" will be presented at the Southwest Hampden Center for the Performing Arts tomorrow night through Saturday night.

Showtime for all showings is 8:00, and general admission is $1.50. No reservations will be accepted.

This play deals with the growing desperation of a fading baseball star. Mingling fantasy and reality, the action centers on "Duke" Bronkowski, an aging big league pitcher trying for a comeback. He is taunted by baserunners, his catcher, his coach, and his Texas groupie girlfriend, all which reminds him of the painful mess he has made of his personal and professional life.

Education counseling

Michael Schwartz in room 125, School of Education, or Cyndi Barshov in room E-26A, Machmer, are available every day of Counseling Week; now through Friday, to answer questions relative to teaching certification requirements, elementary and secondary teacher preparation programs, non-certification majors, and prerequisites for entry into any School of Education program.

By JACOB LOVE

The main factor in astrology is motion. The planets and the luminaries (Sun and Moon) are constantly zooming around the Zodiac. Right now, Mercury (thought), Mars (aggression), and the Sun (spirituality) are at the tail end of Scorpio. They're taking care of last minute business before they move on around to the sign of Sagittarius. Scorpio is the death-and-rebirth sign so as those three heavenly bodies sweep thru, we likewise will find ourselves cleaning up the debris from scorpionic arguments and trying to pull ourselves together for a re-awakening. Sagitarrius, the sign of the coming season, symbolizes the need to shoot towards the target of wisdom, flying free from earthly cares in a joyous outward expansion.

As these three bodies leave Scorpio, they will form an opposition (a see-saw effect) to Jupiter, the joy planet, who is directly across the Zodiac in the practical earthy sign of Taurus. Jupiter is the "ruler" of Sagittarius, which means he influences everything that goes thru that sign. So as Mercury, Mars, and the Sun swing into Sagittarius, Jupiter will try to pull them towards his end of the see-saw. The energy drift will pull us towards wanting more material success and financial expansion, on the way towards wisdom. We'll feel poor if we don't find greater riches.

Mercury has already made a thought-provoking opposition with Jupiter Sunday morning and will move into Sagittarius tonight. We may find our thinking greatly expanded over the next few weeks.

Mars formed his opposition to Jupiter yesterday evening and provoked a few aggressive urges to break free. Maybe even a fite or two. He goes into Sagittarius Saturday so between now and then we may feel like fighting our way towards freedom, unless our aggressive energies have been engaged in solid practical purpose.

The Sun opposes Jupiter early Thursday morning. Since the Sun symbolizes our spiritual focus, unless we feel happy with our soul-growth, Jupiter will pull us back into matter and we'll plunk down to earth. Between now and Thursday, we've got relative calm in which to prepare for our effort at balancing the spiritual-solar needs with practical-material needs. If we do, the rewards will be great. If we don't — well, everything is going into Sagittarius anyway, so we'll get a new chance to reach out for deeper meaning.

Today, while things are mild from the astrological point of view, we'll find it a good time for house-cleaning since the emotional Moon is in the analytical clean-up sign of Virgo. She'll be there until tomorrow morning so sweep, sweep while there's time.

A dreamy configuration of Mercury and Neptune (the dream planet) should make the morning a good time for thinking about subconscious images, planning, doodling, and wishing. As we move towards noon, a lunar connection will encourage us to enjoy the fruits of planning and discipline. The afternoon is free-form and as we move towards 10:34 p.m. we may find a magic moment for love. Around midnite, try to avoid mental warts. Your Birthday
by Stella Wilder

Tuesday, November 16 — Born today, you are critical by nature, often giving in to an intense urge to hurt others through the verbal abuse of their work. Children especially may fall victim to your seeming need to rebuke whatever you come into contact with and indeed, your sarcasm, though it may not always be clearly understood by the young, may be considered one of the prime reasons why one or another youngster in your immediate family may ultimately be troubled to the point of needing professional help. As a child, you will no doubt be a tremendous tease, taking great joy from the discomfort of those who are neither clever enough nor wise enough to fight back.

Maturity should temper your scathing tongue considerably. It is certain that you will never completely outgrow the tendency to make others squirm and just as certain that you will never lose your ability to do so — but it is also certain that time will teach you the error of such ways and good sense will ultimately win out over a natural inclination in which you can take no pride. In the end, you should prove a just individual, one who is as capable of judging himself as he is other people.

Somewhat impetuous, especially when it comes to affairs of the heart, you have been known to keep many a member of the opposite sex dangling while you try to make up your mind whether or not to encourage him or her in feelings of love and affection.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Education is the key to success at this time. This does not necessarily mean, however, formal education. Seek to learn on your own.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — If you find that you have been more disagreeable than you had intended, make your apologies. Lean a little in favor of the young.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Optimism is the key to success, especially if you apply it early in the day to the responsibilities at hand.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — So long as others know what your preferences are, you can feel free to leave the final choice of activities to them.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Take care that you argue from design, not from willy-nilly response to the arguments of others. Know your own mind very well.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Realize the limitations of your own temporary situation and you will not be tempted to dispute the authority of those whose position is more stable.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — The creative impulse may lead you into several exciting activities today. Take care not to overstep the limits of good manners.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Seek the level of your own vision regarding the world around you. Accept nothing less than what you have planned for yourself.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Inward experience is just as vital as adventures that involve you in the outside world. Communicate directly with one in authority.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — If you are troubled at heart about the coming events of the next few days, relax. Tension brings failure; optimism brings benefits.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Take care not become separated from one whose presence is essential to your success. New methods of operation come into play at this time.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — The risk of there being too little time available to acccomplish what must be accomplished runs high today. Turn your attention to essentials.

Pitt remains on top but Bruins close 2nd

NEW YORK [UPI] — UCLA, with its most crucial game of the season only five days away, has launched a late but significant bid to overhaul Pittsburgh as the United Press International board of coaches' top-ranked college football team.

The Panthers, with 22 first place votes and 389 overall points, retained the No. 1 ranking they achieved a week ago, but UCLA, a distant second last week, pulled to within nine points of the No. 1 slot Monday in the latest balloting of the 42-member coaches' panel.

The biggest inroad by the Bruins was made in first place votes where they increased their total from eight to 15. Pittsburgh, meanwhile, dropped eight No. 1 nods from a week ago. The UCLA surge was obviously triggered by the Bruins' decisive (45-14) victory over Oregon State Saturday while Pittsburgh was struggling (24-16) with arch-rival West Virginia.

Southern California, with 303 points and one first place vote, remained No. 3 in the nation, thus adding to the dramatics of next Saturday's Rose Bowl and ratings showdown between the two rival Los Angeles schools. A victory by UCLA (9-0-1) would certainly enhance the Bruins' chances of catching Pittsburgh, which still has Penn State remaining on its schedule.

Southern California, with one loss, would definitely have to couple a victory over UCLA with a Pittsburgh defeat from Penn State on Nov. 26 if the Trojans were to climb to the first spot over the still unbeaten and untied Panthers. Judging by UCLA's renewed support, however, many of the coaches seem inclined to soft-peddle the Bruins' early season tie with Ohio State at Columbus.

The top eight teams remained unchanged from a week ago. After the top three, Michigan (with three first place votes), Texas Tech, Georgia, Maryland and Ohio State kept their positions from fourth through eighth. Oklahoma replaced Nebraska at No. 9 and Iowa State, which shocked the Cornhuskers (37-28) last week, moved into the No. 10 spot — an improvement of six notches.

Sport Studies

Unique sport cinema course exposed

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

A long-neglected area of study will finally get its day in the sun next semester, thanks to the UMass Sports Studies department.

"Sport in the American Cinema" is the title of the course, and its originator is graduate student Steve Mosher, a self-admitted authority in the subject of sports films.

"Over 5,000 American films deal with sport is some way," he says. "I discovered that fact while writing my master's thesis on the topic."

Out of this veritable wealth of cinematic productions, Mosher has selected about 20 to constitute the framework of his course. Some of them will be seen in conjunction with his first topic, "The All-American Hero". Knute Rockne All-American, Champion, and Olympia are some of his planned offerings for the first four weeks of the semester.

Topic two, "The Anti-Hero", will find Fear Strikes Out, Rollerball, The Longest Yard, and The Hustler among the movies to be seen during its study.

To round out the semester, Mosher and his class will study "The Common Man," which will be augmented by Fat City, Derby, and Bad News Bears.

The instructor says the purpose of his course is "to explore the development of the public's conception of sport (and the individuals who play them) as influenced by the motion picture medium."

In addition to the weekly Monday night screenings Sports Studies 190C will entail, at least four additional discussion sessions will be set up. The course schedule booklet lists only one such available class, but Mosher adds that the extra periods will be organized in order to accommodate students who may have a conflict.

Mosher says that a $10 lab fee will be required of all students, but that. "it may only come to around 60 cents a film if we get a high enough enrollment in the course."

The course readings are not yet set, but they could be either a short text, filmscripts, short articles, or movie reviews.

Requirements for the course include a short (two-page) review of a single film, a critique (three to five pages) of another movie, and a 10-15 page long term paper.

"It (the term paper) can be about on just about anything under the sun," Mosher states. "I just want it to be of interest to the student."

Interestingly enough, Mosher says that he was able to find only four articles written on sport in the cinema.

"Two of them were from Film Society Review, while the other two came from Sports Illustrated," Mosher explains. "Aside from that, nothing at all has ever been done on the topic."

It should prove to be a very interesting semester, both for the student as well as for the instructor. And you can be sure that almost anything a student writes about in the course will be of unexplored territory.

Rozelle jabs lottery

WILMINGTON, Del. [UPI] — National Football League Commissioner Pete Rozelle, the opening witness in the league's suit against the Delaware Football Lottery, said Monday that legalized gambling would tarnish the NFL's image, lower attendance and make fans suspicious.

State lawyers revealed during their opening arguments that Delaware would soon file a countersuit against the League, contending that negative publicity has hurt lottery ticket sales.

Since the lottery began Sept. 13, the first weekend of the pro football season, ticket sales have fallen far below projections. Last week sales were the lowest of the year, $33,000, continuing an almost steady decline. Officials originally estimated the game would gross about $400,000 a week.

Players can win money on pari-mutuel basis by either picking winners or selecting point spread winners for certain games.

The NFL initiated its suit when U.S. District Court Judge Walter Stapleton, who is presiding at the trial, denied a request in August for a temporary restraining order against the lottery.

Under questioning by NFL lawyers, Rozelle said football is "entertainment, a form of escapism," but that the lottery changes normal fan interest into a more serious interest because money is at stake.

Barnes back in doghouse

PROVIDENCE, R. I. [UPI] — An arrest warrant signed yesterday names pro basketball player Marvin Barnes of the Detroit Pistons for allegedly violating his probation in a 1972 assault case.

Superior court judge William M. MacKenzie signed the warrant, sought by Providence police. They contend Barnes' Oct. 9 arrest for carrying an unloaded handgun in his luggage when it was checked at the Romulus, Michigan airport violated his probation.

He was given a one-year suspended sentence and three years of probation on May 23, 1974 after pleading guilty to assaulting a former Providence College teammate with a tire iron in 1972.

Barnes later contended he did not assault Lawrence Ketvirtis but felt the state had enough evidence to convict him. The court could order Barnes to serve the one year suspended prison term.

In May 1975, a U.S. district court jury in Providence ordered Barnes to pay Ketvirtis $10,000 for assault in a $1.5 million civil damage suit. Lawyers for both sides claimed vindication for their clients.

After the verdict, Barnes, a 6-9 forward, vowed to "play basketball, go on with my career and stay out of trouble."

Barnes' saga of moodiness and disappearances took another turn last Friday when the Detroit Pistons suspended him a third time for missing practice sessions.

New England win 'a big hurdle' as Pats' playoff prospects peak

BOSTON [UPI] — For the New England Patriots, who upset the AFC East Division-leading Baltimore Colts 21-14 Sunday, there is light at the end of the tunnel.

"That was a big hurdle," said Don Calhoun. "That's the first step to the playoffs.

"We just got to take it game by game, though," warned the third-year running back, whose best performance in pro ball helped bring the New England a little closer to the possibility of its first playoff appearance.

Replacing Sam Cunningham, who was injured in the first quarter, Calhoun rushed for 141 yards and was a key factor in drawing the Patriots, 7-3, to within a game of the Colts, 8-2, and keeping their one-game advantage over the other clubs in contention for the wild card berth in the AFC playoffs.

Among the playoff contenders, the Patriots have what is considered to be the easiest schedule over the last four games. But the injury report following the Baltimore game was the least encouraging this season.

Coach Chuck Fairbanks said "It's still too early to tell," but indicated Cunningham and Francis are possible starters and Conn doubtful for Sunday's game against the New York Jets at Shea Stadium.

Nelson's right leg was put in a cast for about two weeks.

In other years, this may have meant immediate disaster, but this year's bench is the strongest in quite some time.

New England scored twice following the injury to Cunningham, thanks in large part to Calhoun, and the defense totally smothered the Colts in the second half, allowing the league's highest scoring offense just 36 total yards in 29 plays.

"The defense played extremely well," said Fairbanks, who gave game balls to every member of the squad. "It was the best defensive game since I've been here. They are executing better and that's significant."

The Patriot's coach noted the defense surrendered only 27 points in the last three games. "We'll need that same kind of performance the rest of the way, because every game now is like a playoff game."

Colt coach a realist

BALTIMORE [UPI] — Baltimore Colts' coach Ted Marchibroda said Monday his club's unexpected loss to New England proves one thing: You have to fight and scratch every week in the National Football League.

"We had a good offensive first half and a good defensive second half but we did not put it all together," said Marchibroda. "New England is a good team, they deserve the credit. We can't take anything for granted in this year.

"In the NFL you have to fight and scratch every week to win a division championship. But we're 8-2, and leading the pack — where you want to be."

The 21-14 defeat narrowed the Colts' advantage to one game over the 7-3 Patriots in the AFC Eastern Division.

"I can't add much more to what I said after the game. A better team beat us and beat us on offense, defense and special teams," said Marchibroda.

Next week, the Colts take on Miami in the Orange Bowl in the NFL's Monday night game. The Dolphins are 5-5 this year and in third place in the Eastern Division, but Marchibroda expects a difficult game.

"A (Don) Shula-coached ballclub is always ready to play. (Bob) Griese is still the best quarterback in the league," he said. "They have the same offensive line and basically the same backs. It's hard to base opinions on won-and-lost records."

Marchibroda said the Colts came out of the Patriots game without any serious injury problems.

RENT CONTROL MEANS
RENT CONTROL IS A BARGAIN FOR PRESENT TENANTS FOR THE FIRST YEAR OR TWO AFTER THAT EVERYBODY LOSES

NO NEW APARTMENTS
No one will build when costs are bound to go up and income is controlled. This means an even worse shortage of apartments and no competition for present landlords.

DETERIORATION OF PRESENT APARTMENTS
With no competition from new apartments and caught in a squeeze between costs and income, landlords will let present apartments deteriorate. That usually happens under rent control.

DESTRUCTION OF TOWN'S TAX BASE
Run down apartments mean lower tax assessments and lower taxes. This means less money for schools and other town services. This is why rent control is killing New York City.

Harvard takes top... ...McGrail finishes 12th

Men harriers snared in IC4A's

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

BRONX, N.Y. — "Harvard, Who believes it", said UMass captain John McGrail.

The Crimson and several other Ivy League schools ruptured the UMass hoped of being the best cross country team in the East yesterday by capturing the IC4A title before 2,000 spectators at Van Cortland Park.

Running on a partly cloudy cold day, the Harvard five, picked as the "dark horse" of the meet, simply outlasted 101 colleges and 391 runners on their way to its first IC4A title since 1931.

Predicted as the top challenges for the meet, the Northeastern and UMass were simply beaten by teams who had their best performances of the year.

Leading the way with four runners in the top twenty was Harvard with a team total of 135 points. Villanova ran a close seconds with 137 while, Georgetown, Princeton Dartmouth Navy, Northeastern, and UMass finished in that respective order.

A mixture of the flu and stomach problems caused UMass' number one runner, sophomore Mike Quinn to finish 58th in the race. "Running on what coach Ken O'Brien termed "sheer courage," Quinn ran 18th for the first three miles. But as he entered "Cemetery Hill," (a long steep, rocky, covered with sand and mud) Quinn's strength could not hold out and approximately 30 runners passed him.

Sheer disappointment but realistic thoughts were the thoughts of the UMass runners after the meet. "If I had run, where I was supposed to have run, we would have beaten Harvard," said a dejected Mike Quinn.

"I feel real sorry for the sophomores and juniors on our team," said John McGrail. We did as best as we could and everyone gave their best effort. But for runners like Louis Panaccione, Cliff Staples, and Bob Martin, and Frank Carroll, I know this is a meet they will want to remember for next season.

"It's a different race entirely when that gun goes off and 400 runners sprint across the field," said junior Cliff Staples. "This course has racks, ditches, horse paths, bridges, mud, hills and grass, and if you aren't in position at the beginning of the race it's awfully hard to pass anyone," said Staples.

Head coach O'Brien, obviously disappointed said there was something positive abput his team's performance. "All I ever wanted out of our team was a real hard effort on the part of every runner. I got that today from everyone and I don't really care that we lost. Sure it hurts but things like Quinn's sickness can happen at any time and can be expected. But I think if the race was run again next week, the top eight teams would be different," O'Brien said.

"O'Brien said that he expected Harvard to have a shot at winning but was surprised how well the Crimson ran. "Harvard just put everything together and it was their day. They ran extraordinary."

The Harriers thus close out its season with a 10-1 dual meet record, winner of the Yankee Conference, second in the New Englands, and eighth in the IC4A's. By not finishing in the top three teams of yesterdays meet the Harriers do not qualify for the Nationals to be held in Texas.

Sub-varsity harriers run away with title

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

BRONX, N.Y. — In its final meet of the year, the UMass sub varsity cross country team upstaged its varsity teammates as the junior Minutemen walked away with the Eastern sub-varsity championship which was held yesterday under the designation "St. John's Invitational".

While the varsity faltered to eighth place in the IC4A's, the "Bubs" totaled 46 points in defeating a field of 200 other runners. UMass easily outdistanced second place Princeton, which had 77 points, and Rutgers, which totaled 103.

Pacesetter for Mass was John Scheer, who went out to the front and stuck in third position for the whole race. Over the first mile, he was joined by Neil McGrail and Tom Wolfe, but they dropped back as the pack went up Cemetery Hill.

Scheer went through the first mile in 4:37, and passed the three mile in 15:20. He ran a strong, steady race, one which he was fully satisfied with, and was third for most of the way until he was passed in the last mile by Jim Flynn of Villanova, and outkicked by Steve Mousetis of Springfield. Scheer's time of 25:47 was 40 seconds off the winning time of Phil Kane of Villanova.

Running an "inspired" race, Tom Wolfe ran his way to seventh place in the meet. After running out front early, he settled down to a duel with Kevin McCusker, who eventually finished eighth. Wolfe had a strong finish left to outleg his teammate. They were clocked in 25:55 and :56 respectively.

"I love beating guys from our team," said McCusker, "cause that means that we're out front, controlling the meet."

Matty "Wolfe-boy" ran a gutsy race of his own to end up in tenth. He went out hard, as he did in the NE meet, and cramped up again. This time, however, he fought them off, and finished strong.

Locking up the victory was the 15th place of Scott "Pre" McKenzie. McKenzie hung tough right around that spot throughout the race, and his steady effort insured the victory.

Rick Walls was twentieth, which completed UMass' domination of the top spots. Depth was the key, as Villanova took the top three places, but had no third and fourth men to back them up.

"You can quote me," said Walls. "Today, everybody ran good."

"I only wish PC and Northeastern were here," said McCusker. "We would've beaten them."

"We did what we had to," said sub varsity coach Arnie Morse. "We went out hard — aggressively like you have to in a big meet like this. It was a good effort — I wish they had a National JV title, but they don't."

After going as far as they can this year, the sub varsity is now looking for new worlds to conquer in track.

The Saga of Dick Allen

FOR SALE [to the highest bidder]: One slightly-used, 34 year-old first baseman. Can also be the designated hitter in your team's lineup. Has had 13 years major league experience, including stints in both leagues. Former National League Rookie of the Year. Has performed with last place teams and divisional winners. Has won two home run titles, but has slumped off in the last two seasons. Will be sure to disrupt any team's personality. May also pull disappearing acts before, during, and after the season. Asking price begins at $200,000.

Now, if you were a baseball owner looking to strengthen your team in the free-agent marketplace, would you answer an ad like that? Well, if you had any common sense left at all, you wouldn't touch this man with a ten-foot pole.

The player in question is Dick Allen, once an immensely talented but lately disappointing player. The ex-Philadelphia Phillie, St. Louis Cardinal, Los Angeles Dodger, and Chicago White Sox first sacker was declared a free-agent in a special transaction last week.

Let it be established from the outset that Mr. Allen is one greatly-endowed ballplayer. He can swing his forty-odd ounce bat with power and adeptness, is able to run the bases with an intelligence not often found in today's breed of baseball player, and is as agile as a cat at his fielding spot.

But the last two years have not been good to Allen. After being reacquired by the Phillies (the team with which he began his career) he has had two straight sub-par years.

In 1975, Allen hit only in the .230s, while in 1976, he batted .268. Not exactly impressive for a man who twice led the American league in home runs and has hit above .300 several times.

Allen has, or at least had, the necessary tools to become a full-fledged superstar. Not a good player, mind you, a great one. That Rookie-of-the-Year honor was an indication early-on that he could have been something really special.

But what has transpired in the interim between 1964 and 1976? Why has Allen bounced around more times than a kid's Superball in an elementary school playground? Why didn't he become one of baseball's super-elite?

The answer, my friends, is all in Allen's head. The man can't find happiness, it seems, anyplace.

Trying to chronicle Allen's highjinks in the past 13 years is a little like trying to figure out Jimmy Carter's campaign promises. It just can't be done. Instead, I'll concentrate on a few of the highlights (or, if you will, lowlights) of his off-the-field antics.

Allen originally left Philadelphia because of negative fan reactions. Well, that isn't too unreasonable. After all, those crowds are likely to boo a ball boy should he fail to catch a foul.

So Dick moved on to St. Louis. He didn't last long there, as the next season he was with Los Angeles. Apparently, he and the reportedly benign Walter Alston didn't exactly see eye to eye, so it was on to the American League and Chicago.

The White Sox had a new manager, Chuck Tanner, and he did his best to welcome Allen. Calling him practically the best thing since soft-whipped butter, Tanner constantly praised his reluctant superstar. And, guess what? Allen responded with his two home-run crowns.

And while on-the-field life was satisfactory for Allen, he still found in himself the capactiy to break rules. For instance, he showed up at spring training very late, after spending some time with his first love, horse racing. Chicago tolerated this sort of behavior, simply because he was its drawing card and top player.

But something happened prior to the 1975 season. Allen decided he wanted to return to Philadelphia, of all places. After some drawn-out negotiating, he joined his old club part way through the season.

But he found the old magic just wasn't there anymore. He no longer was the player of the past. Maybe it was a case of advancing age, but when it came down to performance, Allen was definitely in the low-octane category.

So, the only way Allen could draw attention to himself was through, you guessed it, off-the-field antics. After a tame 1975 season, Allen really went to town last year.

First of all, he took an unexplained leave of absence during the campaign. Then, after he returned, Allen did not celebrate the Phil's division-clinching win with the rest of his teammates. And, finally, he refused to participate in post-season play unless his good friend, Tony Taylor, was activated for the playoffs.

After all these shenanigans, it is no wonder that only one team thus far has bid for his services. The Oakland A's, with their inimitable owner Charlie O. Finley, are the only organization to have shown an interest in Allen.

And why not? It's a definite case of caveat emptor. Buyer Beware.

Rent control defeated

By JOHN MORAN
Collegian Staff

The proposal to petition the Mass. State Legislature to enact rent control in Amherst was defeated by voters here in yesterday's referendum by a margin of 2565 to 1847.

The turnout of 4412 voters was said to be the largest in recent months according to town selectperson and rent control opponent Diana Romer. "I feel it's a clear indication that the residents of the town don't want rent control."

Vince J. O'Connor, member of the Amherst Tenants Association (ATA), when asked to comment on the referendum vote, said "I don't think I am in a position to respond personally to the vote. The campaign was the collective effort of scores and scores of people in the Amherst area."

"Those people," he said, "will get together within the next couple of days to discuss the meaning of the vote. We will then release a statement detailing the future plans of the tenants association.

O'Connor also said the ATA would not rule out any type of action to get some relief for the tenants of the area and that the members of the ATA "all feel strongly that this was not a defeat."

Selectperson Diana Romer said the referendum strengthened her belief that the tenants of the area need some help from avenues other than rent control.

"Over 1800 people voting for rent control indicates that a significant number of people are concerned with the state of rental housing in Amherst," she said.

Less than one-third of the town's 14,161 voters turned out to vote.

"I really think the voters were misled on this one," said George Scheurer, another member of the ATA.

"I feel that there was some distortion in the press which frightened the homeowners" he said. Specifically, I think that the voters were misinformed about the claims of the erosion of the tax base and how much rent control would cost them."

Scheurer also said the system of the assessment of homes and of rented housing was conducted in two different ways and that rental housing evaluation should take place more often.

"From 1971 to 1976 the amount of gross revenue collected by the owners, of rental housing went up 79 per cent," he said.

The greatest advantage enjoyed by those favoring rent control came in precinct 7, which has as a polling place the Auction Barn in North Amherst. This precinct voted 376 to 292 in favor or rent control.

Rent control opponents won by an overwhelming margin in the South Amherst precinct 6. There the voters said no to rent control by a vote of 609 to 181.

The only other precinct with any notable amount of student voters from UMass still voted down rent control 335 to 317. This precinct, precinct 3, held its voting at the Odd Fellows Hall on Kellogg Ave.

Yesterday's referendum was the first time any rent control measure has been put before Amherst voters.

Rent control proposals have been turned down by the Amherst Town Meeting four times in the last seven years.

The ATA charged throughout its drive to collect the signatures needed to bring rent control to referendum and during the pre-election campaign that Town Meeting was not representing the wishes of the voters with respect to the issue. It gathered over 700 signatures to bring the referendum before the people.

The vacancy rate of rental housing in Amherst is 1.1 per cent, one of the lowest in the state.

The "Women in the Sciences" seminar last night focused on key problems of sex discrimination in the academic world.

Dr. Susan Goldhor, dean of natural sciences at Hampshire College said in reference to her college days, "I didn't know any woman faculty member." She added that she got jobs because she had a lot of "chutzpah".

Goldhor and her colleagues formed a group and a newsletter called "Women in Cell Biology" to let people know about jobs in science and to let young women in on some of the secrets of job hunting. Goldhor is editor of the newsletter and she also wrote a book on job hunting.

Dr. Saundra Oyewole, assistant professor of microbiology at Hampshire College, said she found the placement service for the American Society for Microbiology helpful in finding jobs.

In reference to employment Oyewole said, "I think there is also on the part of many men a rather cavalier attitude for Affirmative Action."

"I think we are probably aware of the fact that people are starting to step back from Affirmative Action." she added.

Goldhor said that after four years of Affirmative Action the percentage of women hired at colleges has risen only one per cent, from 19 per cent to 20 per cent. During this time there was a slight movement of women to more prestigious institutions, she said.

Students tried in court on shoplifting charges

Four UMass students were tried and another four arraigned yesterday in Hampshire County District Court on charges of shoplifting from the University store.

Continued one year without findings and assessed $100 each for court costs were: Margie Stratton, McNamara dormitory, a junior student in plant and soil science; Christine V. Johnson, Grayson dormitory, a freshman Stockbridge student; Irene Walworth, Brett dormitory, a freshman plant and soil science major; and Linda Polhemus, Leach dormitory, a freshman elementary education major.

They had pleaded not guilty at arraignment earlier. Store security guards testified against them yesterday. None of the four took the stand in her own defense.

Carolyn N. Boyle, David Mackey, and Eric M. Wall pleaded not guilty and had their cases continued to Dec. 1 for hearings.

David F. Pierce pleaded no contest (nolo contendre). Presiding Judge Alvertus J. Morse ordered a $100 fine and $25 costs. Pierce waived the right to have an attorney defend him and, by his plea, waived the right to appeal.

"I walked in there and I shoplifted, your honor," said Pierce, "There's no denying it."

OH women can sign

Orchard Hill's Women Center was given signature power by Orchard Hill Area Government last night.

Signature power means that the coordinators of the Women's Center can now sign checks without first receiving approval from a member of the Executive Council. Stipulations in the motion require the coordinators to present a spending report bi-monthly to the Finance Committee and the signature power to be revoked in April.

Representatives from the Women's Center claim that with this power they will be able to run the Center more effeciently.

This motion had been presented at an earlier meeting and was voted down. Reasons behind the rejection were that the body wanted to know exactly when money was being spent and how much would be involved.

OHAG is beginning to discuss how their money is to spent instead of who the money is to be allotted to. It was brought up that the semester was ending soon and so far OHAG has put on a concert and sponsored one movie.

Apple Core, OHAG's social committee, expressed a need for interested people to get involved. No one attended the last meeting.

SWA mulls low turnout

By DEBORAH GOODWIN

The location of the voting polls for the Southwest pornographic film referendum was felt by many Southwest Assembly (SWA) members to be the major cause of the low voter turnout in the area Monday. Voting, which was held in Hampden Student Center, should have been held in individual dorms, where "residents would be better motivated to vote on the issue," according to assembly members at their meeting last night.

Although unhappy with the small turnout, members said they were happy with the consequences. A 40 per cent favorable vote was necessary to change the referendum of last semester which banned the showing of pornographic films in Southwest. Only four per cent of the residents in Southwest voted on the issue. Some SWA members said thev would like another referendum held in the dorms, while Albert Sparks, head of Baroque Enterprises and sponsor of the films in question, said he will bring a protest of the decision to the Student Attorney General.

It other business, it was announced that the first four-page edition of the SWA Newsletter will be an insert of the *Mass. If enough Southwest support is gathered, the Newsletter will be an every other week insert.

Commuters buy 'Puerto Rico' for progressive series

By JOHN BERGMAN
Collegian Staff

The Commuter Collective voted to buy the film "Puerto Rico" from the Tri-Continental Film Company at a meeting last night.

The film, which costs $950, will be shown "sometime in early December," according to collective member Sandy Cunningham. "Puerto Rico" will also be rented out and dispersed to other organizations on campus.

The collective passed a motion to purchase an electrostat machine for $1200 from the Gestetner Company. The machine is being purchased to aid the Collective in producing leaflets and posters.

It operates by putting a leaflet or poster into the machine along with a blue sheet. The machine types the leaflet or poster on the blue sheet which is then mimeographed so it comes out perfectly.

The Collective will issue a policy statement concerning use of the electrostat by other groups as soon as the machine is purchased.

Also last night three collective members formed a committee for the dual purpose of studying which films should be purchased by the group and the handling of publicity for them.

The collective sponsors a film series that shows films Tuesday and Thursday nights in Herter Hall Auditorium.

Legislature to vote on student rights

By CINDY LAQUIDARA
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts State Legislature will vote next month on a bill which could open the door to concrete legislation for student bargaining rights.

The bill, the Study Commission on Collective Bargaining Bill, would establish a commission to study student rights in collective bargaining.

The Task Force on Legislative Research and Lobbying, of the Student Organizing Project, met last night to discuss support for the bill.

The vote on faculty unionization, which comes up in early December, would provide for faculty collective bargaining on such issues as the size of classes, and actual teaching hours. No student input in these decisions is presently provided for.

The UMass Undergraduate Student Senate is calling State Rep. James G. Collins (D-Amherst) to discuss the issue of student bargaining rights and other issues of importance to students at public institutions of higher education throughout the state. Plans are being made to include members from other state universities at the meeting, for the eventual creation of a powerful lobbying source.

The Student Senate Organizing Committee, in conjunction with the task force, discussed issues including student control over the Student Activities Tax Funds and over beneficiary trust funds, and legislation to increase the maximum of 24 per cent of state financial aid funds for state institutions.

Outing Club hopes for cabin

By JOHN ANTONELLI
Collegian Staff

A cabin for the UMass Outing Club has been a hopeful dream in the past, but it could be a reality in the near future.

The cabin site is in Bethlehem, New Hampshire, in the northern White Mountains. If purchased, use of the cabin would be open to the entire UMass community and others, with the Outing Club having priority.

The club estimates the cost of the cabin and the land it is on at $10,000. They have looked into individual costs of the cabin to get an idea of maximum costs.

The Wood Technology Department of UMass will donate all the wood that is needed.

The Outing Club's cabin committee has approached the UMass Undergraduate Student Senate about the possibility of receiving $9,000 from them. It is considering approaching the Graduate Student Senate for money as well.

In order to raise more money, it is possible the club will give lifetime cabin usage to donaters of $100. Other ideas are also being considered.

Letters are being sent to former members of the Outing Club in an effort to make their cabin plans known. A recent raffle netted very little profit. Most money-raising ideas would not net nearly enough, committee members indicated.

The cabin committee has consulted Legal Services regarding possible problems, such as buying land out of state, ownership and an official title, and taxes.

In addition, it has drawn up a general report to submit to the Student Senate next week. A final proposal must be submitted by February 1.

The Outing Club plans to keep the Senate up to date so their proposals will not be forgotten.

Outing Club President Robert Keating said that many colleges are owners of cabins, and a good number of them are state universities. He has written to other colleges about their cabins, but has not received replies.

It is difficult to compare costs with other college-owned cabins since some have been owned for decades and some may have been obtained in a different manner, he said.

Club members say a UMass cabin would be self-supporting and is a very feasible thing for students to put their money into. In terms of Student Activity Fees, cost would break down to approximately 50 cents per student.

The club will continue to investigate possible problem areas and will try to keep projected costs down as much as possible. In the meantime, they will circulate a petition on campus for support of the project.

Honors Program ruling effective with class of 77

By ALEXANDRA CONANT
Collegian Staff

Students enrolled in University Honors or in both University Honors and Departmental Honors may receive a waive of college and University core requirements, according to Lynn Santoro, assistant to the University Honors Program director.

Students who wish to graduate with the option of magna cum laude or summa cum laude must be enrolled in departmental honors, and meet the department's requirements, a ruling effective beginning with the class of 1977. Each departmental Honors Program has its own departmental requirements. Enrolling only in a departmental honors program does not waive a student of University core requirements.

A student enrolled in the University Honors Program must take one honors course for each semester enrolled in the program, with a minimum of six courses by graduation.

Students who wish to be admitted must submit a transcript which should reflect honors level work and an evaluation from a previously-taken Honors course, and must complete an interview with the director or associate director of the Honors Program.

Students in the Honors Program must maintain at least a 3.2 cum, concentrate in upper level work in their major department and maintain good evaluations of their work in their Honors courses.

A transfer student who wishes to enter the Honors program must take an Honors course during his-her first semester at UMass. According to Santoro, the evaluation from this course will be used, along with transcripts from the former school and an interview with either the director or associate director of the Honors Program to determine whether or not the student will be allowed into the Honors Program.

The Honors office has $1,000 to be used during the spring semester to support the research and writing of Senior Honors theses. The deadline for requesting these funds is the beginning of March. "We had requests for over $10,000 in support this semester, twice what was reported previously," said Santoro. "We were able to give $3,000 on these requests."

Students wishing more information about the University Honors Program should go to the Honors office in E-23 Machmer or call the office at 545-2483.

Students wishing more information on Departmental Honors should contact the Honors coordinator in their major departments or call the Honors office.

Older students feel slighted

By LAWRENCE HIRSHBERG
Collegian Staff

A group of older, non-traditional students feels most UMass teachers are not using them as the resources they are.

There is a "need to expand teachers' horizons" according to David Baillie, program coordinator for Counseling Assistance for Older Students.

John Hunt, representing the Academic Matters Council, said until a pending study is completed, the University cannot act on the problems of these older and non-traditional students.

These were among the conclusions at the third program of the Resource Network Student Affairs Speakers Series yesterday in the Campus Center.

The series, which meets on alternative weeks, brought together 40 people from the University to deal with the problems facing non-traditional students in the UMass community.

Judy David, coordintor of the Resource Network, defined a non-traditional student as one who enters college in any way other than directly from high school. Davis said there are 9,200 non-traditional students at UMass, forty per cent of the student body.

Getting students enrolled and supporting them once they are in school were among the issues discussed at yesterday's meeting. Most at the meeting agreed that very few administrators and counselors are adequately prepared to deal with the needs of non-traditional students.

One member of the discussion group said due to their wide range of career and living experiences, many older students are valuable resources to the classes they attend. The majority of the people present agreed that these potential resources are not used by many UMass professors.

From this agreement a decision was made that it is necessary to redefine the student-teacher relationship, thereby making better use of older and non-traditional students.

John Hunt, assistant provost for special programs, requested the group draw up a list of organizations and services that could be tapped for data on non-traditional students.

The Academic Matters Council is compiling a study on non-traditional students. Hunt said the study must be completed before any action will be taken by the University regarding non-traditional students.

Among those present were Dean Allen of Mental Health Services, Robert Phillips of the Community Development Center, Lynn Fox, outreach officer for the Veterans Affairs Office, and Julie Fata, CASIAC assistant dean.

The meeting was moderated by Charlotte Rahain from the School of Education.

If your overwrought mind cringes at the thought of another night glued to books and your nerves reject a bopping night at the Blue Wall, the Orchard Hill-Central Arts Council is offering you a break Thursday night.

They are sponsoring a poetry reading in Van Meter's main lounge Thursday at 8:00 p.m. Admission is free and munchies are available for a small donation.

Readings will be given by Diane Wald, Jamie Yates, Charles Koltz and Annie Carpenter. All are local, young poets who have published their work in a variety of newspapers and magazines.

The Orchard Hill — Central Arts Council has been recently formed by people living in the Orchard Hill-Central area to set up events that would benefit the area culturally. They strive for a relaxed, informal events which involve local talent, said Helen Schneider, a council member.

Later on in the year the Council is planning an open market and more poetry readings.

Atty. Collins, prosecutor for the Commonwealth, recommended guilty findings and $100 fines for each woman.

According to the guards' testimony, the four women who were tried took about $20 in items as follows: greeting cards, valued at $6.50; eye shadow and shoe polish, $5.70; a necklace and a pair of earrings, $4.99; and a pen and nail polish, $3.98.

A woman with another point of view said, "I have never felt that I have been treated differently."

"As soon as you become a professional you become a serious threat," said a woman in the discussion.

Goldhor said she felt that in the field of Zoology she wasn't treated different from men but on a higher post doctoral level discrimination was evident.

"I'm angry now," said Marianne Jahus, another woman at the meeting. "What can we do with our anger that's constructive? We need to reach out to men who are in the same position we are."

"You have to be emotionally strong. If you're not emotionally strong you should not go into the academic world," Goldhor said.

She told of an experiment where the same research paper was given to students with males' names and with females' names. The papers with males' names were rated higher.

Many doubts were voiced as "how can I get tenure in my department," "unless you are aggressive no one will listen to you," and "how do we say 'Treat us as equal graduate students' ".

Dr. Laurie Brown, assistant geology professor at UMass, said Affirmative Action puts a lot of pressure on the women that do get hired. She said, "One of the questions asked in an interview was 'Do you think you could get along in a department with 25 other males? You have to play pretty much by the established rules".

A "women in science" support group meets every Wednesday in the Campus Center at 3:00 p.m. The room will be listed on a bulletin in the Campus Center elevators.

Guess the weight of 190 marchers

By ROBERT DAVIDSON
Collegian Staff

What is red and white and black all over, has 380 legs, and was weighed here on the UMass campus last Saturday?

The UMass Marching Band. But the question still remains! How much do they weigh?

The Massachusetts Chapters of Kappa Kappa Psi (KKY) and Tau Beta Sigma (TBS), the national honorary band service fraternity and sorority, are sponsoring a raffle this week in order to raise funds to host the annual East Coast Convention of KKY and TBS next spring.

According to Susan Robash, president of TBS, each person interested in competing in the raffle must estimate the entire weight of the UMass Marching Band, in uniform, with instruments included.

The person with the closest estimation to the exact weight of the band will be the winner. A total of six gift certificate prizes from Amherst area merchants will be awarded. Gift certificates will range from $50 to $5 in value.

The UMass Marching Band consists of 190 people, including one director, one assistant director, one graduate assistant, one drum major, one announcer, nine twirlers, 16 flag bearers and 160 instrumentalists.

The tickets cost 25 cents each or five for $1, so come on, come all. Today could be your lucky day!

Speakers program aim is balance

By JIM GAGNE
Collegian Staff

The cinder blocks are barely visible behind the collection of well-known names and faces on the photos, posters, and press clippings taped to the wall. This is the Distinguished Visitors Program (DVP) office in the Student Union Building.

The names and faces belong to "distinguished visitors", brought to campus in what DVP Chairperson Ellyn Faber calls, a "constant effort to balance the interests of students."

The DVP is supported by a $1.50 per year fee paid through the Student Activities Tax Fund by all undergraduates. It uses this money to bring most of the "big-name" speakers that come to UMass, names like Dick Gregory, Angela Davis, Betty Freidan, and Daniel Schorr.

The DVP has recently been accused of being unresponsive to student interests, particularly in bringing former Black Panther Eldridge Cleaver to campus last month. Many blacks on campus opposed "wasting over $2,000 on an opportunist like Cleaver."

Faber denied these charges in an interview last week, saying, "We bring balanced programs." She added that anyone dissatisfied with the programming can submit a proposal in room 415 of the Student Union Building.

If that doesn't work, students are welcome to join DVP during the three-week membership drive in the Spring, she said. Twenty-five students have chosen the second alternative, automatically becoming members upon filling out an application. Faber said DVP members work hard, and warned "I don't like people to join just to get one speaker here."

Faber, a senior majoring in political science, joined DVP as a freshman, and moved up as other members left UMass. She was elected as chairperson last spring, a position that denies her a vote when speakers are selected.

An intern last fall with Mass. 9th Congressional District Rep. Joseph Moakley, and a former Undergraduate Student senator, Faber expressed "disappointment and surprise" over the response to "the voice of Looney-Tunes"-Mel Blanc, who recently drew an overflow crowd for his talk on cartoons.

Faber compared Blanc's visit to the poorly-attended Puerto Rican speakers week last spring.

"I would prefer more relevant programs even if the response is not as good." She said, "It is important for everyone to know what's going on in Puerto Rico," which is in its struggle to become an independent nation.

She said she is aware of the old paradox between what is good for people and what they like, and in keeping with her role as balancer said, "We have to keep students in mind even if they are apathetic."

DVP Vice-Chairperson John Kiley, also a political science major, said, "Mel Blanc showed that people want lighter speakers, but we're not going to become an entertainment agency."

DVP has set aside $5,000 of its remaining $21,000 for Martin Luther King week in April, and another $5,000 for Women's week in March.

"We're trying to reach all women, not just radical leftists or lesbians," said Faber. "The women's movement tends to alienate some women."

Roberta Tricomi, chairperson of public relations, said she will be heading an effort next semester to bring more women speakers to campus.

When asked how the DVP defines "distinguished visitor," Faber answered; "We look for anyone with an accomplishment, but we have no clear direction." She said DVP members are aware of this lack of direction, and plan to re-examine their purpose as a group.

Faber says she would like to work in government eventually as a coordinator. As preparation, DVP has taught her "how to deal with people."

She said there are "plenty of crises," such as trying to get speakers here on time. Her contacts with booking agencies in Boston and New York, who supply most of the speakers, have also prepared her for work as an agent, she says.

Vice-Chairperson Kiley, who has received "practical experience in dealing with bureaucracies," plans on going to law school. Treasurer Tony Mosca said he will pursue a Master of Business Administration degree.

Not all the benefits are career-oriented, though. Mosca says he likes the feeling of being involved, and "seeing what the speakers are really like."

Members usually have dinner with the speakers, often at their apartments. A member who initiates a speaker's appearance spends the entire day with that speaker.

Faber recalled her thrill in meeting columnist Art Buchwald at the airport in Connecticut, and talking politics with him. Asked what he has learned about the common qualities of all these famous figures, Kiley said they have all been extremely intelligent and well-versed on subjects in addition to their specialty.

Faber said she can't single out any common qualities in the speakers, but added she will know what to expect if she ever returns to UMass as a guest of the DVP.

Sonia Sanchez—guest at Black Festival

Poet Sonia Sanchez is just one of the featured guests scheduled for the upcoming "Revolutionary Cultural Festival" on Friday in the Lumumba Hut of New Africa House, from 8 to 1. The Bill Saxton Quartet will be at hand as well, making the first night of this festival, sponsored by the New World Center, Afro-Am Society and the Third World Center, a night of Black artistic and cultural expression.

This festival is being organized with the thought that Afrikan Culture in the United States is a Black people's culture and is an integral part of our struggle for national political independence.

A Black people's culture in the United States has to be transformed into revolutionary culture because it must become alive within the movement of the masses of exploited Black people for national liberation. It must alss serve to strengthen our people, to change our values from those of this decadent, white, capitalist society, to those values that will make our people strong and steadfast while struggling for independence and the creation of a new society.

The "Revolutionary Black Cultural Festival" will be an experience putting you closer in tuned to yourself and the people of color around you. Experience your innerself in this two-day phenomenon of positive Black vibrations.

What whites can do about racism

By ANGELA THOMAS

On Monday, November 8, an incident occurred in Butterfield Dorm which further illustrated the problems of racism which exist on this campus. A group of students were watching "Gone With the Wind" on television when another group of black students entered the dorm. In passing the television room, they stopped and began to discuss the racist nature of the film and its effect on people watching it.

Some of the students in the television room joined in the discussion, add others tried to listen more closely to the movie. The black students were first asked, and then told to keep quiet or move down the hall by several students in the room, most of whom were white.

Finally, a white male in the room yelled, "Will you people please keep quiet!" At this point, a black male who had been sitting quietly during the discussion watching the movie, jumped up in rage at the use of the phrase "you people" in this situation. He went toward the man who had made the comment but was prevented from reaching him by barriers in the room. A white women then told him that if he was going to fight, to go somewhere else. Full of rage and frustration, the black man turned to her and hit her.

A lot of dynamics were in operation in this incident. The black man was incorrect for responding to his anger by hitting the woman, and he apologized later to her. At the same time, an overriding issue is the lack of racial awareness and sensitivity of the individuals who continued to tell the black students to shut up. They were unable to grasp the significance of the content of the discussion about racism and how their reaction to the students intensified the problem. A group of black students were discussing racism, stereotypes, and the inbalance of power, and, at the same time, they were being told to shut up and move on, mostly by white students who did feel that their conversation was appropriate at that time.

The next night a meeting was held to clarify issues and give people a chance to express their feelings. Some of the white students expressed that they learned a lot from this meeting. Others felt that it was a waste of time. Many people refused to acknowledge the racial content of the incident and only wanted to review it as one group watching television and another group disturbing them.

Wake up everybody! How many incidents will it take to convince people that UMass students are not exempt from the racism which pervades the country as a whole. Any serious person interested in dealing with these problems must make a conscious effort to do something to change the negative trend.

Interesting to note, last Sunday, when "Sounder" was on television, only a small number of students came to watch it, in contrast to the crowd drawn by "Gone With The Wind" for two nights.

All white students who are serious about working against racism, the basic contradiction in this society, must take the initiative to seek our alternative films and experiences which will enlighten them. They must not wait for black students to initiate these programs and must begin to do so themselves.

Gilmore attempts death by overdose

SALT LAKE CITY [UPI] — Killer Gary Gilmore, thwarted in his demands to die before a firing squad, and his fiancee Nicole Barrett took overdoses of sleeping pills yesterday in an unsuccessful attempt to carry out a suicidal pact.

Gilmore, whose scheduled execution Monday was stayed by Utah's governor, swallowed "10 to 20" Seconal tablets in his State Prison cell. He was hospitalized in serious condition, but doctors predicted "he will recover."

Barrett, a 20-year-old divorcee who gulped two vials of sleeping pills and then lay down on a couch in her Springville home clutching a picture of Gilmore to her chest, was in critical and comatose condition.

The petite divorcee and mother of two young children last week told Tamara Smith, a reporter for the Salt Lake City Desert News, that she intended "to go with" Gilmore when he was executed. She said Gilmore asked her "to go with him."

Both Gilmore and Barrett left notes.

Gilmore's said: "Leave my property to my mother."

Authorities said Barrett left two personal letters "similar to suicide notes" inside sealed envelopes. They did not disclose their details.

The double suicide attempt forced postponement of Gilmore's scheduled appearance today before the Utah Board of Pardons, which must decide whether to commute his sentence or let the execution go ahead.

A board spokesman said the case will probably be considered on Dec. 8 — two days before a Texas convict who also wants to be executed is scheduled to die in the electric chair.

In a copyrighted story in the Deseret News, Smith said Gilmore's girl friend said she and the killer talked about suicide extensively and that he gave her strength and helped her overcome her fears of dying.

Chile releases political prisoners

SANTIAGO, Chile [UPI] — The military government yesterday announced the release of more than 300 political prisoners — one day after President-elect Jimmy Carter said he might cut U.S. aid to Chile if it did not respect human rights.

The Chilean announcement also said it will free an imprisoned Communist leader if the Soviet Union cancels a scientist's prison sentence.

The United States has warned Chile repeatedly this year that future U.S. aid depends on the government's respect for human rights, and Carter said Monday he would consider cutting foreign aid to Chile if it did not protect basic human rights.

The U.N. General Assembly was expected to vote its condemnation of Chile during the next week on the same human rights issue.

Gen. Hernan Bejares, the government's secretary general, said all persons held under Chile's state-of-siege laws will be released immediately, except for 20 prisoners of "special dangerousness" who will be freed only if they agree to go into exile.

Government sources said 323 persons are in jail for violating state-of-siege laws, which allow military authorities to make arrests for virtually any political activities considered illegal.

Springfield man found innocent

NORTHAMPTON [AP] — An innocent verdict was ordered yesterday for a convict accused of aiding the prison escape of Robert J. Dussault, who has admitted taking part in a $3 million Rhode Island robbery following his getaway.

Francesco G. Campeti, 37, of Springfield, was ordered acquitted on charges that he was an accessory to Dussault's July, 1975 escape from the custody of Franklin County authorities.

Superior Court Judge John F. Moriarty ruled the government had not proved Campiti had criminal intent to help Dussault. Moriarty granted a defense motion for a directed verdict that was entered Monday after the prosecution completed its case.

Dussault, 35, of Lowell, has testified in other proceedings that he was the leader of the Bonded Vault Co. robbery in Providence, R.I. The heist of millions in cash and valuables from safety deposit boxes occurred less than a month after his disappearance from Massachusetts.

Dussault, testified at Campiti's trial last week that Campiti agreed to allow him to go on an unauthorized trip to Boston, accompanied by a Franklin County Jail guard, Campiti and a third inmate.

Death toll peaks

SALISBURY, Rhodesia [UPI] — Rhodesia yesterday reported 29 black guerrillas killed in the past 24 hours, bringing to 140 the number killed in the past two weeks — the highest death toll since the border war began nearly four years ago.

A security forces communique said a total of 34 persons were killed over the past 24 hours, including a white farmer, in escalating war that broke out in December of 1972.

In a report from Dar Es Salaam, Tanzania, the government of neighboring Mozambique said yesterday that the Rhodesian air force lost seven planes but captured a Mozambican army base in a cross-border raid.

The Mozambique Information agency said the Rhodesians launched the attack last Thursday at Mavue near the Rhodesian border in Gaza province, using jets, propeller-driven bombers and helicopters and that the fighting was still going on as of Monday.

The Rhodesia report said that the five others killed besides the guerrillas included a 21-year-old black policeman who was killed "in action" and a 28-year-old white civilian who "was murdered by terrorists at his farm south of Victoria Falls" in northwestern Rhodesia.

The communique said security forces "investigating a terrorist presence" shot to death two young blacks who ignored an order to halt as well as a young black man who violated the dusk-to-dawn curfew imposed on blacks in war zones.

News in Brief

Insurance shopping

BOSTON [AP] — Many automobile insurers in Massachusetts want large-scale rate increases for 1977, according to requests filed yesterday with the state Insurance Department.

For the first time, casualty companies are competing for auto business in Massachusetts and the firms filed separate, competitive rates so consumers can shop around.

The rates proposed for 1977 reflect increases ranging from 1 per cent to 30 per cent on a statewide basis.

Syrians in Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon [UPI] — Syrian soldiers, the first occupation force in Beirut since U.S. Marines stormed ashore 18 years ago, yesterday occupied radio and television stations, government ministries and utility offices in a sweep through the war-ravaged capital to restore order.

The Syrian forces set up 52 checkpoints around the capital and formed an antikidnaping squad to smash the reign of terror that has ruled the streets of Beirut for 19 months of Christian-Moslem civil war.

All members of the police forces and government administrations were ordered to report to work by Nov. 26.

King file destroyed

WASHINGTON [AP] — A lawyer for the House committee probing the murder of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., said yesterday that documents relating to the case have been destroyed since the investigation began.

Chief Counsel Richard A. Sprague said he had not been officially notified of the destruction but said he had learned of it "from an individual who has interviewed other people."

Sprague said the documents "would have been in the possession of law enforcement authorities" and were "relevant to our investigation."

"I have been advised that the destruction has taken place since it was announced in September that this committee would be investigating" the murders of King and President John F. Kennedy, he said.

Quebec elects premier

MONTREAL [UPI] — Rene Levesque, swept to power as premier-elect of the province of Quebec despite his plans for Quebec's secession from Canada, insisted yesterday he would move ahead with plans for a referendum on separation.

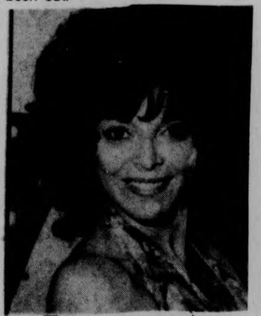
But in London, British government officials said a move by Quebec to secede from Canada might take years because it would need an act of the British Parliament and the process would be so long and complicated.

And in Ottawa, Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau warned that Levesque and his victorious Parti Quebecois had received only "a mandate to govern the province and not to separate from the rest of Canada."

Murderer misses one

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — Vaughn Greenwood, charged with being the "Skid Row Slasher," attacked another lonely man six weeks before a rampage of nine slayings but the victim in that case got away, the jury was told yesterday at Greenwood's murder trial.

Joseph R. Nolan pointed to Greenwood in the courtroom as the man he found standing over his bed with two large knives in each hand on the night of Oct. 19, 1974. Nolan said blood was flowing down his chest and he realized his throat had been cut.



NEW YORK (UPI) — Fanne Foxe, the "Argentine firecracker" whose relationship with former Rep. Wilbur Mills led to his downfall from power, took an overdose of valium yesterday "to sleep a long time," her agent said.

Bicentennial tourists — where were you?

BOSTON [AP[— The flood of tourists expected in Massachusetts for 1976 bicentennial activities turned out to be a trickle.

State officials say last summer's tourism was only 1 per cent greater throughout the commonwealth than in 1975.

A report from the Massachusetts Bicentennial Commission said "the staggering tourist figures that were projected for 1976 just never became a reality."

Advance estimates by several consultants were that tourism would double in the Bicentennial year. In fact, tourism did increase by 18 per cent from 1974 to 1975 but then levelled off.

"By the time people started getting into the Bicentennial, the main attraction in 1976 was in Philadelphia," said Susan E. Schruth, executive director of the state Bicentennial commission.

The agency based its findings on summertime surveys of 46 visitor attractions throughout the state.

The commission did not focus on reasons why tourism failed to meet projections. But it did record complaints from managers of tourist attractions, who said "the legislature did not properly support those attractions."

Many tourists apparently got lost because the managers also said visitors "need both better highway directional signing and more state road maps."

Some parts of Massachusetts did fare better than others, however.

Tourism in western Massachusetts increased 22 per cent this year and 41 per cent from 1973 to 1976.

Jamie's off to heaven

SHERMAN, Tex. [UPI] — Five-year-old Jamie Thomas was buried yesterday clutching two stuffed tigers — one for himself and one for his hospital playmate he hoped to meet in heaven.

Jamie, the oldest of three children in his home in this north Texas City, died Saturday of Leukemia.

"We told him that when he died there would be no pain, no harm, no hurt and that he could play all the time," his mother said.

He was buried yesterday in a white, flower bedecked casket following a brief service service attended by two dozen relatives and their friends.

His stepmother, mechanic Harold Karr, and his mother, a parttime cosmetics saleswoman, told Jamie he was going to die and let him pick out the headstone decorating his grave in Akers Cemetery.

"He told us he was scared but we tried to make him look forward to his death; to make it as rosy as possible," Karr said.

The child had been in almost constant pain just before he died and had to be kept drugged. Two hours before his death he watched his parents build a snowman.

Jamie asked to be buried with his favorite toy — a stuffed tiger he called "Tiger." He asked for a second stuffed animal to take to his friend, Ronnie, who died of leukemia two weeks ago.

The Karrs and two female friends, accompanied by another friend on an acoustic guitar, sang a final eulogy to Jamie — an untitled song composed by Karr:

"Most fathers want their sons to grow up to be doctors, lawyers and the like;

"I just want my son to grow up to ride a bike ...

"The doctors have said they may find a cure tomorrow,
"But if our son dies today will that help our sorrow?"

MACKINAC ISLAND, Mich. — Architect Ricard Bos has problems "you wouldn't believe" trying to keep the Grand Hotel from tilting. Bos discovered that the 172-foot long east wing of the tourist attraction was leaning three years ago while he was making repairs to the old building. Now he has crews racing to halt the tilt before the spring tourist season. But the project has hit one delay after another because of this island's inaccessibility and unique traditions (UPI)

Researchers focus on facial features

STILLWATER, Okla. [UPI] — The shapes and sizes of noses and mouths are subjects of a three-year study by Prof. John McCullers and graduate students at Oklahoma State University.

They are studying why some facial features are considered pretty and others ugly and the effect the nation's concepts of physical attractiveness have on development of minority group children.

"We chose noses and mouths for our research because they differ widely between various ethnic groups and are relatively hard to change," McCullers said. "Hair styles, facial expressions and skin blemishs tend to be temporary and can be changed fairly easily."

McCullers said the research was important because physical attractiveness is related to perception and judgment of other persons.

"Our cultural idea of facial attractiveness, perhaps dictated by the white society, may make it hard for minority groups to fit the general cultural model," he said.

"If minority groups have adopted a model they cannot easily fit, it becomes harder for them to conclude they are physically attractive."

The research began when McCullers' group wondered whether line drawings of faces of a pretty woman and an ugly woman seen in old testing materials might hold a key to understanding the basic of physical attraction.

Golden ager gardening for kids

SAN FRANCISCO [AP] — For some people, life at 84 means tending to quiet flower gardens. But octogenarian Ella Rigley, fresh from a stint as a VISTA volunteer, creates gardens of a different sort — fertile places where young children can grow and prosper.

She calls her latest "The Garden of Friendship for Little Folk." She designed the mini-park for children under five because "those little ones just didn't have any place to play."

One friend gave her 10 tons of sand for her last birthday, another a bunch of earthworms tied up with pink ribbon. And with a little persuasion, the Park and Recreation Commission pitched in as well.

But the hard work of establishing the new playground was just the latest in a series of personal crusades.

"I'm ancient," the spry New Englander admitted, but she added, "I've always been pretty active."

Rigley was somewhere in "the middle seventies" when she joined VISTA, the federal agency designed to bring help to the poor, after moving here in 1962 after her husband's death.

During a three-year tour, she helped organize a play school in a black community in South Carolina and also worked with migrant workers in Oregon.

BURLINGTON, Iowa — Kris Markham traded the casual attire of a college student for the overalls of a train crew member.

"I love it," the 19-year-old Galesburg, Ill., native said. "I like working outside. I think we have an important job." (UPI)

Mate search over

EAST ALTON, Ill [UPI] — After receiving more than 600 letters proposing marriage, Sue Spurrier says she has had enough.

She also has a boyfriend, but he wasn't a pen pal. She met him at a dance.

Spurrier, 28, is a British divorcee who advertised in the newspaper for an American husband so she and her two young children would not be deported.

News of her problem spread worldwide and the letters poured in. Now she doesn't need them anymore.

Her problems with immigration officials were settled when Reps. Melvin Price and Paul Findley of Illinois secured an extension for her stay in the United States.

Nessen furious

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Presidential Press Secretary Ron Nessen sharply restricted reporters' access to his office yesterday after an explosive run-in with some of them who were talking to Jimmy Carter's newly designated press secretary.

At one point in the angry exchange, Nessen threatened to call for White House security guards and later told them to bar any reporters seeking to come to his office without an appointment — not a requirement in the past.

Wish unfulfilled

ALAMEDA, Calif. [UPI] — A mother who could not cut through governmental red tape even with the aid of President Ford died of cancer yesterday without getting her last wish to see her son, who is in a Mexican prison.

Isabel Millard, 68, a retired teacher, died shortly before dawn in Alameda Hospital, and nurses said "she hung on to the end to the hope" that appeals from Ford and California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. would result in a one-day prison furlough for her son, Phillip, 32, a truck driver.

Now it's James

WASHINGTON [UPI — President-elect Carter prefers the first name Jimmy, but apparently that is too informal for the press office in the Ford White House.

Carter's given name is James Earl, but he has used Jimmy throughout his political career and on ballots for the presidential election.

Nonetheless, a routine announcement issued by the press office yesterday referred to him as James Carter.

Battle of Britain highlights IMF growing power

The plight of Great Britain — once the world's mightiest industrial nation, now a beggar in the global monetary market — has put into stark relief the burgeoning power of international financial institutions.

Britain, seeking $14 billion from the U.S. and the International Monetary Fund (IMF), may soon become the first industrialized Western nation to accept direct outside controls over monetary policy in exchange for loans to salvage her economy. Italy is expected to follow close behind.

The development signals increasing involvement for the U.S. in Britain's political and economic life, since the U.S. is the major contributor to the IMF, holding veto power over all IMF decisions.

Until now, such Faustian bargaining between debtor nations and the international money markets was confined to the less developed nations of the Third World. In recent years, the IMF has imposed strict controls over imports and public spending in debtor nations such as Argentina, South Korea and Zaire.

And last summer, a group of private U.S. banks agreed to bail Peru out of its economic doldrums, but only after receiving assurances that the government's left-wing policies would be reversed.

In Chile, the IMF successfully pressured the Christian Democratic government of the 1960s to reduce its proposed land reform program as a condition for a loan. During the socialist interlude of President Allende IMF loans to Chile dropped to just $80 million when Allende rejected IMF conditions, but they have since risen to close to half-a-billion dollars to the more cooperative military junta.

Now, with Britain and Italy joining the ranks of the world's beggars, the power and influence of the IMF — and through it, the U.S. and other powers — will extend to America's closest Western European allies. Significantly, Italy and Britain are also countries where political polarization is a major concern to U.S. policy makers.

According to some observers, the beginning of Britain's decline coincided with the creation of the IMF in the Bretton Woods agreement in 1944. That agreement replaced the pound with the dollar as the world's leading currency and set up the IMF to create stable exchange rates among the world's currencies.

Today, 130 member nations have contributed $21.2 billion to the IMF's principal borrowing fund — a pool from which they may borrow funds to shore up their own currency. Members may borrow up to 145 per cent of their contributions, but with each successive loan the IMF has the option of imposing stricter conditions on the borrower.

Since IMF decisions require 85 per cent approval and voting is in proportion to contribution, the U.S. — which contributes 20 per cent to the total — holds veto power over all decisions, including the kind of conditions attached to loans.

These conditions are designed to both guarantee the repayment of the loans and to assure the long-term revival of the borrower's economy.

Britain's latest bid — for $3.9 billion from the IMF and $10 billion from the U.S., Germany and other major trading partners — will exhaust the amount that it can borrow from the IMF. More important, it will lay Britain open to IMF direction of its economy, a situation that threatens to split the ruling Labour Party and topple the government.

Debate over the nature and extent of the IMF loan conditions — already the key political issue in Britain — will intensify during the next months as the IMF team visits London to decide what must be done.

In earlier efforts to appease foreign creditors, both Prime Minister James Callaghan and his predecessor, Harold Wilson, have moved the nominally socialist Labour Party toward fiscal conservatism and private enterprise. Late last year, Wilson — in a clear signal to the U.S. — bailed out the local Chrysler subsidiary with a package of loans, guarantees and credits.

Since then Callaghan has stepped up efforts to prove fiscal responsibility be getting the Trade Union Council (TUC) to agree to a second year of tight wage controls (limited to 4.5 per cent raises), despite an absolute decline in British workers' standards of living.

While freezing public spending and increasing aid to private industry, Callaghan is promising sizable budget cuts in the next three years.

However, the conservative policy of the Labour government has prompted a major split in the party, with the unions and the left leading the attack.

Though the unions helped design the so-called Social Contract that limited wage increases, they now fear that Callaghan will either volunteer or be forced by the IMF to extend his fiscal pruning to such cherished social welfare programs as cradle-to-grave health coverage.

At the Labour Party's annual conference in October, the left wing rejected Callaghan's spending-cut proposals and called for a completely different approach, including more spending for social programs and nationalization of the banks — a radical measure for the financial capital of the world.

Alan Fisher, head of the public employes' union, declared, "I would favor a seige economy, cutting us off from the rest of the world" by sharp limitations on imports and a return to free collective bargaining.

Labour Party treasurer Norman Atkinson, a left leader, told the assembly, "We can never satisfy the insatiable demands of those who are trying to lend us money."

The left proposal to restrict imports would, they say, solve the crippling balance of payments problem. And nationalization of banks and insurance companies would be aimed at increasing productive investment (in new factories, for instance), checking nonproductive speculative investment and stopping the flow of capital out of Britain.

At the opposite end of the political spectrum, Conservative Party leader Margaret Thatcher has called for more spending cuts and a brake on social programs. She warned the party faithful to be prepared for national elections at any moment in view of the antagonisms within the Labour Party.

The volatile British situation is of particular concern to the U.S., with $13.9 billion invested in Britain and annual exports amounting to $4.5 billion.

In determing what kind of loan conditions to impose on Britain, the IMF and U.S. policy makers will face two choices: either walk softly and work with the Labour Party moderates, or increase the pressure for fundamental changes and bigger spending cuts, a move that could well split the Labour Party and seat a new Conservative Party government.

While a Conservative government might well satisfy U.S. and IMF aims, it might also touch off new confrontations with the unions, leading to increased strikers and high wage demands.

SPECIAL DELIVERY

Injustice in dorm-life

To the Editor:

Recently, the counselor on our floor was fired. Our head of residence dismissed Donna for reasons unacceptable to the residents of the corridor, and totally against our wishes. In an attempt to keep Donna from being fired, we brought the matter to the attention of the Central Area Associate Area Director, who proved to be very diplomatic, but very ineffective.

So having lost our counselor through the grossly misused authority of our head of residence and the bureaucratic double-talk of the Associate Area Director, we had resolved to spend the remainder of the semester without the "supervision" of the floor counselor. One would thank that the head of residents of her house, and support this resolution. Such is not the case. Our head of residence is determined to select a replacement for Donna and have her begin work within the next two weeks. Since Donna was living in a double room, and since her replacement will require a single, someone on our floor is going to be forced to leave in order to accommodate the incoming, unwanted counselor.

We feel that it is unreasonable and unfair [especially in this situation] to expect any student to sacrifice her room, disrupt her psychological well-being, and orient herself to a new roommate, with a mere four weeks remaining in the semester. Not surprisingly, the head of residence, and the Associate Area Director feel that we should be "mature" enough to accept this injustice with a smile, and all but vie for the privilege of giving up our rooms.

It is difficult to believe that this decision too, will be left to the arbitrary judgement of one individual, while the people who will be most affected, have no say at all. There must be someone at this university who has authority over a head of residence, and over an Associate Area Director, who could look at this problem with an open mind and help us to arrive at a mutually agreeable solution. If such a person exists, please contact: Susan Sabia, 329 Van Meter South, 546-1253, and hurry!

"In California Mexican farm workers are no longer allowed to use the short-handled hoes they have used for generations; now they are required to use long-handled American-type hoes. This is not because the workers or the farmers want the change: but apparently because the city people, driving by, feel more comfortable watching the workers using the kind of hoes that look good through car windows.

Where have you gone, Joe?

Mine has been a life of shattered illusions. Daily I reel from the news of a myth exploded, a hero exposed. Every year brings more shock than the last. On every page, at every turn something happens anew, chipping at the granite of my boundless faith. I have become a staggering six-foot hunk of talking putty and all because of shattered illusions. Over the years they have been numerous. Here are just a few.

I suffer from caffeine fits when I see Joltin' Joe Dimaggio shed his baseball mantle for that of Mr. Coffee. Say it ain't so Joe and shave off that silly moustache. Freddie Lynn who plays for the love of the game, who would rather play baseball than eat, who would rather score a run than score. Huh.

During the football season I dream of being a wide receiver. Nothing else. For years I followed the exploits of one of football's best — flashy, skilled, great — Lance Rentzel. Three years ago Lance Rentzel was arrested for exposing himself to a ten-year old girl. At the time he was married to Joey Heatherton. I have yet to recover.

The acting world has brought its share of shattered illusions too. Earlier this year my cotton candy hero Buffy OD'd. For days I asked myself how Mr. French would have broken the news to Uncle Bill. Perhaps "Sir, Buffy has joined her mother." He had that discreet way about him. Watching McMillan and Wife one night over the summer, my brother came in the room and informed me that Rock Hudson was gay. Now don't get me wrong some of my best friends are ... oops. Tony Curtis scored a major triumph in Cat on a Hot Tin Roof. He was excellent. I admired him. Tony also did several anti-smoking commercials. "It's a matter of life and breath" he warned us plaintively. I gave up smoking. Six months later Tony Curtis was busted for possession of marijuana. I was crushed.

The advice columnists have produced their share of shattered illusions. Last year Ann Landers, that Mid-Western spieler of medicinal prose for broken households was divorced. Her husband traded in a forty for a twenty. And then there is Amy Vanderbilt, America's pillar of properness who jumped on people for eating chicken with their fingers, and then jumped, period, eight stories to her death.

Pre-Thanksgiving blues

Thanksgiving is coming. So are exams, papers, course-selection, and finals. Tempers are short, and getting shorter; time is precious, and becoming more valuable every day; relaxation is something you did once upon a time when you could afford to.

With the cold weather and the emphasis on studying, it's too much trouble to throw on anything other than a pair of jeans. You wish that they were clean, but there's just no time to do the laundry, no money until you get the next check from home; so you're sweating it out.

No money and no late night pizza, ice cream or sub sandwich, to ease the pain of studying. With the weight you lose, the dirty jeans begin to hang on you. They go well with the dark circles under your eyes. Men are beginning to grow "it's too much of a pain to shave, especially in winter" beards and women who usually defuzz once a week are hiding under those jeans and sweaters.

Parties disappear under an avalanche of work; nobody has the time or the patience to organize one. Friends get lost in the shuffle; you keep meaning to go see them, but somehow when there's any spare time, all you want to do is sleep. Spare time gets even scarcer when three of your professors realize that they need an extra grade, and assign a last minute research paper. Then, at the next class, they have the nerve to comment that everyone seems to be looking a little tired and run down. You go to bed at three or four, and set the alarm for seven or eight.

It is an endless grind, with no relief, except for the much-looked-forward-to Thanksgiving vacation, which isn't really a vacation at all, just some time off to line up a job for intersession, over stuff yourself on turkey, and try to catch up on sleep. You can watch the parades and the games on T.V., the way you used to do B.C.M. (before college madness) and wonder if you filled out your pre-registration form correctly. There is no rest for the weary.

Somewhere on campus, at least one poor overworked person will succumb to the pressure, and breakdown. Somewhere, some professor will lose a research term paper, and tell the student he'll-she'll have to do it over again. Needless to say, the student won't have a carbon copy, and will have thrown out the original. Somewhere, someone will oversleep the last exam of the semester; someone will miss the class in which the re-scheduled final time and room are announced. Aggravation, grief, sleepless nights, wondering if it's all worth it.

But after the last final, when the suitcases are packed, and the stereo is dismantled and ready to go, it doesn't matter anymore. You're going home; if you're lucky to a job. More aggravation. So much for the fallacy of the winter vacation.

Stop the breaks

By ELIZABETH S. KENT
Collegian Staff

Four UMass students were arraigned and four others were given continuances yesterday at the Hampshire County District Court Hourse. I am reasonably certain that the four arraigned students will also be given continuances.

It is time that the court system stopped giving UMass students breaks. It is time for students to be found guilty of crimes which they admit to committing, to be given fines, and in extreme cases, to be given jail sentences and most importantly to be given police records.

Students at UMass are usually 17 years of age or older. By this time in our lives, we should know that there are certain things which society does not approve of, and, in the case of theft from the University Store, society is correct in its value judgment.

I realize that people commit errors in judgment; college students, adults, parents, even legislators of late. I am not saying that people should be perfect, yet everyone knows that shoplifting is wrong.

The items usually stolen are what are normally considered luxury items, such as make-up, records, posters, and greeting cards. If a student cannot afford to buy these items, perhaps he-she can do without them. If the items are necessities, there are state agencies designed to ensure that people can have these items. There are state agencies which distribute food stamps so that people can eat, there are also agencies which supply moneys to pay for housing and clothing. There is no necessity to steal anything as anyone can obtain money to purchase the desired items.

The items taken are usually luxuries. I do without things that I would like to have and I feel that other people can do so too. If you cannot do the same, file for aid. Don't steal.

Judges Ryan and Morse, who hear the cases of UMass shoplifters, should give students a police record. Sure, the kids who wind up with the records are going to be screwed as far as their futures go, but an example has to be set.

Obviously, giving continuances to the students has not helped the situation. The judges have been giving continuances for several years now to UMass students and shoplifting continues to occur at the school store. According to Winthrop Cummings, general manager at the store, shoplifting declines for a brief period after the publication of an article in the Collegian regarding students going to court for it. Yet, inevitably I might add, it rises again after a period of some weeks.

Shoplifting has got to stop. It should have stopped some time ago, rather it should have been stopped some time ago, as it seems that some students do not completely realize, or simply choose to ignore, the possible consequences of shoplifting, (more accurately known as larceny under $100).

As I see it police records are fast becoming the only way to dissuade would-be shoplifters.

Yes, I guess that I am a little hard-boiled about whether students should get police records for shoplifting. I think that you would be too if, yesterday, after hearing the students given continuances, you had walked out of the courtroom and heard and saw one of those students laughing. She might have been laughing out of relief or because something had been put over on the legal system in America, but I felt that she was laughing at my integrity, for I had sat through the court proceedings hoping that each student there would be given a break. You see, I too have made mistakes, some large and some not so large. I have been given second chances each time, yet my mistakes only hurt me. The mistakes of each shoplifter hurt everyone by raising prices at the store. Cummings said that the store expends over $10,000 per year to prevent shoplifting.

Distorted interview

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter as a reaction to an article that appeared in the Collegian two weeks ago. The article was written about the UMass Chorale and derived its content from an interview taken on 28 October 76. The article completely distorted the interview and edited it in such a way as to make the UMass Chorale seem like a riotous, "drink a few beers with the boys" type of group. Anyone involved with the group knows this to be a fallacy.

While the Chorale does have social activities, these are confined to times completely separate from rehearsals. The group works diligently for 6 1-2 hours each week to produce the quality of music for which it is well known. This excellence has enabled the Chorale to tour Europoe three times, in 1970 and 1974, and last summer, in a three-week tour of Romania. These are not the kind of credentials many organizations can boast in their records.

This year, the Chorale is striving for new horizons. Preparation has begun for a concert to be performed on 3 April 1977 in Lincoln Center, New York City for a national television audience. This concert is a performance of Hector Berlioz' Requiem which is being put on in conjunction with several colleges of this area. Next semester, while finalizing preparations for the Requiem, the group will begin preparing for a Spring tour of the Mid-Western USA.

A final outrage in the article was the frequent quoting attributed to Dr. Richard du Bois, the Chorale's conductor. He was unable to be present at the interview, which was subsequently handled by the group's manager and publicity manager. The article put the Chorale in a very poor light and made it appear as if Dr. du Bois was directing the group for fun and games. This is entirely false; Dr. du Bois has directed the Chorale for 11 years and he built the pride the group now has. He is totally dedicated to the group and was unduly offended by the article.

Planet Earth in jeopardy but someone's here to help

To the Editor:

"Due to proliferation of nuclear fission processes and the poor management and dangerous by-products thereof, life on planet Earth is in jeopardy. We must send a contingent there to help its inhabitants see their insanity so that they may survive.

Friend — indeed, all those who read this letter — we assert that a message such as this is not an impossibility in some nearby galaxy's federation command post. In fact, we come from such a place ourselves. By the compassionate concern of our Directors, we are in the area to save you from yourselves.

As you may know, we will make our presence known on a mass level within the year. As for now, however, we are watching out for those of you who we can count on to help us out in our transformative work.

Part of the work which is necessary is the termination of various forms of institutionalized technology. Among these are nuclear power plants. We support the activities, in your area, of the Hampshire County Alternative Energy Coalition, and urge all of you who are concerned with the problems of nuclear power plants to "rally around" the cause, and make yourselves known to this group.

University summer session course listing

The UMass Summer Session for 1977 will consist of two, six-week sessions. The first session begins on May 25 (evening classes begin on the 24th) and concludes on July 6. The second six-week session begins on July 11 and ends on August 18.

Day classes will, in most cases, meet each day for one and one-half hours during the morning. Most evening classes will meet for three nights a week, excluding Fridays, with each meeting lasting for two and one-half hours.

Service fees for student activities, health services, and Campus Center amortization will continue to be charged on a per-week basis. At the present time, no increase in service fees are anticipated. Course fees for the upcoming Summer Session will remain the same as in 1976: $25 per undergraduate credit and $40 per graduate credit.

The UMass Summer Session offers students the opportunity to make up class work, take electives not available during the rest of the year, and accelerate progress toward graduation.

Over 250 courses will be offered. It is anticipated that most academic departments will schedule a variety of courses; however, at the present time, the listing is tentative. The following list of courses is intended to serve as a guide to students who wish to plan their Spring semester based on what courses are expected to be available during the Summer Session. Catalogs containing detailed course and registration information and mail-registration forms should be available on campus by the beginning of April.

I indicates courses offered during the first six-week session.

II indicates courses offered during the second six-week session.

Miami court to determine how woman really died

MIAMI [AP] — When did the 24-year-old mother of four die — when she suffered cardiac arrest after apparently being electrocuted by a defective refrigerator or when he neck was broken as the ambulance rushing her to the hospital collided with a car?

That's the question facing Dade County medical officials in the case of Sara Norris.

Mrs. Norris was pronounced dead after the ambulance collided with a car driven by Sergio Gonzalez, 56. He also died in the accident. Ambulance driver Robert Briley and four others riding in the rescue vehicle were injured.

Dr. Ronald Wright, Dade County deputy medical examiner, said the question is whether Mrs. Norris was technically alive when the accident occurred. "It boils down to what being alive is," said Wright.

The answer will be important because her family filed a $3 million damage suit Monday against the Randall-Eastern Ambulance Service, Briley and the Econo-Way Exterminating Co, which owned the car involved in the accident.

Officials said Mrs. Norris was in cardiac arrest with no pulse when paramedics arrived at her home. Wright said he believes that her heart stopped after she suffered an electrical shock from a defective refrigerator.

The rescue workers were able to restore some signs of life as the ambulance carried the woman to a hospital, officials said. But her neck was broken when the ambulance overturned.

Cycle co-op meeting

The Motorcycle Co-op will hold its first meeting of the semester tomorrow at 3:00 p.m. in room 801 of the Campus Center.

In the past, the co-op had provided members with savings of up to 50 per cent on the cost of motorcycle parts as well as counseling and assistance with reapirs on members' bikes.

The meeting will attempt to find ways by which co-op activity can be increased.

Feather your nest and 'fly united'

By ROB HENEREY

If we want to fly united, high and free as eagles (Scorpio), we've got to be as peacefully strong as an ox (Taurus), as confidently self-expressive as a lion (Leo), and as independently truthful as an honest man (Aquarius). But if we've feathered our nest with weakness, cowardice, or deception we may be finding it infested with angry scorpions.

Together, Taurus, Leo, Scorpio and Aquarius, are the power centers of the Zodiac, the cornerstones on which we build our lives. Between now and tomorrow, during the night, Earth will line up exactly between the two biggest things in the Solar System, the Sun, which is in Scorpio, and Jupiter, which is in Taurus. We could draw a straight line going through all three points.

Jupiter is the planet of expansion, but its relative motion right now is backward, or 'retrograde', in the Zodiac, signifying that to expand now we've got to turn inwards to find the faith that it's all worthwhile. Since it's in Taurus, the sign of solid earthy practicality, our urge is to find an inner faith in, and commitment to, persevering hard work to get our earthy side together.

The question now is, how much do our partnerships reflect an equal faith, an equal commitment, an equal willingness to sacrifice? The Sun, our symbolic purpose, is in the emotionally-charged partnership-productivity Sign of Scorpio.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Wednesday, November 17 — Born today, you have marvelous self-control. No matter how angry you become — or how overflowing with joy; no matter how much you feel like laughing -- or crying; you know how to put the lid on your emotions so that they are known to no one but you. Such control is an excellent thing -- so long as you do not employ it to the point of becoming unable to express emotion even when you want to. For there is every possibility that you could ultimately cease to feel, cease to respond to what goes on about you, if you overindulge in your great talent for "playing it cool."

A retiring individual, you make every effort to present yourself to others in such a light that it would not occur to anyone to ask personal questions of you. You do not invite confidences from others any more than you offer to share confidences of your own. Rather, you enjoy remaining in the background of any social occasion, taking in all that is said, basking in the convivial warmth of others' presence, but rarely adding flame to the social fire through conversation of your own or even through an enlivening response to that of others.

All of which is not to say that you are either dull or uninspiring or uninspired. It it merely to say that you are quiet, introspective, generally self-oriented, and usually the object of curiosity, often of concern, where others are involved.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — A single move suggesting an amorous motive could land you in considerable trouble today. Try to appear completely objective.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Temper justice with mercy today as you go about the business of putting the blame where it belongs. Fault finding will be punished.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Fears that a crime may have been committed prove groundless before the day is out. Don't expect others to jump into any breach.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — The reasoning of one who is in a position to judge you may not be as stable as you would hope. Nevertheless, the opinion must stand.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — The authority of another over you should diminish by day's end. If you are wise, you will go about your business carefully before noon.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — The solution to your difficulties on the home front lies in your ability to make amends where younger family members are concerned.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — There must be something beyond good will to keep you in the good graces of another at this time. Seek to perform at least one good deed.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Transcend earthly experience today and take your cue from those experiences that bring you into contact with an inner reality.

Hall of Famer Bob Lemon tries on for size the new cap he will be wearing next season as he signed a contract yesterday to manage Bill Veeck's hapless Chicago White Sox. (UPI)

Veeck hires Lemon as new Chisox boss

CHICAGO [UPI] — Bill Veeck reached back into his old Cleveland Indians' organization Tuesday to appoint hall of fame pitcher Bob Lemon the new manager of his Chicago White Sox.

Lemon, 56, a coach with the American League's pennant-winning Yankees last season, will replace Paul Richards, 68, who managed the White Sox to a last place finish in the American League West. Richards will remain with the White Sox as a consultant.

Veeck, who has been in Illinois Masonic Hospital for two weeks, first with flu and then awaiting surgery on his neck, assembled newsmen, team officials and Lemon in a hospital corridor for the announcement.

Lemon was seven times a 20-game winner with the Indians in the late 1940s and 1950s, playing for Lou Boudreau as manager and Veeck as team president. A converted third baseman, Lemon won one world series game in 1948 against the Boston Braves and lost two to the New York Giants in their 1954 sweep. He managed the Kansas City Royals from 1970-72 in his only previous experience in the top field job.

"Lemon did an extremely creditable job with the Yankees, and I feel he'll prove to be the manager we need," said Veeck, wearing a hospital robe. "We got permission from the Yankees to talk to him. He's a 24-hour-a-day fellow and I feel we are fortunate to have him as a manager."

Lemon said he was first contacted by the Whiie Sox only a week ago. Negotiations were conducted by Veeck's assistant, Roland Hemond, until Monday night when Lemon came to Chicago without fanfare.

"We spent a riotous evening — taking pills," Veeck said.

Taking note of the secret negotiations, Lemon said, "the way I got up to see Veeck reminded me when I was a player and you would sneak and hide from Lou Boudreau."

Veeck said he would like to sign as many as two of the current free agent players for the White Sox, who need a home run hitter and some more pitchers.

"I'd like to have any of them," said Lemon. "I am very happy with the young arms we have and I think we could field a pretty good young ball club.

Mets sign Matlack

NEW YORK [UPI] — Left-hander Jon Matlack signed a three-year contract with the New York Mets Tuesday, becoming the fourth $100,000 pitcher on the club's staff.

Matlack won a career high 17 games this past season and posted a 2.95 earned run average. In addition, he tied with San Francisco's John Montefusco for the National League lead in shutouts — six.

Although terms of Matlack's contract were not revealed, it was believed the 26-year-old hurler was given a substantial raise to the $140,000 area. He previously was paid about $75,000.

In Boston's 'Combat Zone'

Harvard footballers stabbed

BOSTON [UPI] — Two members of the Harvard University football team were stabbed early today in Boston's sleezy "Combat Zone" adult entertainment section.

One of the victims, Andrew Puopolo, 21, a starting player, "was brought back to life" at New England Medical Center. He had been stabbed in the heart following an incident with a prostitute. He was reported in critical condition today.

The other player, Thomas Lincoln, 23, was stabbed in the abdomen. He was reported in good condition at Massachusetts General Hospital.

Thomas Lincoln

Three men were arrested minutes after the 2:15 a.m. incident and were arraigned in Boston Municipal court.

Police said Puopolo and Lincoln went to the Combat Zone with a group of other athletes following the team's annual football banquet at the Harvard Club. According to police spokesman Norman Halliday, they had just left an establishment called the "Naked Eye" when they were confronted by three prostitutes who asked them "if they wanted to have a good time."

Halliday said at least one of the prostitutes got into the van in which the players had driven into Boston.

According to Halliday they declined the prostitute's advances. Police said when she left the van one of the players discovered that his wallet was missing.

According to Halliday, a black man came to the defense of the prostitute when Lincoln and Puopolo started pressing the woman to return the wallet.

"When that man came to the whore's defense the two guys figured it wasn't worth the fight. So they got in their car," Halliday said.

Police said Puopolo and Lincoln spotted the prostitute again and that Lincoln got out of the car and chased her along Boylston and Tremont Streets. "That's when he was stabbed," Halliday said.

"By that time several pimps were rocking the car back and forth and it was somewhere in there that the other fellow (Puopolo) was stabbed."

Andrew Puopolo

Halliday said Puopolo was pronounced dead at the New England Medical Center but was "miraculously brought back to life."

Those arrested were identified as: Leon Easterling, 41, Joseph Soares, 33, and Richard Allen, 36, all of Boston and charged with assault and battery with a deadly weapon.

Spurs obtain Calvin

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. [UPI] — The San Antonio Spurs announced Tuesday they have obtained guard Mack Calvin from the Los Angeles Lakers in a trade designed to strengthen a backcourt crippled by early season injuries.

A team spokesman said San Antonio gave up its No. 1 draft choice and "future considerations" to the Lakers in return for Calvin.

Calvin, a 6-0, 175-pounder, is a seven-year veteran who played his college basketball at the University of Southern California. He played with five ABA teams during his career and went to Los Angeles as a free agent last summer when the league merged with the NBA.

To make room for Calvin, the Spurs shifted No. 1 guard James Silas, who underwent surgery for a cartilage tear in his knee Monday, to the injured reserve list.

Earlier, the Spurs signed guard Louie Nelson, who had been cut by the New Orleans Jazz.

Besides Silas' problems, reserve guards George Karl, who had a knee operation, and Mike D'Antoni, who is on crutches with an ankle injury, were lost for long periods, necessitating the shifting of lanky George Gervin to the guard position in recent weeks.

Calvin is scheduled to arrive in San Antonio Wednesday and be ready to play against Kansas City on Thursday.

Thurman Munson — American League Most Valuable Player. (UPI)

Munson selected as AL top player

NEW YORK [UPI] — Thurman Munson, the wheelhorse of the New York Yankees' first pennant-winning season in 12 years, Tuesday was voted the American League's most valuable player by the Baseball Writers Association of America.

Munson, who batted .302 and drove home 102 runs — second in the league, received 18 first place votes from the 24 Baseball Writers participating in the balloting, four seconds and two thirds for a total of 304 points. George Brett of the Kansas City Royals was second in the voting with 217 points and Munson's teammate, Mickey Rivers, was third with 179.

In becoming the 17th Yankee to win the MVP and the first since 1963, Munson, named team captain last year when Billy Martin took over as New York's manager, thus continues the "most valuable" tradition established by Yankee catchers. In 1963, Elston Howard was the MVP recipient, while Hall of Fame receiver Yogi Berra won the award in 1951, '54 and '55.

Besides Berra and Howard, the only other catcher to win an Al MVP Award was hall of famer Mickey Cochrane of the Detroit Tigers in 1934.

Although speed on the bases was the principal ingredient in the Yankees' 1976 pennant drive, it was still Munson, the durable and dependable catcher, who was the team's most reliable clutch hitter and generally conceded to be the one player they could least afford to love over any lengthy time period.

Besides achieving his second straight 100-plus RBI season, Munson, 29, also had 79 runs scored, 17 homers and 27 doubles. More significantly, however, was his 152 games played and the fact that he was the only catcher in the AL to both bat over .300 and drive in over 100 runs.

And even though post-season performances are not taken into account in the MVP voting, it was perhaps in the Yankees' disastrous four-game world series loss to the Cincinnati Reds where Munson most demonstrated his valuable contributions to the team. Against the Reds, Munson tied a world series record of most consecutive hits (6) and batted .529 — highest ever for a player on the losing team.

The award was also a vindication of sorts for Munson, who was slighted by Cincinnati manager Sparky Anderson after the final game of the series. When asked to compare Munson with his own catcher, Johnny Bench, Anderson cautioned reporters about "embarrassing anybody by comparing them with Johnny Bench."

PLAYER	TOT
Munson, NY	304
Brett, KC	217
Rivers, NY	179½
McRae, KC	99
Chambliss, NY	71½

Campbell, Min	56
May, Blt	51

Munson lashed out verbally at Anderson for his remark and the Reds' skipper later sent a written apology.

And prior to 1976, Munson frequently was compared less favorably to Boston's Carlton Fisk among American League catchers and that, too, ranked the sensitive Yankee receiver.

Davis jumps back to NFL

TAMPA, Fla. [UPI] — Former Southern California All-America running back Anthony Davis jumped from the Canadian Football League to the National Football League Tuesday when he signed a multi-year contract with the expansion Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

The move reunites him with his college coach John McKay, now head coach of the Buccaneers.

Davis, who will not be eligible to play in the NFL until next season, is viewed by McKay as the "catalyst" the Bucs have lacked offensively this year as they have floundered to an 0-10 record.

"After looking at the other runners in this league I'm certain he will be one of the better runners in the league," McKay said at an afternoon news conference. "I think A.D. is a quality ball player."

In addition, the Bucs have indicated they will choose USC running back Ricky Bell in the next NFL draft. McKay indicated earlier this year that with Bell and Davis, his club would have won four or five of its first nine games.

Davis, clad in a blue denim jumpsuit, declined to say how long a contract he signed, other than to say it was "multi-year," and no other details of the contract were disclosed.

"I wish not to comment on the contract," Davis said. "I'm very happy with it.

"I think it's a unique situation to be able to play here. I know Coach McKay and he knows me as a person and I know most of the assistants. It's like going back to USC.

"We all know that one person can't win games. I just hope I can contribute. It takes more than one player. I just want to be associated with other great players and great coaches," Davis said.

Anthony Davis announces move. (UPI)

Davis flew here Monday night after purchasing his contract from the Toronto Argonauts of the CFL and signed the contract Tuesday morning.

Bucs' vice president of operations Ron Wolf said he and Davis' agent, Mike Trope of Los Angeles, began a meeting at 10 p.m. Monday and with the exception of two breaks, met through the night, reaching agreement about 10:30 a.m. Tuesday.

Trope said Davis did not skip out on his Toronto contract, did not terminate it illegally, and did not shirk his responsibilities.

"He conducted himself as a gentleman," Trope said. "We discussed the purchase of his contract and I gave them (Toronto officials) a cashier's check Monday."

Davis said he had become distressed in Canada because he felt he was not being used to his potential and decided he would be better off with the Buccaneers, who obtained the rights to his services from the New York Jets in the veterans allocation draft.

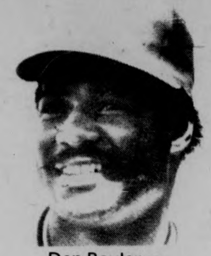
Tenace signs with Padres; Baylor inks Angels' pact



Don Baylor

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI] — The three-time champion Oakland A's lost two more key players yesterday when Gene Tenace jumped leagues to sign with the San Diego Padres and Don Baylor moved to the California Angels.

Player agent Jerry Kapstein announced multi-year signing of the power hitters in separate afternoon news conferences. Kapstein, baseball's "super-agent," represents 10 of the 22 free agents who participated in baseball's Nov. 4 re-entry draft.

Padres' officials, building toward meeting owner Ray Kroc's promise of bringing a world championship to his city, began negotiations for Tenace on Nov. 4. But Kapstein said there was strong interest by a lot of clubs from the start of negotiations.

"Gene Tenace is without a doubt the most underrated, overlooked player in the major leagues in the last three to four years," he said.

Tenace, speaking at a news conference near Kapstein's Providence headquarters, said, "I will guarantee to the people of San Diego that when I put a uniform on, I will give 110 per cent."

The catcher-first baseman was unable to reach an agreement with Oakland owner Charlie Finley, but said he had "a lot of respect for him and no hard feelings for him."

He said "rumors that I don't want to catch are all false rumors," and said he looked forward to trying his batting prowess on national league pitchers.

"I guess it's a fastball pitching league and I'm primarily a fastball hitter," Tenace said.

Harry Dalton, the Angels' vice president and general manager, said it was uncertain whether Baylor will be used as a designated hitter or in the outfield. The former Oakland and Baltimore player has 15 homers and 64 runs batted in with the A's last season.

"As long as I get my four at bats and possibly four hits I'll be happy," Baylor said, adding he was pleased to stay on the west coast.

"When you play baseball, you consider playing and living in that community. Southern California is one of the best places to play baseball," said Baylor, who will join Bobby Bonds to give the Angels some power hitting.

Kapstein refused to reveal financial terms in both cases, but said each player will be with their respective ball clubs "for the foreseeable future."

The free agent signings were the second and third since the draft two weeks ago. The Boston Red Sox earlier signed relief pitcher Bill Campbell, formerly of the Minnesota Twins.

Kapstein said he expects a few more signings will occur shortly "but I can't say when or where."

Bradshaw doubtful starter this weekend

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — The Pittsburgh Steelers said yesterday quarterback Terry Bradshaw is questionable for Sunday's game against the Houston Oilers at Three Rivers Stadium.

Bradshaw did not take part in the team's practice Tuesday and was sent home to rest his right wrist, which was badly sprained in the first quarter of last Sunday's 14-3 win over the Miami Dolphins.

The latest NFL statistics show running back Franco Harris has moved up to second place in rushing in the AFC with 845 yards. He trails Baltimore running back Lydell Mitchell, his former Penn State teammate, by 94 yards.

Harris leads the AFC in scoring with 72 points and his 12 touchdowns place him in a tie with Minnesota's Chuck Foreman and Chicago's Walter Payton for the NFL lead in that department.

Pittsburgh's Rocky Bleier is eighth in rushing with 648 yards and his average of 4.8 yards per carry is the best of any of the top runners in the AFC.

Steeler safety Glen Edwards' six interceptions tie him for the AFC lead with Cincinnati's Ken Riley and Cleveland's Thom Darden.

Other Steelers among the leaders are punter Bobby Walden with a 41.0 average and punt returner Theo Bell with an 11.0 average.

Olympic star Leonard enters pro boxing ring

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Angelo Dundee, who guided Muhammad Ali to the heavyweight championship, signed yesterday to manage Olympic Gold medal winner Ray "Sugar Ray" Leonard and predicted a world title for his new protege within three or four years.

Leonard, Junior Welterweight winner for the United States at the Montreal games, told a news conference: "I'm very confident I will become a world champion."

Dundee, who became Ali's manager after he won the Olympic Light Heavyweight title in 1960 as Cassius Clay, said Leonard would probably make his professional debut in the next six weeks, preferably in Washington.

Neither Dundee nor the 20-year-old Leonard were certain of which championship would eventually become the property of the 139-pound fighter.

"He's still young and growing," Dundee commented. "I don't know which title we may end up going for."

Leonard, winner of 145 of 150 amateur bouts including six victories at the Olympics, originally intended to attend the University of Maryland full-time but decided to turn pro when his mother became ill after his Montreal triumph.

"I turned professional because I had obligations to my family," he said.

Dundee said he expects Leonard to make his pro bow "hopefully in the Washington area" in a six-round bout and then step up gradually to longer challenges.

Olympic boxing champion Sugar Ray Leonard (center) announces he will turn professional and will be managed by Angelo Dundee (right). Dundee is currently Muhammad Ali's trainer. (UPI)

Bell inks new pact

CLEVELAND [UPI] — Third baseman Buddy Bell has signed a multi-year contract with the Cleveland Indians after leading the team with 75 runs scored and appearing in all 159 games, according to general manager Phil Seghi.

By playing the complete schedule, Bell became the first Indian to do so since Rocky Colavito in 1965.

Seghi did not announce the terms of the contract to Bell — the Indians' first for next season although centerfielder Rick Manning will be in the second year of a two-year contract.

Bell hit .281 with seven homers 26 doubles and 60 runs batted in.

"We are very happy to come to terms with Buddy and look ahead to many more years of the caliber of baseball he can give us," said Seghi.

Sports Studies

Communication field grows

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

Editor's note — This is the second of a two part series attempting to acquaint the University with the Sports Studies dept.

The sports world is constantly growing about us. Every year it seems as if a new sport is being introduced or a new league is forming.

Ten years ago, the only sports you read about in the sports pages were football, basketball, baseball and hockey. You very seldom read anything about soccer, tennis or lacrosse and you certainly never read anything about women's sports.

However, times have changed, seemingly for the better. You read about all types of sports in newspapers and magazines and more time is being devoted on television sportscasts to sports other than the big four previously mentioned.

The Sports Studies department at UMass has recognized the rapid growth of sport in the past decade and the need for more specialized people to report about it. So, the Sports Studies dept. has instituted a sports communication major for those interested in the public affairs area of sport, sportscasting or sports reporting.

Unlike a straight Journalism-English major, a sports communication student combines several physical education couse with sports studies, journalism, communication studies and English courses. The course of study is then topped off with a one semester internship at a newspaper, magazine, radio or television station or working as an assistant to a sports information director at a university.

In such a course of study, you receive the necessary communication mechanics in the journalism and communication studies courses. In the sports studies and physical education courses, you are taught and exposed to the theories of sport itself along with the coaching philosophy of some of the schools athletic coaches.

The advantage a sports communication person has over everybody else is that you are able to apply several of the sport theories and coaching philosophies you are taught in your communication with your readers or listening audience.

As with the sport administration program, anybody interested in sport communication at the University is eligible for admission into the program. If you are interested, contact Dr. Coffey in the Boyden Building, or drop by the Sports Studies Dept. in Curry Hicks.

The defending champs, Baker Burnouts, built up 29 points, but lost its title to this year's winner, the WP Team, with 44 points and runners-up, Chadbourne Drips, scoring 34. Closely behind these three top scorers were Arcals Catfish (23½), Gorman Goldfish (20½), and Midnight Cruisers (20).

The meet included 7 relay events and a partners diving event. Winners and times for these were as follows:

200 Freestyle — WP-Snow, Reggio, Bakopolus, Johnston - 1:54.6

200 Medley — WP - Freddy, McIver, Reggio, L'Herieux - 2:21

100 Butterfly — WP - McIver, Reggio, Tharion, Freddy - 1:03.0

200 Backstroke — Catfish - Ferrigan, Minuite, Haskins, Moore — 2:45.0

200 Breaststroke - WP - Snow, Freddy, McIver, Reggio - 2:41.0

100 Novelty - WP - 1:31.0

These 1st place finishers gained 7 points for their teams. 2nd was worth 5, 3rd - 4, 4th - 3, 5th - 2, and 6th - 1.

Pats quickly gaining respect

Yes, the Patriots did defeat the Baltimore Colts Sunday. They didn't win on any fluke plays. They didn't win because Baltimore suffered injuries. They didn't win because the Colts weren't up for the game.

The Patriots beat the Colts by playing sound, hard-hitting football. New England was actually the team hurt by injuries, as Sam Cunningham, Steve Nelson and Russ Francis all had to leave the game. Even without these key players, the Pats rose to the occasion, as they've repeatedly done all year.

If anyone told you at the beginning of the season that the Patriots would be 7-3, a game behind first place and in a strong position for the playoffs, at this point, you'd have thought that person to be insane or member of the Pats' front office, or maybe both.

Sunday's victory was an upset, but New England fans are beginning to expect that sort of game from the Patriots. The fans are showing more confidence in the Patriot's. Sure, whenever the Pats score, you'll hear some one say "there must be a penalty flag somewhere", but by and large, New England fans have become believers. The Patriots have crossed an important bridge, the bridge of respectibility.

About a year ago, New England sports fans weren't paying any attention to the Patiots. They were still talking about Carlton Fisk's big home run, Jim Burton's pitch to Joe Morgan and the bright future ahead for the Red Sox. The '75 World Series was the major topic of conversation.

The Red Sox, after so many years of disappointment, gained respectibility in '75. They achieved this by beating the top teams. They beat the Orioles for the division title, the A's for the pennant, and gave the Reds a tough battle, just as the Patriots have defeated teams like Miami, Pittsburgh, Oakland and Baltimore.

Of course, we all know what happened to the Red Sox last summer. It was a summer of waiting. Early season troubles meant nothing, because the Red Sox had provided their fans with confidence.

The summer of '76 was "sure, the Sox will come around, they have too much pitching" or "Lynn, Rice and Fisk will start hitting soon" or "they're still close enough to catch the Yankees." Try inconsistent pitching, not enough hitting, a fired manager of the year and a lot closer to the Milwaukee Brewers than the Yankees.

The Red Sox lost all of their respectibility through one disastrous season. They'll have to start all over again next season. Even if they have a tremendous start, everyone will be saying "remember last year."

The one team in Boston which has rarely had to prove itself in recent years is the Celtics. They're led by one of the most respected men in the business, Red Auerbach. With his front office leadership and all of those titles behind them, the Celtics are always in a good position. Performance obviously speaks for itself.

The Celtics are off to a slow start this season, however. Do you see anyone panicking? The fans can supply reasons like "the new players aren't used to each other" or "Cowens hasn't been playing" or the proverbial "it's still early." Yes, it is very early in the basketball season, but it would take a very long time, like the entire season, for the fans to lose confidence in the Celtics.

New England fans take their sports very seriously, more so than in most regions. They are always looking for the new exciting teams and heroes. The Patriots and Steve Grogan can replace the Red Sox and Fred Lynn in one year.

New England fans are also very skeptical. After following the Red Sox and Patriots for years, it's easy to see why. A team can jump into the fans' hearts very quickly, but can also fall just as fast. A team must cross the bridge of respectibility to enter the fans' hearts. It's the crossing of this bridge which has made the Patriots so exciting, the Celtics so dependable and last year's Red Sox so difficult to accept.

Kuhn opposes lottery

WILMINGTON, Del. [UPI] — Baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn, testifying yesterday in the National Football League's suit against the Delaware Football Lottery, said he opposed the lottery and all forms of legalized sports betting.

Kuhn echoed testimony by NFL commissioner Pete Rozelie, who was the lead-off witness when the hearings began Monday.

Kuhn said legalized sports betting such as the Delaware Lottery, which is based on the outcome of professional football games, would ruin fan interest, damage the league's "family image" and "draw suspicion over the game."

Skaters to open season

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

The UMass varsity hockey team opens its 1976-77 season when it hosts New England College tonight at 8:00 at Orr Rink.

Senior Dana Redmond will be in the nets for the Minutemen. Redmond was the starting goalie last year at the beginning of the season, but was replaced by Doug Janik for a while before regaining the job and finished strong as the team won eight of its last 10 games and just missed qualifying for the playoffs.

The Minutemen will be hoping to improve on last year's 12-13 overall record. This year the team would like to get off to a fast start said coach Jack Canniff, who is beginning his tenth year as hockey mentor at UMass.

"The first game is important because we'd like to open the season with a win," said Canniff.

Canniff says the key to the season will be the defense, which features returning veterans Chris Lamby, who was All-East last year, Bob McCormack, Bob Jefferson and Brian Kittredge.

The Minutemen played two pre-season scrimmages and lost them both, 12-5 to RPI and 8-1 to Boston College. The Minutemen had a total of 46 minutes in penalties and were killed by six RPI power play goals in the first scrimmage.

Tonight's game is also the season's opener for New England College. Last year UMass opened its season against NEC at Henniker, New Hampshire and skated away with a 5-0 victory. Chris Lamby had one of the Minutemen goals in that game. UMass was hot that evening as it fired 58 shots on goalie John Stevenson, who made many spectacular saves with the pressure constantly on him.

New England College has played Bowdoin, a Junior A team and a team made up of ex-college players in pre-season scrimmages and coach Mickey Goulet has alternated Stevenson with sophomore goalie Rick St. Laurent.

New England is a young club with a lot of good freshmen. Last year its record was 6-16, which was probably due to inexperience. Returning veterans for NEC include Red Jendren, Matt Regina, Lou Salica and Jack Wallace.

Two players will miss the game for UMass. Brian Kittredge has been out with a hand injury and Nick Carney hurt his back during Monday's practice.

Pitt bowl bound?

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — Pitt coach Johnny Majors denied yesterday the No. 1 ranked Panthers have accepted an invitation to play in the Sugar Bowl instead of the Orange Bowl.

"I haven't even talked to my team to take a vote," Majors said. "I have no particular bowl in mind.

The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, quoting a reliable source from Memphis, Tenn., said Majors told a friend Monday that "the only way we are not going to the Sugar Bowl is if we had a squad revolt."

Majors was in Memphis for a speaking engagement.

A Pitt spokesman said the team hasn't even received a bowl invitation that it could conceivably accept.

Women's swimming

Swimmers vie in duel meet

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

Mt. Holyoke-Williams is the first obstacle in the way of a clean women's swim schedule as UMass buses it to Mt. Holyoke for the 7:00 meet tonight.

The team will see the likes of Harvard, Yale and UMaine in an expanded slate this year, thus, the Holyoke-Williams meet is a necessary tune-up. Last year the team produced an impressive 10-2 record, losing only to Yale and Springfield College.

Sophomore Alix Denhartog feels that the swimmers should "do well against Mt. Holyoke, we're a stronger team. Our times are really strong for this early in the season."

First-year coach Eve Atkinson is looking for improved personal goals as much as working well as a team this season. Sophomore and second year stand-out Mary Ann Totin summed up the team and the importance of their first meet.

"We have a smaller team this year than last, as we've lost swimmers due to school work. We have a lot of new talent, but we did lose a lot of seniors."

It's already getting interesting, with the Harvards and Yales yet to come — and they haven't even broken the water yet.

Co-captain Roxanne Balducci will lead the women swimmers tonight in competition against Mt. Holyoke and Williams, at the Mt. Holyoke pool.

Cowens no million-dollar baby

the date — Wed., Nov. 10, 1976

The setting — The Boston Garden, where the World Champion Boston Celtics hosted the Los Angeles Lakers.

Here's what happened:

The game itself was billed as another great showdown between last year's NBA Most Valuable Player, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, and one of the heroes of last year's World Champion Celtic's team, center Dave Cowens. The game also marked the sentimental return of former Celtic standout Don Chaney to the Garden.

As the near-capacity crowd continued to file into the arean from the frigid, arctic-like weather outside, the official timer sounded the buzzer ending the pre-game warm-up, signalling to get the game started.

Anxiously awaiting the start of the game, the partisan Celtic crowd courteously applauded the Lakers as they were being introduced by the public address announcer. After the five Los Angeles starters were introduced, the Celtics were then introduced.

One-by-one they were introduced and proudly, they trotted onto the floor. First came Kuberski, then Wicks, then Ard, followed by White and Scott. But hold on. Something was missing. Where was Cowens? He was no where in sight.

After the game it was learned that the Celtics' all-star center was granted "a leave of absence for an indefinite period for personal resons" by the Boston Celtics organization.

Why did he leave? Everybody began to speculate. Was it because Silas left? Was it because he didn't get along with coach Heinsohn or general manager Red Auerbach? Everybody had a lot of questions, but very few answers. Finally, somebody approached Cowens and asked him why.

A few days after the Cowens hiatus, a Boston newspaper reported that Cowens left the team because he felt guilty drawing his $280,000 a year salary when his enthusiasm and motivation were gone.

"It just got to a point where I felt guilty taking my salary from the Celtics," Cowens said.

Can you believe that? In this day and age of million dollar babies and six million dollar men, his bit of refreshing philosophy has revived by faith in pro sports. To think that there is actually a professional ballplayer who feels guilty about taking his pay because he feels he isn't doing the job. It just has to make you happy.

Can you ever imagine some of the Boston Red Sox players ever refusing to take their big fat paychecks because they weren't satisfied with the performances they were turning in? That would be the day you'd see that. As as a matter of fact, some of the players on the Red Sox are so out of it, that they always seek pay raises, no matter how poorly they did the year before.

Furthermore, the Cowens situation goes to show you that there are still some human beings in the sport world, regardless of how many selfish, money-hungry players there are.

"I'm just a human being and that's what I want to continue as," he said. "I've never considered myself a superstar or someone special. That's the label other people place on me.

It certainly is interesting what Cowens had to say, and maybe we can all learn something from it. Perhaps we do overemphasize the professional athletes. By expecting so much from these athletes, it puts additional pressure on them in order to perform up to their expected standards of play. Every athlete has enormous pride, and they want to live up to their expectations.

Maybe we should change our values, and de-emphasize the importance of any one or two athletes to a team.

By the way the Celtics beat the Lakers, 117-112.

Senate calls for student boycott

By ROBERT DAVIDSON
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night unanimously passed a motion calling for a student boycott of teacher and course evaluation forms in those departments that refuse to make the information available to students.

The motion was brought before the senate by Student Government Association (SGA) Co-presidents Jay Martus and Paul Cronin after they were informed yesterday afternoon by Vice-chancellor for Academic Affairs Paul L. Puryear that the information derived from the forms would not be made available to students.

Commenting on Puryear's action to the senate, Martus said, "One of the (administrations) most direct hits at students was taken today." Six departments have made the forms available to students, according to Martus, but whether these departments will be able to make the forms available following Puryear's action remains to be seen.

The motion that the co-presidents brought before the senate states, "that the Student Senate endorse a boycott of the Teacher and Course Evaluations in those departments which refuse to release the information to students."

According to Martus, "We feel that students have a right to know in that they are the source of the information and have a right to see the results. Also, students are supposedly to be in the process of personnel action in the faculty as deliniated by the trustee document on governance. The only way that they're involved in the process is by providing the information in the student evaluation forms. What we have decided to do is to call for a boycott of student evaluations in those departments who refuse to release the data given by students to students. We're going to pursue the denial of access through the Legal Services Office and file a Freedom of Information Act petition."

According to senator Richard Baga the six departments that have made the forms available to students are the philosophy department, psychology department, Afro-American studies department, the Army and Air Force ROTC programs, and the College of Food and Natural Resources.

Cronin said the decision to prevent students from seeing the evaluations was made by Puryear after the vice-chancellor had consulted Sidney Myers, Legal Counselor for the Chancellor of UMass. Martus added that he was told by Puryear that Myers felt that the forms should not be released to students because "the forms are filled out anonymously, are highly subjective, and could be defamatory."

"I think that it's a right of the student as a consumer to see what the hell they're getting into," said Cronin. "They're (the University) hiding something. They have to be."

Following its approval of the boycott proposal, the senate unanimously passed a motion that calls for the Academic Affairs Committee to implement a Teacher and Course Evaluation to be used by the Senate.

The Senate also reaffirmed a motion that was passed last week which rejected the conflict of interest amendment to Massachusetts Daily Collegian's constitution. The amendment prohibited all Collegian editors from serving on any campus policy making groups. The Collegian plans to seek a resolution by appealing the action through the Student Judiciary.

Allen first witness in Abraham trial

By CAROL FLYNN
Collegian Staff

The trial of Cleo Abraham, former UMass assistant professor in the School of Education, began Wednesday with Dwight Allen, former dean of the school, appearing as the first witness for the prosecution. Abraham was charged with larceny of $6,000 in federal funds.

Allen, who resigned two years ago following disclosures that several hundred thousand dollars in federal grants may have been spent improperly, was on the witness stand for about 20 minutes, explaining the method of administering federal grant programs at the UMass education school when he was its head.

Abraham allegedly made out four checks to persons who may not have existed, then cashed the checks himself.

Defense attorney Jay M. Forgotson of Springfield told the jury during his opening statement that Abraham believed the persons existed and he cashed the checks as a favor to them.

A defense motion to move the site of the trial out of Western Massachusetts was rejected by Superior Court Judge John J. Moriarty. Forgotson argued that widespread pre-trial news coverage of Abraham during an earlier federal trial meant an impartial jury could not be impaneled. Despite these efforts, 12 jurors and four alternates were selected Tuesday after three hours of examination.

Abraham was found guilty in August of embezzling $28,000 in federal funds intended for the Worcester-based Career Opportunity Program that involved the training of paraprofessional teacher aides from the poor section of Worcester.

The investigation began in December, 1974, when the Hampshire Daily Gazette ran several articles that reported former associate School of Education Robert H. Suzuki as questioning the use of certain federal funds. Suzuki handled the books for the school.

The Gazette also reported that the University could not 'verify' as real people, recipients of two School of Education checks totaling $3000. The checks were cashed by some unidentified individual(s).

The Gazette claimed that $50,000 in funds earmarked for a $356,000 Department of Health, Education and Welfare funded Career Opportunity Program was used to pay expenses related to the program, and that some of these funds were used for retreats for the School of Education, faculty to Montreal, Mexico, Florida, and California.

John P. Sideropolis

'MUA's graveyard is deadly position

By TOM CROWLEY
Collegian Staff

To most people, staying up all night is a desperate solution to an unfinished term paper that is due the next day. But John P. Sideropolis one of the few people at UMass who stay up all night on a regular basis by choice — he's a disc jockey who works the graveyard shift at WMUA.

The 21 year old senior from Roslindale says his shift from 2 to 6 a.m. on Wednesdays doesn't really bother him. "I don't mind it if I have the appropriate schedule, if I don't have a very early class. It's very hard if you do," Sideropolis said.

But it's not as if he's an old pro at the job. "This is my first semester of doing it (being a DJ). Actually, this is the seventh time I've done it," the bearded Communication Studies major said.

While the graveyard shift doesn't bother him, the brown-haired Lewis resident hopes to change to a brighter one. "The main purpose of the graveyard shift is to get experience and to go on to another shift. I'm a senior with one more semester to go and I'm hoping next semester to get a better shift."

One of the advantages of the very early shift is, obviously, that it is very quiet. This silence could be a problem for some people, but not for Sideropolis. "I don't really have trouble staying awake. The music keeps you up and the problem of practicing to get better.

"I usually don't get sleepy, my problem is getting hungry."

"Some people say when you come in here that you can play what you want, but you have to have some courtesy for the people out there," said Sideropolis. "I like to keep continuity, but I still try for variety.

While Sideropolis doesn't get too many comments from the audience, he is very much aware of them. "I play music so people staying up have something to listen to and enjoy. I stay away from new music and pushing new albums. I usually play popular groups," said Sideropolis.

"I don't like to play all soft music all the time. It puts people to sleep that are trying to stay up."

"The guys in the morning play about the same thing; my style is not unique," the Wednesday graveyard disc jockey said. "The whole thing is trying to play some songs in a row, but not the same type of songs. It taks a good knowledge of the record library and knowing what to play."

Until he can get a better slot, John Sideropolis will have to be content with staying up all Tuesday night-Wednesday morning doing his job on the graveyard shift, and facing an occasional test at 10:10 afterwards.

Bromery and GSS officers meet

By GARY McWILLIAMS
Collegian Staff

A task force to set up the procedures for the review of Graduate Student Senate (GSS) funding disbursements was planned yesterday after a meeting between Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery and officers of the Senate.

The meeting was requested by senate President Michael R. Federow to discuss the withholding of senate funds earmarked for the Graduate Student Employees Union (GSEU).

The senate has threatened legal action to force the release of the $1,000 GSEU allocation voted in an October 13 meeting.

The money was frozen by the university comptroller after University Labor Counsel Arthur Menard ascertained the disbursement violates State Labor Code 10 (2)(a) which states no employer may "Dominate, interfere, or assist in the formation, existence, or administration of any employee organization." The collection of the senate tax by the university makes the money state funds, subject to the labor code, according to a ruling by university counsel Sidney Myers.

Menard contends that this makes the University the employer of the GSEU. According to the labor code, UMass cannot "assist ... in the ... existence ... of any employee organization," in this case, the GSEU.

Myers was asked by Acting Dean of the Graduate School Vere Chappell to look into the legality of the senate's granting money to the GSEU. Myers wrote Chappell that the grant appeared lawful, and Chappell then requested Menard look into the legality of the funding. Menard determined that the money did in fact violate state labor code 10 (2)(a).

Both Chappell and Menard have served as witnesses for the university in contesting GSEU's application before the State Labor Relation Board, which has not reached a final decision regarding the right of graduate student employees to unionize.

Federow has said that the money is classified as student funds and not subject to the state code as the university contends. He charged that the university is trying to "starve out" the GSEU to obstruct the group's bid to represent graduate student-employees.

"Whether or not the money is legally the university's it is certainly not the legislature's and therefore not employer's monies," he said.

The determination of whether or not the money is the state's has become a crucial point in determining the application of the state code to the GSEU funding.

The senate has the Legal Services office working on the question of the accuracy of the university counsel's interpretation of the responsibility of the senate monies.

Federow said that he had presented "some legal angles that he (Bromery) can look at this with," suggesting the senate's view of the money as student funds may have legal basis.

He termed the meeting with Bromery "very productive," and added that the chancellor promised to look into the legal opinion of the senate that the money is not the university's.

The chancellor said that he would forward the senate's opinion of the responsibility to the labor counsel for review.

"They brought up the variation to the legal question. Arthur's (Menard) going to check that out," Bromery said.

The chancellor said that the proposed task force would "regularize" the procedures that are followed when the senate authorizes a payment and sends it to the comptroller for disbursement.

Senate members have privately said that they have reviewed several alternatives to force the university to release the money to the GSEU.

The senate has requested the Legal Services Office to research state laws to determine if in fact the GSS funds are legally state or student monies. In addition the LSO office is checking whether the payment to the GSEU violates the labor code when it is the sole group seeking bargaining rights. They feel the code may only apply where there are two groups seeking that position.

The senate instead chose to issue a statement of Policy. If the disbursement is found to be the senate's responsibility, the withholding of money was not the comptroller's prerogative and the funds would be released.

Chancellor Bromery said after the meeting with the senate that the officers had "broadened the conversation" to include the issue of governance.

"They mentioned a slight concern about the governance question," said Bromery.

In the past senate members have complained that the GSS has not been treated as a governance body. Should another governance body contest the primary responsibility of the GSS in the release of senate funds, the chancellor would mediate and decide the case.

CCEBS sponsors Career Day

Opportunities to meet personnel recruiters from business and industry will be open to students during the upcoming Career Day being sponsored by the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students (CCEBS) next Tuesday.

A pre-Career Day workshop will be held tonight from 7:00 to 10:00 in the CCEBS study lounge on the second floor of the New Africa House. The purpose of the workshop is to assist students in preparing for interviews and in the writing of their resumes.

The first 125 students who attend the workshop will receive an admission pass to the Career Day luncheon which will be held at noon on Career Day on the 10th floor of the Campus Center.

Organizers of the events have said students planning to apply for any Spring or Summer jobs which may require a formal application could benefit greatly from attending tonight's workshop. Even students who are not seniors or recent graduates, but who are interested in learning about the "process of developing and determining some career and life goals" are also encouraged to attend.

Actor debuts in character role for 'Kiss Me Kate'

By GINI MANGAN
Collegian Staff

Scotty Caulfield, cast member of Kiss Me Kate, has one word for how he'll feel when the show opens tomorrow night: "Nervous. That feeling of opening night never goes away. Every time that curtain goes up, I hear this boom, boom, boom inside," he said.

Caulfield, who plays the part of a gangster, says there have been problems with the production but "we've finally got it together. I like working with the Music Theatre Guild. When there's a problem, everyone helps solve it."

One bad aspect of acting, said Caulfield, is "we're not allowed to have a sense of humor — directors get too uptight — but we do anyway. We drive 'em nuts — I try my damndest."

This will be the first time Caulfield has played a character role at UMass. He feels it is rewarding but enjoys being in the chorus more. "If you're developing a character, you don't get to work with the people as much."

Caulfield has had a "very strong interest" in the theatre since eighth grade."

In the past he has played Perchik in Fiddler on the Roof, and a Russian dancer in another production of Fiddler, for which he had to flip off tables, balance a bottle on his head, and dance around a semicircular staircase.

"I love to dance and have danced in all the shows here," Caulfield said.

Other roles he has performed are a Japanese butler in Mame and a Japanese lord in Teahouse of the August Moon. This production was done in theatre in the round, which Caulfield feels is more interesting than a conventional stage. "Everything becomes more real. With smaller audiences, you can get more across," he said.

Scotty Caulfield, who plays one of the two gangsters in the play Kiss Me Kate, will be acting in his first character role when the play opens tonight in Bowker Auditorium. (Staff photo by Nancy Bernitich)

One of the benefits of doing Kiss Me Kate is getting an opportunity to work with the music director. "I developed my voice more, not by force but just by letting it flow," Caulfield said.

He is doing a duet with another gangster called, "Brush Up Your Shakespeare."

"I practiced it a helluva lot on my own," said Caulfield.

Caulfield likes the glamour of the theatre but also sees it as a means to "develop yourself. You have to give your all."

A junior BDIC major in juvenile offending counseling, Caulfield is interested in offering alternative education and perhaps setting up a theatre for juveniles.

"I've been through a lot — I know where juvenile delinquents are coming from. No family, no real home, lack of love, negative education opportunities — all these factors can warp a person out."

Caulfield puts it all in perspective, saying, "There's a lot of hurt and disappointment, but I keep slugging on. I'm an eternal optimist."

Stockbridge votes to investigate missing money

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Collegian Staff

The Stockbridge Student Senate voted last night at its meeting to for an investigative committee to look into the disappearance of $171.95 from the Senate's Ways and Means Committee.

The missing sum stems from an exchange of job responsibilities involving a T-shirt sale at this past July's Freshmen orientation. Cheryl Sylvester spoke on Kevin Stuart's behalf, explaining that due to a large crowd and confusion the sellers "could not keep track of records quick enough, causing money to be unaccounted for." She continued, "We don't know if the problem is in money or inventory." Both Sylvester and Stuart were involved in the sale.

Mike Leonardo, treasurer of the Senate, asked the senators to keep an eye open for a tan university notebook, possibly missing near Alpha Tau Gamma, the Stockbridge fraternity, which holds the figures related to the T-shirt sale. "It is mysteriously missing," he said. Leonardo also stated that RSO has no record of a deposit regarding the missing sum of money.

Educational Qualities Committee distributed surveys to all senior senators whose major was involved in spring placement. The surveys involve alternatives to placement. A formal proposal regarding this subject is hoped to be presented to the faculty and the Senate before the end of this semester.

ATG is sponsoring a "Toy for Tots" campaign in cooperation th the Unted ited States Marine Corps. The drive will begin next week. Donations can be left at Stockbridge Hall.

Correction

Yesterday's Collegian inadvertantly reported that State Rep. James G. Collins would be meeting with students from across the state to discuss an upcoming bill to establish a study commission. Collins has been invited to address the Undergraduate Student Senate, but the other proposed meeting is a separate event.

'We're fixin' a brick'

By D. A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

"We're fixin' a brick," said one of the workmen at the library construction site yesterday where the construction firm of Daniel O'Connell and Sons are repairing chipped bricks.

"It is a continuation of the work that was started last fall," said Edmund J. Ryan, UMass Chief Project Engineer. When the cold weather came, he added, the work had to be postponed.

According to Richard B. Shanor of the UMass News Bureau, "It is the weathering of the bricks which causes small chips to fall. This is the reason for the fences around the library. It is not structurally damaging, but it can be potentially dangerous."

Shanor continued to say that the process of thermal expansion is known as spalling, which refers to the falling away of chips of bricks.

"Chips fall, not bricks. It occurs at the relieving angles of the building on the south and west sides," he said.

Ryan said that the cost of these repairs is somewhere in the neighborhood of several thousand dollars. He was unable to quote a specific figure because the contract is between the State Bureau of Building and Daniel O'Connell and Sons.

'MUA hosts head of UM Safety Dept.

By ROBERT LESLIE
Collegian Staff

David L. Johnston, director of the UMass Public Safety Department, was the guest on WMUA's "Off the Hook" talk program last night. Johnston spoke on a wide range of subjects and answered telephone calls from listeners.

Johnston, who attended Michigan State University and then the State University of New York at Albany where he received his Master's degree in Criminal Justice, began the program with a brief background of the UMass Police Department, also called the Department of Public Safety.

"There are 92 members of the department," he said, "which has jurisdiction (on UMass property) from Nantucket to South Deerfield. There are 41 officers and administrators, 37 security personnel, and the rest are support people. The force has seven marked and three unmarked cruisers. The department also has an agreement with the town of Amherst and we sometimes serve as special officers for them. In addition, most of us are deputy sheriffs in Hampshire and Franklin County."

The first subject mentioned during the program was that of towing cars. Johnston explained that cars can be towed only if they are in designated tow areas, if they are improperly parked, or if they are not registered. The Department of Public Utilities allows a tow truck operator to enter a locked car for purposes of securing the car for safe transport. The operator is responsible for any damage which the car sustains. Johnston also gave some figures in regard to towing. He showed that, to date, there have been 1,000 less cars towed in 1976 than in 1975.

Johnston then answered a call regarding a letter which appeared in last Wednesday's Collegian alleging police harassment. Johnston said that an interdepartmental investigation, headed by Saul Chafin, head of the Internal Affairs Division, is currently under way.

Protective custody was the next topic. Johnston said that on July 1, 1973, a statute was passed allowing for the decriminalization of public intoxication. Instead of it being a misdemeanor, intoxication was now up to the individual officer's discretion. As it applies to UMass, the officer has three options. He may take the person home, he may take the person to jail, or he may take the person to a detoxification center in Springfield. This final option is rather remote however, because the center in Springfield rarely accepts people from this area, due to understaffing. Johnston stated that thus far this year, only 177 persons ~~have been~~ taken to jail, while countless others have been brought to their homes.

The final subject of the evening was the crime prevention program currently in effect at UMass. The program allows for valuable, personal items to be engraved with a number which is then recorded on IBM cards and stored in a computer. To date there have been arrests made as a result of Operation Identification. "This is one of the few programs which has been funded by students and then used to directly help the students," Johnston concluded.

Sparks to file protest against SWA porno ban

By DEBORAH GOODWIN
Collegian Staff

Albert Sparks, head of the student run pornographic film company Baroque Enterprises, will issue a protest over the Southwest Assembly pornography referendum held last Monday. It resulted in the continued banning of pornographic films in the Hampden Student Center.

The protest will be filed with the incoming Student Attorney General, Paul Yanoivitch, and will challenge the constitutionality of the decision.

Sparks feels SWA has taken first amendment rights, in the form of censorship, away from the members of Southwest. He will also be stressing the manner in which the referendum was held, the time length, and its wording as reasons for the rejection of the decision to ban his films.

Yanoivitch hasn't reached his decision, which is not binding whether he will back Sparks' protest. Sparks believes he has a 50-50 chance of winning his case under Article 4, paragraph 3, of the Student Constitution which states: "No person be denied the right to receive and express ideas, opinions, and facts."

Whether or not Sparks receives Yanoivitch's support, he will take his case to the Student Judiciary Court to have the issue decided. He also stands a 50-50 chance of winning there if he stresses the use of censorship, according to the Head Clerk of Courts, Steven Monteiro. Three judges and a presiding judge will be responsible for making a majority decision which, if it is decided against Sparks, may be appealed once with a new court and new presiding judge.

Outgoing Student Attorney General John Van Toll believes that the referendum was run in a constitutional manner and if Sparks uses the location of the voting, the time and the wording of it as an issue, he will be weakening his own case.

Baroque Enterprises has been restricted to two showings per semester in the Campus Center Student Union and has had to rely on other organizations to show their films for them. Baroque also faces trouble with the RSO office which is against the showing of their films because, in Sparks' opinion, "They feel that they know what's best for you."

I.U.D.'s dangerous in pregnant women

BOSTON [AP] — Fifteen of every 100,000 women who continue to wear intrauterine devices — IUDs — after becoming pregnant die from infected spontaneous abortions, a federal study says.

That death rate is 50 times higher than among women who do not use the IUD birth control method, the study said.

The researchers said that, because of the danger, women should have their IUDs removed at the first sign of pregnancy.

IUDs are plastic shields, loops or coils inserted into the uterus to prevent pregnancy. However, about 2 per cent of the time they fail, and women become pregnant, anyway.

The study says that if these women fail to have their IUDs removed, they run a risk of dying from infected, or septic, abortions that occur spontaneously, unlike those induced by doctors.

The research was conducted by the federal Center for Disease Control in Atlanta. It was scheduled to be published in today's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

The study is the latest in a series of reports that raise questions about the effects of IUDs on pregnancy. The researchers said theirs is the first study to determine the death rate among women who continue to wear the birth control device while pregnant.

They found there were about 15 deaths among every 100,000 women who kept wearing their IUDs while pregnant. Among women who did not have IUDs, there was only a fraction of one death per 100,000.

"We conclude that the risk of death from spontaneous abortion in the United States is over 50 times greater in women continuing a pregnancy with IUDs than in those without IUDs in place," the researchers wrote.

Tokyo Rose asks Ford for pardon

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — Tokyo Rose, an American-born woman convicted of treason for Japanese propaganda broadcasts to U.S. servicemen in World War II, yesterday filed a petition asking for a presidential pardon.

In her first news conference since her release from prison 20 years ago, Iva Toguri D'Aquino, dubbed Tokyo Rose by GI's in the Pacific, said she was not seeking exoneration, merely a pardon, to regain her citizenship so she would not be a woman without a country as old age approaches.

"Age is creeping up on me and I can't wait forever," said the small, bespectacled woman, who was born on July 4, 1916, is now 60 and has continually maintained her innocence.

"America is my home. It will always be my home. American citizenship is a deep, valuable thing. You don't recognize the value of it until you don't have it."

D'Aquino, who was reared in Los Angeles, graduated from UCLA and runs an import-export business in Chicago, said she hoped President Ford acts on the matter quickly.

Hotel taken; seven dead

AMMAN, Jordan [UPI] — Four Palestinian "Black June" guerrillas seized the Intercontinental Hotel yesterday and killed two hotel employes before commandos stormed the building aboard helicopters and killed three of the terrorists in a four-hour gun battle.

Two Jordanian soldiers also died in the shootout to bring the death toll to seven. The fourth gunman was seriously wounded.

An American staying at the hotel, which is opposite the U.S. embassy, and two other persons were wounded.

The government said the guerrillas were members of the "Black June" terror organization, the same radical splinter group that took 90 hostages at the Semiramis Hotel in Damascus Sept. 26. Police killed one of those guerrillas and the three others were hanged in a public square.

The government said the terrorists gave hotel guests pamphlets protesting Arab summit endorsements of Syria's intervention to end the Lebanese civil war. But the commandos stormed the hotel before the message could be relayed to Jordanian authorities.

The guerrillas burst into the lobby at 9:50 a.m., 2:50 a.m. EST, a government spokesman said.

"The terrorists entered the hotel and killed the receptionist with a grenade," said Michael Burton, first secretary of the British embassy. "Then they occupied rooms on the upper floors of the hotel and attempted to take hostages."

Cpl. James Copeland of Fort Worth, Tex., a Marine guard at the American embassy, said, "Police from the station just down the road were on the scene quickly. Then the Jordanian commandos arrived."

The commandos traded fire with the guerrillas, who smashed windows and fired machine guns from balconies.

"There was a lot more shooting and some of the commandos dropped onto the roof from helicopters," Copeland said.

Gilmore persistent on dying

SALT LAKE CITY [UPI] Condemned killer Gary Gilmore yanked out intravenous medicine tubes yesterday in an apparent effort to prevent his recovery from an overdose of sleeping pills.

Gilmore, who swallowed a handful of pills in his prison cell after the state refused to execute him when he wanted, told his doctor he was "unhappy" because they had saved his life.

The suicide attempt forced the Utah Board of Pardons to extend Gilmore's stay of execution until Dec. 6, when it will hold a special hearing to decide if he should be shot by a firing squad or sentenced to life imprisonment.

Dr. Grant Christian said the 35-year-old slayer was recovering despite his refusal to cooperate and probably would be ready for transfer to the infirmary at Utah State Prison sometime Thursday.

His fiancee, Nicole Barrett, remained in a deep coma and critical condition from the pills she swallowed in their attempted suicide pact, but doctors said she has improved slightly.

"He Gilmore, doesn't desire to be treated," Dr. Christian told a news briefing at University of Utah Medical Center. "He pulled out his I.V. intravenous medicine tube. He is unhappy that we did what we did."

The physician said Gilmore would be "Force-treated" — held down and given shots — if he refused to take medication through the I.V. tube.

Ron Goslin, chef at UMaine, prepares tofu-burgers. (UPI)

UMaine nutrition conscious

ORONO, Maine [UPI] — Students will soon be able to munch on tofuburgers in the University of Maine at Orono school dining hall, it was announced yesterday.

A tofuburger, officials said, is made of a low-cost Japanese protein food consisting of a soybean curd fried with onions, carrots and sunflower seeds.

"It's great," said Anne S. Johnson, assistant manager of dining halls at UMO. She said the new tofuburger is part of an attempt "to wean students at UMO away from junk foods and empty calories."

Johnson said about 150 students purchase vegetarian meals at Wells Common Dining Hall each night.

"Those students electing such a diet are a very thoughtful group," Johnson said.

"They are aware there isn't enough animal protein to feed the world's multitudes and that a vegetarian diet is a way to aid in alleviating this problem."

Bomb threat delays bicentennial show

MOSCOW [UPI] — Soviet officials reported a threat that a bomb would explode within six minutes yesterday at a new U.S. bicentennial exhibition, and police and American guides cleared about 1,200 visitors and staff from hall.

No explosive was found.

It took 16 minutes to clear the one-story pavillion in Sokolniki park, but a six-man army bomb squad did not arrive at the scene for more than three and a half hours. Exhibition director Frank Ursino said he protested the delay.

Witnesses said the Soviet policemen told Muscovites the show was being closed "because of technical difficulties."

When Americans asked why no mention had been made of the real reason, a police official said authorities were afraid no one would return to see the exhibition if the bomb threat became known.

The $1.2 million exhibition — featuring displays of historical Americana, a Walt disney movie and Russian-language translations of the Bill of Rights and Declaration of Independence — opened last Thursday.

Since then Russians have besieged the show and American officials said they were recording an average of 9,000 visitors a day. Yesterday morning 8,000 persons were waiting in sub-zero temperatures when the doors opened.

Ursino said he received a call at 12:24 p.m. from a Soviet trade representative who told him the Interior Ministry had ben informed a plastic bomb was in the building.

"He said they had been told the bomb was set to go off at 12:30 and we should clear the hall," Ursino said. "That's what we did."

The building was cleared by 12:40 p.m., according to Ursino. The bomb squad arrived at 4:05 p.m., after Soviet officials said no plastic explosives experts were available immediately.

The incident was the first of its kind here since last spring's series of bomb threats against the American embassy. U.S. officials at the time protested what they said were officially inspired actions taken in retaliation for attacks on Soviet diplomats and property in New York by militant Jewish groups.

News in Brief

China sets off fourth nuclear blast

HONG KONG [UPI] — China detonated a 4-megaton hydrogen bomb in the atmosphere yesterday, its fourth nuclear explosion this year and the largest ever detected in the Communist country by U.S. monitors.

It was China's 21st nuclear blast since testing began in 1964.

Radio Peking said the device was detonated to celebrate the new Chinese leadership of Communist Party Chairman Hua Kuo-feng and last month's purge of the "gang of four" — Chairman Mao Tse-tung's widow and three associates accused to trying to take over the country's leadership.

The New China News Agency said the explosion was carried out "with complete success, thereby raising the level of our country's nuclear weapons to a new height and... strengthening our country's national defense capability."

Patriarca scandal gets no indictments

PROVIDENCE, [AP] — Finding "insufficient evidence", a Providence County grand jury announced yesterday that no indictments would be handed down in connection with a 1974 parole request by reputed crime boss Raymond L.S. Patriarca.

The grand jury said it investigated an allegation that a legislator offered a bribe to the chairman of the state Parole Board to influence his vote on Patriarca's parole request in June 1974.

However, the grand jury declared: "There is insufficient evidence of a criminal act in relation to allegations of bribery to support an indictment against any individual."

The Parole Board rejected Patriarca's request for release in June 1974 but approved a subsequent parole bid by the alleged leader of organized crime in New England in December 1974.

Drugs stored in safety deposit box

BOSTON [AP] — Safety deposit boxes weren't as safe as someone hoped: Police confiscated illegal drugs stashed in the vaults of three banks.

A Braintree man was charged with possession of drugs with intent to distribute after police said they found thousands of tablets and capsules of amphetamines, $9,280 in cash and a loaded .25-caliber automatic.

Officers said Ronald Heartstone, 40, arrested Monday, is being held in Suffolk County Jail on $200,000 bail following a court appearance.

Officers said they confiscated one-half pound of amphetamine powder and 200 tablets of dilaudid, a heroin substitute, at the U.S. Trust Co. office in the Brighton section.

Fuel suppliers deny overcharging

CONCORD, N.H. [AP] — C. H. Sprague & Son of Boston, one of New England's largest fuel suppliers, yesterday "emphatically denied" Federal Energy Administration charges of violating FEA regulations.

Henry M. Powers, president of the company, called the FEA charges "completely unfounded and potentially damaging."

The FEA claims Sprague overcharged its New England customers by millions of dollars during the Arab oil embargo.

In a prepared statement, Power said his company's calculations indicated that rather than charging its customers too much during 1973 and 1974, it had not charged them as much as they might have.

The FEA on Monday issued a "Notice of Probable Violation" to Sprague. Under FEA rules, details of the notice cannot be made public until ten days after the notice is delivered.

Food lovers lose three delights

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Food and Drug Administration yesterday announced recalls involving hot peppers, butterscotch pudding and pie filling and grapefruit juice.

The peppers were recalled from New Mexico, Arizona and Texas by the manufacturer, San Juanito Chile Products Co., San Miguel, N.M. The brand involved is "Rio Grande Whole Green Chiles" in 26-ounce cans; "Green Chile Strips" in 26-ounce cans and "Chopped Green Chiles" in 28-ounce cans.

The FDA said the recall was going on because of "failure to control acidity in the canning process which may pose a potential for bacterial outgrowth." The agency said the company estimated 126 cases of the products remain on the market.

'Combat Zone' crackdown underway

BOSTON [UPI] — A police crackdown on vice following the stabbings of two Harvard football players forced the regular night people of Boston's downtown "Combat Zone" adult entertainment district underground yesterday.

Andrew Puopolo, 21, stabbed twice in the heart, remained on the critical list at the New England Medical Center. Thomas Lincoln, 23, was in good condition at Massachusetts General Hospital with a stab wound in the stomach.

The two athletes were injured in a melee with about 10 men while trying to retrieve a wallet allegedly stolen by a prostitute early Tuesday after a score of Harvard football players visited some hot spots.

Three men arrested in the stabbings of Puopolo and Lincoln are being held on $25,000 each on assault and battery charges.

The athletes had entered the garish neon-lit district of topless nightclubs, adult book stores and pornographic movie houses following the annual banquet at the Harvard Club to mark the end of the football season.

Censhorship: a double-vision absurdity

By MICHAEL W. ROBERTS

> "If anyone in this room finds that verb intransitive, to come, obscene, vile, vulgar — if it's really a hangup to hear it and you think I'm the rankest for saying it — you probably can't come."
> Lenny Bruce

One absurdity which I cannot bear is the double standard, Somehow when judgement is revealed to be two-fold, the beholders rationalize it is not, or they admit guilt so everyone can be adjudged by one standard, regardless how poor that judgement is. Perhaps members of society should not judge each other.

Unfortunately, I am not imbued with such wisdom; I do judge. I am not a fair judge either. If I were scrutinized by the criteria of the social correctors and crusaders, I would well find myself labelled a racist or a sexist. If I were given a Standard Racial and Sexual Aptitude Test I would cringe at the question, "How did you learn the words nigger, spic and cunt?" If I would not live up to the perverse lie that people should be good and perfect, the apparent truthful answer should subject myself to public obliquy. This is no way to have friends and find a job.

Even by my prejudiced standards, I am prejudiced. And so are you.

Somehow it is not strange for society to grant people power to ask questions, to form standards, and to piss judgement although those with power never see themselves.

Last week I looked into a phrase I usurped from context of someone else's commentary: " ... Sex that is loving, warm, spiritually high, full of grace and beauty, a healthy adventure and a natural extension of friendship ... "

This characterizes the nature of sex and love. Sex, at its best, is an expression of love with our bodies. Love and sex are expressions of emotion and affection manifest in physical response. They cannot be rationalized or defined. They come from the heart.

Many people have tried to define love and sex. They look them up in dictionaries. Yet, the greatest authors spent difficult lifetimes without adequately explaining them.

Sex is beautiful. It is an expression. It is an art form.

It is an art form that can only be expressed in bedrooms or on the back seats of automobiles.

If I attempted to express sex through another art form, I would be culled out from artists as a pornographer.

I could express anything else in an art form, and although I could make money through an exploitation of people, it would still be culture. I could portray men as rapists or war-mongers, or macho football players. I could portray women as holy virgin nuns in a convent, divorced from the oppressors of society, "spiritually high" in Mariology "full of grace and beauty." I could immortalize the young male child with no place left to be a young man with his own kind, because little women now play in the Little League. I could champion the causes of women, calling myself a feminist, becoming socially acceptable, devoting my whole life and living to their problems, thereby exploiting them for my own profit, and yet if I do it in literature and art, it is still culture. I could portray the abject poor, make my living off of their plight, exploit them, and it would still be culture. It would all be beautiful culture.

If I were to portray sex by an art form, such as film, theater or literature, I would be a pornographer.

It does not matter how tastefully I present it. The question is not whether it is good or bad, art; the quality of art has not been a question of law or morals. The question is whether people can face themselves as people with bodies. If you cannot tolerate the expression of sex in one art form, you probably cannot express it in another.

You probably can't come.

There are persons who try to rationalize their sex life. They are so involved in their search for meanings, they elude love and sex. They can escape. They are so concerned about what is a meaningful relationship, they never have the chance to have one.

Yet, what is really embarrassing is that its cause is an inability to see ourselves. Censorship is an absurdity of double-vision.

Society blinds itself and pretends it can see. No wonder it appears to perceive one way and act another.

Society perceives an illusion as reality. It wants to believe in the illusion. It cannot face itself. It even judges itself by a double standard.

When an individual cannot perceive reality, he is insane. What can one call a society that cannot perceive reality? Some call it totalitarian, but if they live in it, they often call it democracy.

Reporter's ethics questioned

To the Editor:

Elizabeth Kent has apparently fallen into the trap all journalists must fear like the plague. She seems to be writing her stories and commentaries on students caught shoplifing with pre-conceived opinions and with a definite value judgement.

Ms. Kent's commentary on the editorial pages of November seventeenth's Collegian suggesting that students caught shoplifting should be found guilty and not be given continuances without findings is reactionary in the truest sense of the word.

She seems concerned that a student can walk out of a courtroom and allegedly laugh about having been granted a continuance. She's "hard-boiled" because the student apparently didn't know the serious nature of what had just transpired. She is condescending and "holier than thou" in her limited thinking.

Though she may have seen one student laugh about being granted a continuance, she hasn't seen nine out of every ten students that come into the Legal Services Office worry, wrack their brains and lose sleep over what they've done.

I work in LSO and have done the preliminary interviewing for the cases of many of the students who Ms. Kent has seen in court. I don't doubt that someone might laugh after getting a continuance but that may or may not be what the student Ms. Kent saw was laughing about. I would, however give that student the benefit of the doubt, because I've never seen any client laugh or even be less than concerned.

Just like Winthrop Cummings and Judges Morse and Ryan, Ms. Kent feels that students don't understand the serious nature of their shoplifting — legally termed larceny under $100. Thus by finding them guilty, she hypothesizes, students will begin to understand that their actions may give them criminal records, and subsequently cut the rate of the problem. However, just as an article in the Collegian will cut the rate of shoplifitng for a short period of time before it rises again, finding students guilty will only cut the rate for a short period of time.

Both Attorney Jim Starr and the un-named defendant quoted in Ms. Kent's news article in the same day's paper claim to have been misquoted. As a reporter for the Collegian, I've heard the same complaints from people I've quoted, and it's a subject that can never be resolved after the fact.

However, Ms. Kent's use of a statement allegedly made by the unnamed defendant that states, "If anybody else is going to do that [shoplift], then they're going to have to go through the same shit I did." when it was a suggestion made by Ms. Kent that prompted the statement,-ssuggests a value judgement having been made by her and not a straight reporting of the facts.

And whether or not the University Store spends a dollar a year or ten thousand dollars a year on shoplifting doesn't mean much, because it's not being spent constructively. But that's another issue.

What is most at issue is that Ms. Kent has obviously made value judgements about shoplifters and shoplifting. And while no reporter can remain totally objective, if Ms. Kent can't keep her opinions out of her reporting, no matter how it may pain her, she shouldn't be writing for any newspaper.

Does stealing pay? We think not

To the Editor:

This letter is being written with the hope that other students here at the University will think twice and thereby avoid what we would call the most emotionally disturbing and nerve racking experience of our lives. We are referring to the theft of university property and the results of such actions if one is apprehended.

The two of us were involved in just such an incident and sincerely regret what we did not only because of the emotional toll we were subjected to but also due to the legal penalties we suffered.

We attempted to steal a piece of university furniture from one of the dorms. To us, as to maybe a number of students, this did not seem to be a criminal act but more along the lines of a college prank. Unfortunately this carefree attitude is shared by neither the police nor the courts. It is theft, pure and simple, and subject to the rules of the law. So as a result we were apprehended and arrested. This is, in fact, one of the most frightening experiences of all.

One's initial thoughts are of the type, "My God! What have I done? This could ruin my life," which in essense is true. We had no idea what the consequences of our actions would be.

We are both seniors and the idea that we might be thrown out of school was a very real one. This would indeed have been a permanent scar on both our lives.

After we had entertained these notions the thought of a criminal record surfaced. Let's be realistic. When one applies for a job the stain of a criminal record is a large one despite what anyone might say to the contrary. The anxiety we both were feeling at this point was to say the least, intense.

Then there is the question of how all this will affect one's family. "What will they think of me?"

The possible consequences quickly pile up as do the feelings of distress and helplessness.

Once we were released from custody there was no relief, simply mounting apprehension about the future. Arraignment was scheduled for the next morning and thinking about that did not help either of us in getting much sleep that night.

At our arraignment the trial date was set, which in our case was about two weeks from that day. This waiting period was also filled with sleepless nights and such anxiety is hardly helpful to one's studies. The possibilities of what might happen to us were always present in our minds frequently dominating our thoughts.

In speaking with our lawyer we were certainly not led to be optimistic. The possibility of a criminal record was definitely there. At the very least the monetary penalty would be substantial.

By the time our trial date arrived neither of us was very hopeful. The trial proceedings themselves are a rather shaky experience. The judge spoke of a possible jail sentence. This could have been to scare us maybe not.

What finally resulted was that we were granted a continuance without finding, accompanied by a considerable amount of court fees.

This was the case however, only because our lawyer assured the judge that we would write this letter, the feeling being that maybe we could prevent other students from doing as we had. The judge, it may be said, initially favored more severe action.

One might think that the penalty we suffered was not that bad. Remember, however, if you're caught stealing university property there will be no more letters and the only alternative is in the form of stiffer penalties, jail inclusive.

People with a cause

I was talking with another one of those astute campus politicos the other day, the kind that seem to infest our campus but are conspicuously absent from any student government organizations, and he made a very interesting remark. "You know," he said, "everybody on this campus has a cause. Everybody!" He was right. I had never really contemplated the immensity of political awareness on campus, so I decided it was about time.

Figuring why not start at the top — or the bottom, depending on your opinion of student government — I took in last Wednesday's student senate meeting. Point 1. The senate voted to send telegrams to the President and the Attorney General of the United States urging commutation of the prison sentence of the five Puerto Rican nationalists who were convicted of attempted murder in a 1954 House of Representatives incident. It seems that these five politically oppressed saints simply stood in the House gallery and, while the chamber was packed with Congressmen, decided to enliven the festivities by blasting away at the legislators with machine guns. I guess the senate thinks that "they wuz framed."

And then I listened to Charlotte Allen and Albert Sparks debate on WMUA concerning the showing of "pornographic" movies on campus. As usual, it centered on exploitation of women, filth, degradation, and other adjectives descriptive of anti-porn feelings. That pornography has a clientele on campus, that some people feel that they're adult enough to make up their own minds, and that there is a First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States that guarantees cultural freedom, is of secondary importance. Or so it seems. A self-chosen few have decided to speak for a majority of students who haven't, indicative of the apathetic and justified feelings of many students to such banal discussions.

If you look through the Collegian you'll also find people with a cause. The Revolutionary Student Brigade is sponsoring a trip to New York City on November 20 for a conference on the International Situation, War, Revolution, and the Internationalist Tasks of the American People. If you can repeat that, you deserve to belong in our off-the-wall campus revolutionary group.

Then, I found out I could attend the Mao Tse-Tung lecture series and hear from a number of marvelous speakers. But since Mao is credited with killing over 100,000 peasants during his revolutionary beginnings, I thought it would be marvelous to have some comparable genocidal butchers on the rostrum. I suggested that maybe we could get Richard Speck, or The Texas Chain Saw murderers, or maybe Charlie Manson, or even a triple header on the same night: Genghis Khan, Idi Amin, and Adolph Hitler. It would be exhilarating to hear such renowned speakers, and would greatly enhance the Mao Tse-Tung lecture series.

Of course, even with a cause, some people do stray. They pick a loser, instead of a winner. But at UMass, it isn't the people with the losing cause; it's the cause — with the losing people!

Preregistration Again

Last Sunday's "New York Times" devoted a whole special section to a survey of education and career development. It was apparent that a great deal of research and preparation went into this, revealing that the quality of education in public schools was at the very least not up to par. Some private colleges were also surveyed to reveal the necessity of change in subject matter because much of it does little in the way of preparation for the student when he or she leaves the institution. There was also an extensive survey into the quality of Black education.

Okay, very good, I was pleased to read what seemed to be a honest attempt to reveal what really goes on within those hallowed halls of "learning". BUT, out of the thirty-four page special section, a good two-thirds of the space was filled with advertisements. And guess what the advertisements were of? Private nursery schools, private secondary schools, private colleges and rich kid camps.

This seemed to me to say that if you have some money, you don't really have to worry about the problems inherent in public education. I was kind of mad. I will concede that the selling of ad space is an economic necessity for a newspaper; but, I think the editorial choice for this section was in very poor taste, or even unwise. The advertisements offered a viable alternative to the poor quality of public education only to the wealthy.

Let's forget about those advertisements for now and talk about what's going on here and the quality of your college education. Here we are at preregistration time again. Time to choose your weapons. That's harsh; sorry.

I've got a suggestion. Pretend you don't have a major for just a while and no required courses. Then, look through the schedule book and pick out the courses of things that you'd really like to learn about; even just one. Then, (now don't chicken out, this is just pretend), pick up your number two pencil and fill in the numbers of those or that special course on your very own red computer sheet.

It's too late now to make any real differences in the quality of your courses this semester. Don't tear your hair out; it will soon be over. I know how it is. I've been meaning to go to my procrastination class all semester, but I just can't seem to get there.

If you've got those ol' getting to the end of the semester blues, I've got a few remedies. Mostly, get your mind off it all places that are right here on campus. You could go to the craft shop across from the hatch; the people are very friendly there and will show you how to make wonderful things. Or, there's the greenhouses or the barns down near Boyden. How about Herter gallery, there's a show now on Harry Houdini. There are rock collections and stuffed birds and animals in Morrill. You could go to the Collegian offices and watch the teletype machines for the news services in action and see what's going on in the rest of the world.

I found all these places while skipping my procrastination class. I think I might have seen you there once or twice.

Thanksgiving of the future

I usually don't dedicate my column but I'd like to dedicate this one to Seal, the very attractive woman who works behind the counter at the Hatch and to Rhonda (surprise), whose friendship and caring has come to mean so very much to me.

In a world where I pass thousands of people everyday who I will never know and who will never know me, these two people have made my life a little bit easier, a little bit brighter. This is my way of saying thanks.

The day was bright and chilly. The sun reflected off the snow covering the countryside and made the ground radiation glow a slight orange.

I explained to the state survival committee (SSC), that we wanted to go to grandma's house for Thanksgiving but they didn't seem to understand what I was talking about. It didn't matter though, because they loosened their restrictions enough to allow us to go.

Transportation was difficult but we were lucky enough to find an old sled and a horse to pull it. If only the folks back at city training could see us sliding along the snow, they'd think we were crazy. But since me, my wife and child were bringing the turkey to grandma's we didn't care.

We passed through the border areas and decontamination centers with relative ease but it wasn't until we got to grandma's village that we ran into a little trouble.

"Okay, hold it right there!"

"What's the matter officer?"

"Officer? I'm state guard 502, eastern sector village 5A. Who are you?"

"Well I'm Tom, this is my wife Sandy and our son, Billy."

"I don't know what you're talking about friend. Better let me see your passes."

"Certainly."

"Let's see, you're state worker 318C, eastern sector, village 12 and you're state worker, 809L same village. Oh, you two have a living contract."

"We're married."

"What?"

"Never mind."

"And you have a dependent. Number D-315."

"He's our son."

"Look, I don't know what you're talking about but if you keep giving me a hard time I'm going to call mental health! Now let me see your destination papers."

"We're going to grandma's house."

"According to this you're visiting citizen-retired H-119, this village. What's your purpose?"

"Purpose? It's Thanksgiving."

"Thanksgiving?"

"An old custom my family... I mean the people who brought me up observe."

"Citizen-retired H-119 was your caretaker?"

"Right."

"So why do you see her now?"

"Because we like her."

"Strange... Well what's this Thanksgiving business?"

"It's when everyone gets together and gives thanks for, well, just being together. You see we have this big turkey..."

"You're not carrying a concealed turkey are you?"

"We've got a permit."

"All right. But tell me something, who are you thanking and why?"

"We're thanking each other for just being there. For caring."

"The joke's on you pal, they have to care. It's the law."

"No, they have to provide for us. We're taking the time to say thanks for all the extras."

"You people are crazy. You're not like everyone else. This Thanksgiving business is a waste of time. Buying all that turkey and stuff is a waste of money and traveling here through the affected areas, it's not worth it."

"Tell me officer, has anyone ever taken the time to thank you for helping or for just being alive."

"Never!"

"It shows."

YOUR BIRTHDAY

by Stella Wilder

Thursday, November 18 — Born today, you are one of those scrupulously truthful individuals who cannot bring himself to lie, even when to do so would be to save himself from suffering. A persistent individual, you never give up on a [illegible]ject or endeavor without first [illegible]tigating every possible ave[illegible] activity that might bring su[illegible]. With deep-rooted ties to family and friends, you find it extremely difficult to act in any way that would bring any kind of suffering or disgrace down upon their heads; on the other hand, even to insure their happiness is not sufficient reason for you to change your ways.

You are one of those mentally alert and active individuals who is forever fighting against one or another specter of the mind. You have been gifted with executive ability and the kind of aggressive forcefulness it takes to delegate the right kind of authority to the right kind of person. Wise in the ways of the world of commerce, you know how to take an idea and develop it into a feasible project that is both gainful and interesting. Excitement is not for you a lure to action; newness and difference, however, are.

Although you do not particularly enjoy work that takes you into public life, you are not poorly equipped to partake of such a life. You know how to speak well, succinctly, clearly, persuasively; you know how to delegate authority, how to accept directives as well as give them, and how to save a seemingly lost situation by the application of past experience and recently acquired knowledge.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Friday, November 19

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Take care that you don't dissipate your energy early in the day. You will be in need of speed and accuracy late in the day.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Seek recreation during afternoon hours. If you insist upon working at the same quick pace morning, noon, and night, you are asking for trouble.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — A half truth is as detrimental to your future as a half lie. Don't fool yourself into thinking negatives are positive.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Unite thought to deed so that ultimately, you end up performing precisely as you had planned to perform.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — A youngster's first contact with evil may be a frightening experience. Stand ready to help pick up the pieces.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Continuous effort is required if you are to experience the kind of results you hope for. Don't expect benefits to accrue to the lazy.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Indiscriminate employment of methods both ancient and outmoded may cause you to lose out on gains you thought certain.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Personality makes the difference between success and failure today in your contacts with men and women of influence and authority.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Build up a backlog of knowledge that you can use to impress higher-ups when the chips are down. Direct energy toward a new venture.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Search your heart and mind for the motives behind your present behavior. They may be more understandable than you thought.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Whatever you can see, you can in some way change. Make an effort to sell your point of view to one who could aid you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Follow another's argument carefully; otherwise, you may find that you are responding to something that wasn't actually said -- or even implied.

Bet on drunken gamblers to fight

By KRISTIN GOFF
Associated Press Writer

WILMINGTON, Del. [AP] — William Sullivan, president of the New England Patriots, testified Wednesday that angry gamblers may have played a part in a serious disturbance that followed a New York Jets-Patriots game in Foxboro, Mass., last month.

Sullivan described "a very bad series of scenes" in which rowdy fans, some of whom he said had been drinking heavily, took to the football field after New England defeated the Jets 41-7 on Oct. 18.

He said security people later told him some of the rowdy fans were gamblers who were upset by the size of the victory margin in the game.

His testimony came in the third day of a trial over Delaware's Scoreboard lottery which offers the first state-operated sports betting in the nation.

The National Football League filed the suit in U.S. District Court seeking damages and a permanent injunction against sports betting here.

Sullivan made his comments about the possible influence of gambling during cross-examination, but focused most of his testimony on a description of his club's efforts to keep all undesirable elements out of the stadium.

He said the Patriots initiated a publicity effort to deter any further rodyism.

The NFL called Sullivan as part of a series of witnesses who have been arguing that both illegal and legal sports betting threatens to undermine the integrity of pro football and change the nature of what the NFL says is its image as a family oriented sport.

The NFL also has charged that Delaware is violating its property rights by tying the Scoreboard lottery to football games. J. Robert Carey, the president of NFL Properties, told the court that this was the first suit that he knew of in which the league had made that claim on the basis of team cities rather than team nicknames.

NFL Properties is a subsidiary owned by the 28 member clubs and primarily attempts to protect the league's image by issuing trademark licenses to products which meet their standards, Carey said.

Finley loses another player, Rudi heads for Anaheim

By KEN FRANCKLING

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI] — The California Angels acquired their second free agent All-star outfielder in 24 hours Wednesday when they signed a multi-year-contract with Joe Rudi as the nucleus of Charlie Finley's former Oakland Powerhouse continued to disintegrate.

One hour after agent Jerry Kapstein announced Rudi's move down he road to Anaheim, Calif., other multi-year agreements were signed by former Philadelphia Phillies' second baseman Dave Cash with the Montreal Expos, and ex-Oakland shortstop Bert Campaneris with the Texas Rangers.

With the departure of Rudi and Campaneris, Oakland owner Charles O. Finley now has lost four players from last year's A's squad. On Tuesday, the Angels acquired outfielder Don Baylor and the San Diego Padres took first baseman-catcher Gene Tenace.

Angels' general manager Harry Dalton was ecstatic over his successful negotiations with Kapstein, who had 10 of baseball's 22 free agents in his stable.

"We see so many bright days ahead for California that, if I have a smile on my face, I hope you'll forgive me," Dalton told a Providence News Conference ending 11 days of negotiations with Kapstein.

"We are in search of a championship ballclub in Anaheim. We think we are extremely fortunate to be in a position to go into the free agent market and sign players like Don Baylor and Joe Rudi," Dalton said.

The agreements give the Angels an All-star outfield of Bobby Bonds, Baylor and Rudi, one of the best clutch hitters in the game. The 30-year-old Rudi batted .270 for Oakland last season with 13 homers and 94 runs batted in.

"We're pleased to be going to Anaheim," Rudi said. "They are a progressive organization and we are going to do everything we can to win."

He avoided comment on Finley when asked about his feelings toward Oakland.

"I had a lot of great moments there. There were a lot of great guys, but that's behind me now," Rudi said. "I'm looking to the future."

In cash, Montreal gets an All-star from the Phillies' successful drive to the National League East Division Pennant last season. The Expos had the worst record in major league baseball last season, but they're also hopeful of signing slugging outfielder Reggie Jackson, their no. 1 choice in the Nov. 4 re-entry draft of free agents who played out their options.

"The addition of Dave Cash gives the Expos a tremendous capability to become an instant contender," Kapstein said. "I don't know where Philadelphia is going to replace him."

In signing Campaneris, Texas fulfilled an off-season goal to move All-star shortstop Toby Harrah to third base next year

"Campy was a catalyst at Oakland and he will be a catalyst at Texas for many years," Kapstein said.

Kapstein said other agreements will probably be reached later in the week, some possibly by Thursday. He also represents Don Gullett, Rollie Fingers, Bobby Grich, Wayne Garland and Doyle Alexander.

Spikers seeded last

The UMass women's volleyball team embarks on a long and ambitious journey to Edinborough, Penn. today to participate in the Eastern Regional Volleyball tournament, being held over the upcoming weekend.

The spikers, who are seeded 16th in a 16 team field, will begin tournament play Friday morning when they meet the University of Maryland, the eighth seed in the tourney.

Following that encounter, the UMass spikers will then meet 12th seeded Syracuse and fourth seeded Brockport.

"There are four divisions with four teams in each division," said UMass volleyball coach Dianne Thompson in explaining the set-up of the tourney. "Each team will play three games on Friday, and the leaders in each division will advance to the championship bracket."

Every team will be guaranteed at least four matches in tournament play.

Bowl bids up for grabs

The Orange Bowl, which apparently has lost both top-ranked Pittsburgh and seventh-ranked Maryland to other major post-season college football games, has narrowed its choices of an opponent for the Big Eight Conference champion to Notre Dame and the runners-up in the Pacific Eight and Big Ten Conferences.

A committee spokesman said Wednesday that Orange Bowl representatives would be at the three games involving those teams Saturday. Notre Dame entertains Miami (Fla.) while Michigan meets Ohio State for the Big Ten title and Southern Cal plays UCLA for the PAC Eight crown. The Big Ten and PAC Eight winners receive automatic bids to the Rose Bowl.

No bowl bids can be officially extended until 6 p.m. EST Saturday.

There are 12 major college bowl games scheduled as part of the post-season festivities, and although bids are not allowed to officially go out before next Saturday, many schools have already indicated their preferences.

Here's a look at possible pairings for the bowls:

Rose Bowl — Ben Ten champion (Michigan or Ohio State) vs. Pacific Eight champion (UCLA or Southern California).

Cotton Bowl — Maryland vs. Southwest Conference champion (Texas Tech or Houston).

Orange Bowl — Big Eight Conference champion (Iowa St., Colorado or Nebraska) vs. Notre Dame, Pacific Eight runnerup or Big Ten rummerup.

Sugar Bowl — Pittsburgh vs. Southeastern Conference champion (Georgia).

Gator Bowl — Oklahoma, Florida, Penn State, Houston, Texas Tech all under consideration.

Peach Bowl — North Carolina is tops on the list of "most wanted" if bowl can land tar heels, opponent will probably come from Big Eight.

Liberty Bowl — Alabama has expressed a desire to play there, provided opponent is not from the Big Eight. Crimson Tide has limited choices to PAC Eight runnerup, Penn State, North Carolina or Southwest Conference runnerup.

Fiesta Bowl — Wyoming, the Western Athletic Conference champion, is the host and committee members would like either Oklahoma, the Big Ten runnerup or Penn State as an opponent.

Astro-Bluebonnet Bowl — Most likely a Big Eight club vs. an SWC team.

Sun Bowl — Colorado, if it doesn't go to the Orange Bowl, is very interested in playing in this one. Opponent would probably come from SWC.

Tangerine Bowl — Winner of Saturday's Tennessee-Kentucky game will probably earn a bid. Missouri was a strong possibility as an opponent but Tigers' final exams coincide with bowl date and school has said it would not accept bid. Other Big Eight schools are being considered as well as Penn State and the Southwest Conference also-rans.

Independence Bowl — Southland Conference champion (McNeese or Texas-Arlington) vs. Tulsa, Rutgers or San Diego State.

Icemen go, NEC stays

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

After trailing 2-1 at the end of the first period, the UMass hockey team got its act together and erupted for four goals in both the second and third periods, enroute to a 9-3 thrashing of New England College last night at Orr Rink.

Frank Snow, Paul Hurley and Mike Merchant each had two goals for the Minutemen. Bob White, Scott McChesney and Chris Lamby had single scores for UMass.

"We settled down and started to play position hockey after the first period," said UMass mentor Jack Canniff. "We wore their defense down with our forechecking. It was the big difference in the game," he added.

New England opened the scoring with a power play goal by defenseman Charles Barney on a shot from the point at 4:22. UMass came back to tie the score at 15:36, when Frank Snow scored on a breakaway goal, as he put a nice move on NEC goalie Rick St. Laurent.

John Wallace put the visitors on top with a short handed goal with just 1:06 left in the period, on a two on one break when the Minutemen were changing on the fly.

Snow tied the game for the second time with a goal at 4:08 of the second period. Just a short time later, UMass had an apparent goal disallowed when the referee had blown his whistle after a scramble for the puck in front of the net.

The hitting began to get hard and heavy at this point. UMass captain Mike Merchant took exception to an NEC player firing the puck at goalie Dana Redmond after the player had been ruled offside, and was given a two minute penalty for charging.

Paul Hurley scored the next two goals, his first and second as a member of the varsity, to give UMass a 4-2 lead. His first came on a power play at 11:13 and the other at 14:05, when he intercepted a clearing shot by St. Laurent and fired it into the empty net.

However, just 16 seconds later, Bob Brown scored for NEC to cut the lead to 4-3. Mike Merchant got an insurance goal for UMass at 17:43 to give the Minutemen a 5-3 lead.

UMass continued to pour it on in the third period as Merchant got his second goal of the night, a short handed one with just 41 seconds gone by in the period. UMass was playing a man short because Redmond had been called for delay of game at 19:27 of the second period when he came far out of his net and smothered the puck when he was past the faceoff circle.

A Bob White shot went off St. Laurent's glove and into the net at 8:55 to boost the Minutemen's lead to 7-3. Scott McChesney and Chris Lamby got the final UMass goals with the former's coming at 13:47 and the latter's at 18:50.

"It's always nice to get that first win," commented Canniff.

AROUND THE CREASE: New England is predominately a young club with no seniors on the team... It was surprising that coach Mickey Goulet went with St. Laurent in goal over John Stevenson, who had 53 saves against UMass last year in a game won by the Minutemen, 5-0.... Defenseman Brian Kittredge played despite being bothered by a hand injury.... The Minutemen's next game is on Saturday when they face the University of Lowell in an away game.

The women's swim team opened its season last night with a win over Mt. Holyoke College and previously unbeaten Williams College at the Kendall Pool at Mt. Holyoke. The final score was University of Massachusetts 87, Williams College 81, and host Mt. Holyoke 64.

UMass opened the meet by taking the lead immediately when it won the 200 yard Medley Relay. Strong performances by Nancy Maffucci, Mary Ann Totin, Debbie Schwartz, and Teresa Totin enabled UMass to win the first event.

Sophomore Teresa Totin and freshman Schwartz impressed both the crowd and the coaches who were present. They both took first place honors in two individual events. Totin, who hails from Parkland, New Jersey, put the team ahead to stay early in the meet with a victory in the 100 year Individual Medley. For the medley each swimmer is required to swim each of the four strokes: breast, free, butterfly, and back. Her time in winning was 1:05.1 minutes.

Teresa's next win came only ten minutes later in the 50 yard breaststroke. Her time was 34.5 seconds.

Debbie Schwartz won back to back events in the 50 yard butterfly and in the 100 yard butterfly. The Weston, Ma. native had times of 30.5 seconds and 1:05.35 minutes respectively.

The meet was still in doubt until the scores from the diving competition were posted. Susie Strobil, a freshman, and Linda Shuld, a junior, placed first and second in both events on the 1 meter diving board. Strobil attempted a dive which rates 1.8 on a scale of 2.0 for the first time in over a year. Her execution of the dive was flawless.

Coach Eve Atkinson and diving coach Doug Forsyth were both pleased with the team's performance. Atkinson had this to say while savoring the win, "We've been putting in two hours a day since the beginning of September so I had a feeling that we'd turn in a consistent performance. We had good times for our first meet of the season, and as the season rolls along the times will improve. The fact that this was Williams last meet of the year makes it more pleasing."

Celtics pop Hawks

BOSTON [UPI] — Charlie Scott, John Havlicek, Sidney Wicks and Jo Jo White combined for 75 points and Boston outscored Atlanta 24-1 in the last half of the second quarter as the Celtics pummeled the Hawks 104-91 Wednesday night.

The victory was the third in four games for the Celtics in Dave Cowen's absense. The Hawks suffered their 27th straight defeat on the road, just five off the league record set by Baltimore in the 1953-54 season.

Down 37-27 with 6:13 left in the half, Boston ripped of 16 straight points in a 3:46 span before Atlanta's Tom Barker sank a free throw. The Celtics then ran off the last eight points in the half, with Scott pacing the overall burst with eight of the 24 points.

The Hawks connected for just three field goals in the second quarter, shooting a pathetic 17.5 per cent and scoring just 12 points in the 12 minutes.

Scott and Havlicek both finished with 20 points, Wicks dumped in 19 and White added another 16 points.

Barker led Atlanta with 20 points. Mike Sojourner helped with 18 and John Drew had 16.

Bucks go hunting for men

"When I came into baseball, it was astute men with astute organizations who ran the winning teams. Now, if you need a player and you don't have one in your system, you take out your checkbook." — Jim Palmer upon receiving his third Cy Young Award.

The problem with modern day sports is summed up right there in those few words of wisdom. The wonderful world of sports has become an arena where the outside dealings of players owners, and agents has become more important than the actual sporting events themselves. The recent baseball free agent draft was yet another aspect of the insanity which has plagued sports throughout this decade.

The sporting scene has begun to resemble a three ring circus, and yes, they are making many of us laugh. Reggie Jackson stating he'd like a $3 million contract. For a player who has yet to hit .300 in his career, and has a lifetime .267 batting average, let's be serious! And how about the Red Sox signing Bill Campbell to a five year $1,000,000 contract. Not bad for a relief pitcher who may enter 100 games a year, and pitch somewhere in the vicinity of 200 innings.

What if Ted Williams, or Stan Musial were playing today; what would they be worth? Within only a few years, players such as Julius Erving, Jackson, and Larry Csonka have made the "Six Million Dollar Man" look like petty cash. Just what brought this ridiculous circumstance about; well, it's a combination of many factors.

For many years, believe it or not, the players were getting shafted by the owners. The average salary in the NHL before the arrival of Bobby Orr, was somewhere in the vicinity of $25,000. That's almost the base salary of major league baseball players today. It's no wonder that Weston Adams was a wealthy man, selling out the Garden game after game, and returning very little of the profits back to the players. The players began to question these practices, and others pertaining to them as pieces of property, subject to their owners. Thus, in 1971 and 1974 two important cases were brought to the courts, questioning the validity of the sporting empire.

In 1971, Curtis C. Flood challenged baseball's antitrust laws, specifically Rule 9 which stated "if a player refuses to sign a contract before March 1, of the upcoming season then he must still play for the club, for 1 year... at no less than 80 per cent of his current contract."

Flood, after 12 years with the St. Louis Cardinals, was traded in 1969 to the Philadelphia Phillies. He refused the trade, (who can blame him?) and when the Commissioner of Baseball, Bowie Kuhn, disregarded his plea for free agent status, he decided to take the matter to the courts.

His case was taken all the way to the Supreme Court, where it was decided that the court had no jurisdiction over the matter and that Congress would have to remedy the situation. Flood lost his appeal, but he opened the doors to a brighter future for major league participants.

Again in 1974, another major leaguer was taken to court, only this time it was the NFL, and Joe Kapp vs. Pete Rozelle.

Now, Kapp was questioning the validity of the "Rozelle Rule" with regards to compensation should a player play out his option. He questioned whether the owners were limiting a player to one city, and one set of terms, thus limiting his right as an individual to sell his talents on an open market. Kapp won his case, with the courts ruling that the "Rozelle Rule" and others were unreasonable restraints on trade.

The impact these cases have had on the world of sports is being witnessed today, long term multi year pacts, option years being non-existent, and players buckling at the sight of crisp green dollar bills. One has to wonder if this is really what Flood and Kapp strived for.

Sure some of the big name players make out great under the new setup, but haven't the superstars always been compensated. And then of course there's the lawyers, and agants who love the new system. The Eaglesons, Kapsteins, and Fleischers earn 10 per cent of the players' contract, while the lawyers battle the hundreds of sporting cases in our courts today.

The question then becomes who are the losers, owners, marginal ballplayers, and, ah yes, the fans? Inflated payrolls hurt the owner, and the marginal bench warmer is left a smaller piece of the pie, after a million dollar contract.

Last but not least the ultimate loser is the fan who watches and supports his home town team, only to see the words "loyalty," and "pride" thrown out the window in favor of that ever elusive buck. And who ends up paying these salaries? That's right, Franky and Francine Fan. Or didn't you hear the Red Sox announced a 50 cent increase on all tickets for next season? Welcome to Boston, Mr. Campbell.

Wild About Harry

Houdini
"The Man Who Never Refused a Challenge."

The Herter Art Gallery is currently presenting an exhibition on the master-mind escape artist of all times — HARRY HOUDINI. Houdini created a legend that gained momentum with every unbelievable and death-defying escape he attempted. He always succeeded in thrilling his audience to the point of hysteria by creating devices and accepting challenges that appeared humanly impossible. Houdini escaped by his sheer charisma, physical strength, his genius at out-smarting all skeptics and his need to be the greatest in the world in his art.

On exhibit in the gallery are the strait-jacket he escaped from by contorting his body to the extreme of dislocating his limbs, the iron milk jug from which he escaped after being completely submerged in water and other restraints and tricks that he used throughout his career. The exhibit also includes original photographs, articles, posters, challenges, and letters. Some of the items on display have not been exhibited since Houdini's death 50 years ago from this Halloween.

The exhibit will run through Saturday, Nov. 24. The gallery has expanded its hours for the duration of the show, Mon.-Sat. 10-4 and Sunday 2-5.

Dancing from Hartford to Spain

THE LIVELY HARTFORD BALLET

by Sharon True

On Sunday, October 31, the Hartford Ballet, under the direction of Michael Uthoff produced a highly entertaining evening of dance at the Academy of Music in Northampton.

The four dances performed, "Grand Pas de Dix", "Tom Dula", "Aves Miribiles" and "Leggieros", were quite impressive due to the variety in the program and the energy and vigor of the company.

"Grand Pas de Dix" was a classical piece choreographed by Dennis Nahat after Marius Petipas and with the exception of the Adagio, this was a very fast-moving dance which some of the dancers had trouble handling technically.

For example, some of the women's pirouettes were off-balance, the men's entrechats (beats of the legs) were sloppy and occasionally some of the dancers were not with the music.

However it was almost easy to overlook these problems and just be swept away with the surging energy of this dance which included many lifts, quick leaps and turns along with an intense level of concentration by the dancers.

The most notable performance in this dance was a solo by Jeanne Tears, whose technique was precise; but I was most captivated by her austere yet somehow sensual expressiveness.

"Tom Dula", choreographed by Michael Uthoff with music by Welling and Walach was a country-style ballet set in Wilkes County, North Carolina during the late 19th century.

The plot essentially was this: Tom Dula is engaged to Ann Melton, but has an affair with the 'wild and beautiful' Laura Foster; for this jealous Ann kills Laura, then Tom claims responsibility for the murder to protect Ann and finally the sheriff, who loves Ann, has Tom hanged.

The dance was one of contrasts; one between the lyric, aristocratic Ann Melton and the wild, bawdy Laura Foster, with another being the contrasts between the tender duets of the lovers and the flamboyant folk dances of the townspeople.

The contrasts, and the insistent, foreboding beat of the bagpipe music produced a very moving dramatic tension which culminated with the shadow of Tom Dula's hanging being projected on a colored screen upstage as the townspeople backed away, leaving Ann to her tortured conscience.

The third dance, "Aves Miribiles" was a modern ballet duet also choreographed by Michael Uthoff in which the emotional tone between the two dancers oscillated between love, anxiety and anger. The turbulent, other-worldly quality of their movement made it seem as if the dance were taking place in the rushing waters of the sea.

Needless to say it was an intriguing dramatic dance, and it also ended with an eerie "shadow effect".

Completing the remarkable variety of the program which had featured ballet in the classical, folk and modern styles was "Leggieros", a ballet in a whimsical style.

There were many chuckles from the audience as the bickering girls would bourre across the floor and bump one another off-stage, or when they would flirt and scramble for the cutest boys.

Other memorable moments included a boy who partnered another boy due to a shortage of girls, and a girl's gallant attempts to get a bookworm more interested in her than in his book.

One of the dancers who attempted to do a little mime scene was, unfortunately, not a very convincing mimist, and consequently I found this to be a somewhat trite and dull scene in an otherwise lively dance.

To anyone seeking an entertaining evening of dance, I would recommend seeing the Hartford Ballet, an energetic company with an exciting variety of styles to suit every taste.

by Sharon True

There's something incredibly exhilarating about stamping your feet, as the Ballet Nacional Festivales de Espana emphatically demonstrated to the near-capacity audience at the Fine Arts Center last Friday night.

Add to this a fascinating set by Pablo Picasso, colorfully extravagant costumes, a Spanish guitarist and singer on stage with the dancers, clapping hands and clacking castinets and you have a formula for a remarkably unique — and very Spanish — dance performance.

I found the male dancers more exciting to watch than the female dancers largely because their footwork was more wildly dramatic, consisting of mid-air crossovers with their legs, breathtaking spins and knee-drops, whereas the women were more restrained (partly due to their heavy and sometimes restrictive costumes) and were more distinguished by their undulating arm and torso movements, and of course by their castinets.

I observed a number of interesting differences between this Spanish style and what you might very generally call American style.

For example, the Spanish have a distinct aloofness of expression when they dance, which every now and then breaks with a smile to let you know how much they enjoy performing and being applauded.

The dancers always held their heads very proudly and often curled their arms above their heads with palms turned out instead of in, as is customary in American dance. They also did some stylized "bull-fighting" and an unusual movement where they alternately raised and rotated their shoulders.

American ballet duets usually involve partnering, but there was little partnering in this Spanish ballet — rather the couple tended to dance at each other.

Outstanding performances were given by Mario de la Vega who danced several scintillating, staccato solos, Maria del Sol with her bewitching flamenco dancing, Jose MaMolero on guitar, and Juan Jose who sang and was as much involved with the dancing as the dancers were — he even danced himself at one point.

In the final dance of the evening, "Jota de la Dolores", choreographed by A. Lorca, the dancers performed with such exuberance and precision that they brought the house down — and obliged by giving the audience an encore, later waving goodbye after their final bows.

Indeed, my only criticisms of the performance are that it was too long, and that at one uncomfortable moment the admittedly difficult synchronization of hand clapping, guitar picking, singing and dancing seemed to just fall apart, possibly due to a dancer who blocked the view of the guitarist who was playing for another dancer's solo.

The Proposition

At 8:00 Monday, the Program Council will present an outstanding performance by talented entertainers. "The Proposition", from Cambridge, having given over 5,000 widely acclaimed performances, will appear in the Campus Center Auditorium.

The show will be a unique experience, as no two shows given by this troupe are ever the same. Their whole presentation is improvised, based on audience-suggested topics, words, situations, events; in short, almost anything you could imagine. The result is a show which is entirely new and different from any other. It will be partly musical, ingeniously blending comedy, parody and satire.

"The Proposition" has played to capacity houses across the country in major cities and at many colleges and universities. They have been revued as being penetrating, vibrant, lunatic, brilliant, enchanting...

"The Proposition" is reputedly the best improvisational musical political revue in the country. For one dollar, this is a proposition that you can't possibly pass up.

STAGE WEST, WEST SPRINGFIELD
NOV. 13-DEC. 11
reviewed by James F. B. Sawyer

Stage West's 10th anniversary season opened with a delightful presentation of Anthony Shaffer's Sleuth. A professional production, it was under the very able direction of Grover Dale, a Tony-nominated director.

On the grounds of the Eastern States Exposition, Stage West offers the only resident professional theatre in the Baystate and this current production is affirmative proof that this is so. Starring Peter Walker and Chris Romilly, Sleuth is a detective—comedy—drama—joyful celebration of game playing.

When an aging English detective novelist discovers that his wife is about to be stolen away by a handsome young travel agent, he does the only logical thing for an English sportsman; he invites him to his country manor to discuss stealing his wife's jewels.

Of course.

After an elaborate train of creative thought, the author shoots the travel agent in the back of the head... with a blank cartridge. But we, the audience, don't find this out until after intermission.

Then, an inspector from the local constabulary comes onto the scene and proceeds to find evidence of the travel agent's death. The author finally is reduced to very nearly believing that he has committed the crime when...

Peter Walker makes his Stage West debut as Andrew Wyke, the detective novelist. Mr. Walker lends an enthusiasm to his role of Wyke, the avid games player that makes us sympathize with him, despite his despicable habit of playing and enjoying his games at the expense of others' happiness.

Chris Romilly is a veteran of Stage West. As Milo Tindle, the young travel agent who has made the mistake of falling in love with Wyke's wife, Romilly maintains the coolness and idealism that are so unexplainably blended in that character.

But the real star(s) of the evening were the persons and—or persons responsible for the program design. Sleuth is a play containing only two characters. Yet in the program were listed no less than five actors whose roles were all played by the two actors on stage. As if this were not enough, in the back of the program, where histories of the actors are given, histories for the other three, non-existent actors are also given.

But the fact remains that Sleuth is a play having only two characters... Now wait a minute.

What I really mean to say is... wonderful.

Wonderful, wonderful, wonderful.

Not that that is the only word that applies. Superb would fit rather nicely also. Stage West has far outdistanced my expectations and acclimation to local theatre. I look forward to my next experience with Stage West's brand of professionalism with the greatest eagerness.

By all means, anyone interested in experiencing real theatre, theatre with all the touches student theatre does not have the time or facilities to provide should call 736-7092 for ticket information. Performances will be now until December 11.

Students interested in getting a clear look at the goals of professional theatre are enthusiastically encouraged to see this and all other Stage West productions.

Medea is the message

by Jeffrey Coyne

In a premiere rehearsal reading at Kirby Theater last weekend the Amherst College Department of Dramatic Arts presented a new version, in English, of the Greek tragedy Medea by Euripides. This exciting new version translated by Jean-Claude van Itallie featured Nancy Charney as Medea and George Reinholt as Jason.

Ms. Charney is a highly accomplished actress who captivated the audience last Saturday night the moment her grievous lamenting began. She has an extremely powerful voice with wonderful articulation that subordinated her characterization of the majestic Medea. Ms. Charney is a demanding actress and was the highlight of the production.

George Reinholt's presentation of Jason was delivered with a good sense of comic timing, which unfortunately persisted through the more dramatic sections of the play. He also has a wonderfully resonant voice and is quite eloquent in his speech. The character Jason was extremely sexist in his attitudes and one couldn't help feel that Mr. Reinholt was also.

Rosemary Quinn opened the production with an emphatic soliloquy as the Nurse. Mark Jaster presented the Tutor, who appeared a bit overly antiquated. We have seen him in other Amherst productions as old men. Richard Fancy's interpretation of Creon seemed to lack the statliness of a king, the problem was compounded by a highly nasal voice.

The traditional chorus of the Greek tragedy was played by three women. Itallie's interpretation of the chorus gave them a somewhat feminist attitude. Although the added third dimension of the chorus in this production is very refreshing, the women had to be careful not to sound whiney. The writer himself even put in a performance as the messenger.

Once again, Amherst College has come through with a top-notch production, but in future we hope to see the acting left to the actors and the play writing to playwrights.

O Shakespeare

Macbeth
performed by the Boston Shakespeare Co.
reviewed by Mark Leccese

"O Shakespeare, thou art life," elated Ben Johnson several centuries ago, and today the Boston Shakespeare Company continues to inspire that elation.

The Company last week opened its lusty version of Macbeth, which it will continue to perform, in repertory with The Taming of the Shrew, through January of the new year.

The performance was a fiery one. Each actor took his or her character to the emotional limit the play allows. The roles of the three witches (played here by two women and a man) were done with a particular intensity that made the wierd sisters (and a wierd brother, in this case) all the more bizarre.

In an interesting display of stage versatility, two of the company's actors alternate the lead roles of Macbeth and Macduff on alternate performance nights. When Ramon Ramos, an actor born in Puerto Rico who has studied with members of the Royal Shakespeare Company, plays Macbeth, his counter-part David Wiles, a black actor from Cincinnati, plays Macduff. And vice versa. Both men are splendid Shakespearian actors.

The paradoxical Lady Macbeth is played by Meb Boden, who received her early theater training here at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, where she first developed her Lady Macbeth in a University production. David Grabau, who plays Lennox, also studied theater here at UMass, where he danced with the University Dancers.

The Company's performance is scattered with "electronic realizations", a synthesizer score created for Macbeth by Bob Toomey. The electronic music was surprisingly unobtrusive, and added to the urgent tempo of the production.

The Boston Shakespeare Company is located on the corner of Berkeley and Marlborough streets in downtown Boston, close to several subway stops and a stone's throw from the Public Gardens. Performances are on weekend nights, and student rush seats are available. This is a young (only two years in existence) and interesting company whose interpretations and performance of Shakespeare is worth seeing.

Scott the fox

"Sly Fox"
at the Wilbur Theater, Boston starring George C. Scott
reviewed by Mark Leccese

"Never think too little of people," Foxwell J. Sly advises Simon Able, his more than able servant and partner in crime, sometime during the outrageous flim-flamming they get away with during "Sly Fox." As Sly toys with people's insatiable greed and makes them appear littler and littler, the more and more screamingly funny they become.

Larry Gelbart, who wrote MASH for both the movies and television and "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum" for Broadway, has updated and retold Ben Johnson's "Volpone", a farcical comedy about greed and more greed. The show, which will appear only three weeks in Boston before moving on to Broadway, is directed by Arthur Penn.

"Sly Fox" stars several very familiar and very brilliant comic actors: Jack Gilford as an ancient miser, Bob Dishy as a money-hungry accountant and absurdly protective husband, and John Heffernan as a sniveling, dishonest lawyer. All the actors in the cast are superb comedians and comediennes, and it is the perfection of their comic timing that keeps the play clicking along at its hysterical speed.

But the evening belongs undoubtedly to the star, the incredible George C. Scott, whose performances as both Sly and the 19th century Western judge who tries him is forceful and brilliantly comic. In addition to being one of the finest actors on stage and screen today, he proves here that he is also an extremely capable comedian.

The play has weaknesses, mostly in the script, that will probably be tightened up before the play finishes its three week run in Boston, Broadway's bull-pen, and moves on to New York.

It is a bawdy, thigh-slapping comedy loaded with clever oneliners and crazy slapstick situations; it is marvelous entertainment. All right, so it is at the Wilbur and tickets are kind of expensive and we are just poor students, but there are matinees the Wednesday and Sunday of Thanksgiving vacation and Saturdays throughout the run. Just for laughs, see this play.

Many Rivers to Cross

Jimmy Cliff
at the Academy of Music
Nov. 11, 1976

"The Jamaican Experience." That's what Jimmy Cliff calls his show. And from the moment the lights went down and the band walked on, it was clear it would be different. They opened with a bluesy reggae and a rubber-legged roadie dancing around the stage. Then Brother Joe Higgs, a percussionist, introduced "the most famous artist from our country Jamaica, Jimmy Cliff!" Cheers from the crowd and lights from all directions found him, seated next to two band members, each playing a single conga. One number, and he was up to dance and sing the rest of the way.

The show was lengthy and varied, featuring both the well-known hits and new and less familiar songs. Cliff's music is reggae and other Jamaican forms in rhythm, with hints of soul and even blues. He spent three years in England 'coming out,' and was to a small but noticeable degree Anglicized. His movie "The Harder they Come," brought him a large following among whites. The songs from that soundtrack (You Can Get it if You Really Want," "Many Rivers to Cross," "Sitting in Limbo," and "the Harder they Come") brought the loudest cheers. Other familiar ones were "Wonderful World, Beautiful People" (love it, love it, love it... reggae, reggae, music) and "Under the Sun, Moon, and Stars" (the universal language.. music.. and now we're dealing with just reggae music!).

Cliff finished each one by jumping in the air, landing with his arms pointed to heaven, and saying "Good Thanks!" He brought the audience ever closer with his between song conversation, asking if we could understand his Jamaican dialect-English voice. People from the audience called for favorite songs, and when one voice cried "Legalize It," (the name of a song by Cliff's fellow Jamaican, Peter Tosh) he responded with, "Ya, anytime! But a noticeable difference between Cliff and other Jamaicans is that he never once mentioned, in song or talk, the famous ganja weed that has become synonomous with reggae and Jamaica. And not a single wisp of marijuana smoke obscured the view of the stage. Cliff's music is generally more upbeat and infectious than the reggae of the Rastafarian (a Jamaican religion-consciousness) bands; more commercial and more accessible. However, Cliff sang many songs, less familiar and in the more orthodox reggae vein ("Lonely Streets," "Material World") that spoke of Jamaica's, and the world's, problems of oppression, poverty, and struggle. Some realities that are rather distant to most of us living in the relative security of this area. The emotion of the lyrics struck sensitive areas though. The highlight of the concert, in my mind, was the stark beauty and soulfulness of "Many Rivers to Cross," halfway through the show. When Cliff's voice solo brought it to an end, the audience rose, en masse, for a standing ovation. This wasn't the obligatory standing ovation of a concert's end but one rooted in pure appreciation and thanks for an incredible performance.

Yes, there will still be 'many rivers to cross,' but nights spent with people like Jimmy Cliff make the ways 'clear over' them much easier.

The Dubious Brothers and Daddy

Two Generations of Brubeck
Saturday Night,
Nov. 13, 1976
Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
by Jim Gagne

Dave Brubeck and his sons unwittingly recalled the phrase "generation gap" Saturday night when his "Two Generations of Brubeck" failed to bridge the gap that occurs when musicians play at the same time yet fail to play together.

This distinction is important to a jazz concert, and the gap was evident right from the first song with Danny Brubeck's obtrusive drumming on Daddy's piano rag.

Brubeck's enduring popularity has long been a mystery to serious jazz devotees, but his contribution to experimental time signatures, and his role as a populizer of jazz cannot be denied.

More puzzling is the apparent popularity of this family-band. The near sell-out audience called the band back for two encores despite Brubeck's failure to deliver more than a taste of what he is famous for — a fine frenzy of pounding attacks in odd time signatures.

In what became a frustrating pattern, his daring opening bars on acoustic piano were dropped for repetitive blues progressions when his sons joined in.

Darius Brubeck, on electric keyboards, provided a few sweet moments when he and Daddy answered each other's phrases or played in unison on their keyboards. For the remainder of the two hour show their pianos were incongruous.

Chris Brubeck's electric bass was too low and muddled to become another wrench in the works, but his long trombone solo on "Sermon from the Mount" probably converted a few listeners to atheism.

Peter "Madcat" Ruth joined in on harmonica for the second set. His jews harp on "Take-Five" was novel, but a poor substitute for Paul Desmond's saxaphone. He went crazy on the harmonica, he didn't wear any shoes, and the crowd liked him.

I heard few comments on the music, aside from some gasps for Danny's long drum solo on "Take-Five." The comments I heard were about the musicians. People seemed to be amazed at the sight of a happy family together on stage. Maybe in 1976 that alone is worth a standing ovation. One woman said, "they seem to be a happy bunch of people," and another one wondered if the Brubecks were Jewish.

From my surveys of record collections, it seems Brubeck's major audience is what I would call white middle-class liberals, so it was no surprise to see a large crowd. Where are there more white middle-class liberals than at a large state university like UMass?

In a successful jazz concert, the musicians feed each other musical ideas, and the audience joins in the feast. This concert was at best a Hostess Twinkie.

Frank Zappa: Losing Status With The Hungry Freaks, Daddy

FRANK ZAPPA

A critique of Frank Zappa's music and the changes it has gone through, including reviews of his latest album, Zoot Allures, and his concert in Springfield November 7.

by Bob Armstrong

I must confess to an undeniable lack of objectivity when formulating a critique of anything done by Frank Zappa. I believe he has been a figure of colossal importance in modern music: a composer, musician, arranger, producer and showman without peer, a man who has executed musical undertakings that manifest nothing less than consummate genius, an enigmatic, eccentric, demanding bandleader whose innovative use of various musical idioms has produced an eclectic body of music, both visceral and abstract, that has yet to be approached. He was one of the first to show us that rock need not consist of a series of three-chord progressions. He was the principal avatar of the Los Angeles freak culture in the mid-sixties, as well as one of the major creative forces of the counter-culture in the country. He showed in his earliest albums an ability to make the most searing kind of musical satire. His lyrics were always clever and pointed, sometimes direct and sometimes obscure, but always interesting. In terms of his musical innovations, Zappa stands head and shoulders over any other contemporary composer. Certainly Lennon and McCartney and a number of others introduced novel uses of arrangements and adopted the styles of various musical genres to their music, but Zappa was the first to introduce important structural innovations into rock music; using exotic time signatures and shifts therewith, iconoclastic, bizarre chord sequences, multi-tonalities, wild, dissonant solos, harmonic clusters and various other musical elements that had previously been foreign to all but the most avant-garde orchestral and electronic music and, to a lesser extent, the most far-reaching jazz. His use of orchestral arrangements demonstrated his understanding that orchestras could be used in modern rock music without being relegated to forming syrupy backdrops for sappy vocals or pretentious pseudo-classical banalities. Frank Zappa and the Mothers of Invention were the first major group to use a big amplified sound, and Frank was the first guitarist of any note to use a wah-wah pedal. The Mothers staged multi-media happenings during concerts when most groups though having hair in the eyes and sunglasses demonstrated ample hip creativity. All these innovations were used to make music that was both dazzling in its rich complexities and earthly in its strong visceral punch, and music that was almost schizophrenic in its diversity of moods and colors.

With a few exceptions, every album made by Frank Zappa up to and including The Grand Wazoo, which was released in 1973, is brilliant. The exceptions are merely good or very good albums from the Flo and Eddie period, when things got a little silly, as rather over-indulgent self-conciously "dirty" humor in the lyrics and the dialogue done by Flo and Eddie deterred from the music proper.

With the release of Overnite Sensation in 1973, however, Frank showed the way in which he has continued to the present. Overnite Sensation marked a turning point in Frank's musical direction. The album was comprised of seven songs, most of which featured heavy voice-over semi-spoken lyrics by Frank, which were for the most part self-conciously irrelevant whimsy (albeit rather clever) delivered in a very giddy voice, much unlike the proud indignant voice of the Zappa of old. Certainly the instrumentation on the album is very good, yet there just isn't that emphasis on the music proper there had been previously, as the music seems more confined, at times seeming only to do little more than accentuate the "funny lyrics". (This marked a strong contrast to its immediate predesessor, the Grand Wazoo, which is a brilliant instrumental album done with a large jazz-band arrangement.) Some of these "funny" lyrics included some rather jaded sexual humor. Certainly Frank has included sexual humor in his work since the beginning of his career, but it was usually couched in a coherent social-criticism framework, and in any event did not ever degenerate into a giddy preoccupation as was evidenced on OS.

And so it has continued, with Apostrophe, Roxy and Elsewhere, One Size Fits All, Bongo Fury, and now Zoot Allures, the latest Zappa release. It's not that there is nothing to be appreciated on these albums, indeed, for the most part they feature fine musicianship and energetic renderings, and they make for better listening then most of the dreck being released in rock music today. But the fact is that Zappa's scope of musical imagination, as least insofar as his records and concerts represent it, has narrowed considerably. The kind of repetoire he is currently performing is but a faint, distorted echo of his achievements of the past. There is less group interplay and more soloing by Frank. His guitar flights are among the very best in rock, but instead of the sinewy, salient, highly disciplined phrasings of old, he now more often plays with more fast-paced abandon, doing it very well, but losing some of his distinction as a premier guitar stylist, and becoming rather redundant at times. There just isn't that greatness about his music any more.

Getting down to the specifics of Zoot Allures, it is a good rock album, but a poor Zappa album, if one is to go by the extremely high standards Frank has set for himself. Black Napkins is alive recording of a concert done in Tokyo early this year, and features some masterful blues guitar workings by Frank, but not too much else. "Disco Boy" is a catchy, tongue-in-cheek tribute to a modern social phenomenon, done in mock disco fashion, but is, of course, musically limited as it is constrained to mock that which it makes fun of. "Wind Up Working In A Gas Station" is somewhat amusing, and enjoyable, but again musically simplistic and repetitive. "Wonderful Wino" is a song which was written in 1970, (unlike the rest on the album, which were all written this year) and concerns the problem of a Los Angeles wino, sung by Frank from the wino's point of view, and is probably the best song on the album in terms of capturing some of the old Zappa crazed—creative energy. This is a song that Captain Beefheart would be very comfortable singing. The rest of the cuts on the album are all right, bogged down at times by pointless lyrics, bouyed at other times by good soloing by Frank. Frank plays bass on most of the selections on the album through the use of overdubs, and does a good job, and talk-sings most of the lead vocals. This points to another problem of Zappa's recent work; the lack of group input, as Frank seems to be predominating to an excessive extent over the workings of the group. So it is very telling to learn that the name of Frank's group is no longer Frank Zappa and the Mothers of Invention but simply Zappa. His lyrics and guitar solos are just about all there is in terms of extensive musicial expression, as most of what is played by whoever plays with him is of a very backup nature, unlike the tremendous interplay on albums like Burnt Weenie Sandwich or Waka Jawaka. Once again, this is a good rock album in relative terms, with a few soft spots, but is not what one would expect from the man who once said that most young people wouldn't know good rock if it came and bit them on the ass. (He was right.)

As for the concert of November 7, at the Civic Center in Sprigfield, there were no real departures from Frank's current repetoire. The two brightest moments of the concert were the performing of "One Pound For A Brown On The Bus" from the incredible Uncle Meat album, a piece which featured a beautiful, open, salient, carefully worked guitar solo like those of old, and a rendition of "You Didn't Try To Call Me" off the first Mothers album, Freakout, done in a style much like Aretha Franklin by Bianca, a new black woman with the group, who sings and plays

Sargent-at-Armchair

by Rick Gureghian

He was one of Watergate's most ironic victims, a damned-if-he-did and damned-if-he-didn't Republican Governor whose distaste for Richard Nixon's politics ran deep within his own liberal Brahmin blood. Francis W. Sargent never liked Nixon, in fact, his involvement in the anti-war movement in the late 1960's and early 1970's had incurred the wrath of fellow Republicans. He had once told then Vice-President Spiro Agnew in 1970 that he didn't want Agnew in Massachusetts when the acid-tongued Vice-President offered to help in Sargent's 1970 re-election campaign. And he had criticized the Republican administration so frequently that dissident conservatives were forever wishing to take the Republican Gubernatorial nomination away from him. But throughout it all, Frank Sargent survived.

Sargent was an enigma in Massachusetts politics, a Republican Governor in a traditionally Democratic state that regarded him and his party as a minor hindrance at best. But for Francis Sargent in 1974, the heavy Democratic odds had finally caught up with him. The morality of the men running America had become a major issue that year, a political bloodletting virtually without precedent in U.S. history. His party a shambles, hiw own credibility suspect due to his Republican label, he succumbed like hundreds of other G.O.P. brethren nationwide to the cloud of Watergate.

Two years later, Frank Sargent sits in his office on 16 Arlington Street in Boston at the foot of Beacon Hill. The area, once considered posh, is more a student haven for those attending Boston University or Northeastern. But it is within sight of the State House, and that alone tells a story. Frank Sargent is itching for 1978 to roll along; he knows it, his friends know it, the voters know it, and most of all, Governor Michael Dukakis achingly feels it. Only Sargent won't admit to any intent of regaining his seat, he's just quietly biding his time.

"I enjoy this pace," he said, leaning back in a stuffed black chair, the title "Governor Francis W. Sargent" emblazoned in gold on its backside. He has been taking it "relatively easy" for the past 24 months, mostly lecturing at Harvard, the University of Massachusetts at Boston, and Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He had just returned from a two-week jaunt through Europe, giving lectures at universities on that continent, endlessly answering questions about the race for the Presidency. But as much as he enjoys his travels, as much as he asserts his enjoyment of political "retirement" he still conveys that "Boy, I wish I were back there at the State House" attitude.

That he enjoyed being Governor is an understatement, he relished the office, its power and its glory.

"I liked being right in the middle of everything. It's an exciting, challenging opportunity that isn't like anything else. It isn't like being in the Congress, it isn't like being in the legislature.

There's nowhere to run or to hide when you're Governor, you're right there, and you've got to deal with the little problems, and the big problems. If people are sore, they're sore at the Governor.

They're not quite sure how their legislator voted, how their Congressman voted, how their U.S. Senator voted, but the Governor is right there, and they sure get sore at him."

That they did was evident in the waning days prior to the November 1974 election. Stung by Watergate's taint, and piling domestic problems — the price of gasoline, spiraling food costs, and hints of a huge state deficit — Sargent felt the wrath of an angry Massachusetts electorate. Buoyed by the anti-politician syndrome prevalent throughout Massachusetts — as well as the country — Michael Dukakis rode into office on the basis of a finger-wagging campaign aimed at his Republican opponent, and the concrete promise of "no new taxes."

But Sargent's problems had been brewing long before that. He had sponsored the controversial furlough and work-release programs in Massachusetts prisons, endorsed the reformist ideas of then Corrections Commissioner John Boone, and had taken some "rather risky politician ventures in bringing about a more enlightened course in the field of corrections." He admitted his "independent" Republican background, adding "I was very critical of Nixon way prior to Watergate. I was involved in some of the anti-Vietnam War activities in Massachusetts so that I was not a favorite of one Richard Nixon. I told Agnew that I didn't want him coming into Massachusetts when I was running for re-election in 1970, and he was mad as hell, felt I was insulting him."

He also saw the writing on the wall, saying "A full year before the election, Senate President Kevin Harrington told me that I might have a tough time getting re-elected due to domestic problems, and he was right. But, timing is everything in politics, and in 1974 — unlike 1970 — in addition to Watergate and the pardon, even more so was that we were getting into a national recession and New England depression. Joblessness was even more severe than it is today and on top of that were long lines at the gas pumps, and just about everything was wrong for a Republican to be running for re-election in democratic Massachusetts in 1974. Having been critical of Nixon way before it was popular offended Republicans. Then came Watergate, the pardon, and Independents and Democrats said, 'Well, Sargent may be alright, but I'm never voting for another Republican again.' So it was down the chute. But I think, really, more than any of that, it was the national depression. And as I said election night when I was licked, "The price of hamburger licked me."

One major uproar causing more unfavorable publicity in the final two weeks in his bid for re-election was the speculation that the state was in dire financial straits. Unlike Dukakis, Sargent could not emphatically announce that there would be no new taxes. As Governor, he knew full well that the state was running a deficit, and to confirm such talk would have only lent credence to Dukakis' charge that the Governor had mismanaged the state fiscally. He was caught in a no-win situation — and he admitted it.

"I was very careful," said Sargent, "during 1974 to never promise 'no new taxes!' What I said was, 'For three years, we've been able to avoid taxes' because the economy nationally was in very good shape. But I did say, "If the economy did go into a tailspin, if we did go into a depression or a recession, it would probably be unavoidable to have new taxes.' "

Although the brunt of criticism toward Dukakis mushroomed it was evident that no public relations ploy would be found to shift the burden of fault to Governor Sargent. That his administration had caused the deficit of over $500 million was moot, it would be Governor Dukakis who would have to raise taxes, and be caught in a major turn-about in his pre-election promise. The public would well remember!

Sargent was also critical of the way Dukakis handled the deficit problem, saying, "Why he didn't immediately come in with a new tax, a moderate tax early in the winter, I will never understand. And why he permitted better than six months to go by before he condeded that it would be necessary to go for a new tax is beyond me. Why he had to have a bond issue of $40 million to take care of current expenses when he could have bitten the bullet early in the winter and gone for a moderate tax, been out of the woods, been out of problems, and saved Massachusetts from a year of hysteria, I'll never know. And," he added in a somewhat prophetic manner, "I don't think they're out of the woods yet!"

Throughout Dukakis' two years as Governor, Sargent had remained decidedly mum on his opponents performance. But one area irked him greatly, the label of "non-patronage" pinned on Dukakis' appointees. Sargent rebutted the Mr. Clean image of the Governor, saying "He's not the first honest man to hold public office. And he's appointed people in his campaign to state posts, so I think that's a bit hypocritical in his action."

But he was even more singularly critical of Dukakis' relationship with the legislature, a paradox, in that Sargent, a Republican, had a better-working rapport with a "top-heavy Democratic legislature, than the present Democratic Governor does.

Said Sargent, "I've been surprised that he's proven to be so inept in working with people, with legislators. It's a strange thing that a Republican Governor could get along with the legislature in a much more harmonious way than he does."

From the beginning of his term, Dukakis' working relationship with the legislature was fragile at best.

Said Sargent, "Dukakis has a type of intellectual arrogance about him that doesn't permit him to get along with the legislature — and it's too bad."

Although Sargent was the acknowledged Republican spokesman in the state during his term as Governor, he remains quite frank about the state of his party in Massachusetts today. Even more so, he realized the "futility" of Mike Robertson's challenge to Senator Edward Kennedy's seat in the November elections, and the almost indifferent attitude among a number of the Republican powers-to-be in the state toward Robertson. He acknowledged that "the Republican party in Massachusetts is an endangered species," and added, "the pathetic thing about having a minority party, such as we have here, is that the minority party is in itself split. And here is a guy who felt it pretty poignantly. I had a damn near vigorous primary fight in 1974 (Carroll Sheehan) and there's no harm in that necessarily, but once the fight was over, we didn't come back together again apparently. There's a hard-bar right-win group in the party that wants to see the party remain an exclusive club, they just don't want to see it expand. They were opposed to me all along the way, they were opposed to me when I was critical of Nixon, and they either sat on their hands or voted for Dukakis. What they refuse to comprehend is the fact that this is a Democratic state."

But he also recognized the hardships facing all political parties, not only in Massachusetts but throughout the nation as well. "I think both parties are in trouble in this country," said Sargent, "much more the Republican party than the Democratic party. And I think the thing that gripes me most about the Republican party — in this state especially — has been that it's considered itself an exclusive club. Some of the diehards in the party try to determine whether or not this person or that person should be let into the club, rather than reaching out and giving minorities leading roles, women leading roles. It's just a dying party, and until they reach out for a broader base, I don't see how the party can survive. That's why the Republican party is going to die on the grapevine!"

He continued, "In contrast, the Democrats have made a larger effort in recruiting people, but I think they're in trouble also. They're having their problems getting people to enroll as Democrats. And I think it's becoming the 'in' thing to say, 'well, I'm going to vote for the man or woman, and I'm not going to be aligned to either party. I'm not impressed by either party.' You hear that frequently."

If so, where does that leave Francis Sargent in 1978? Does he intend to seek the Governorship? Will he run for Senator Edward Brooke's seat that year if the Republican Senator declines? "No, I've never really thought of it," said Sargent. "For two reasons. One! I can't imagine that he wouldn't run for reelection. I think he would, I think he will, and I think he'd be a tough man to beat. Secondly! I've never had Potomac Fever. Some people, their heads are turned to Washington. Others, not so.

I've been around the State House for a long time, I've always liked it here. There's something about the down-of-the-heel State House. And I'll be the first to say that I don't miss it. What I do miss though is the combat, I miss the excitement, and frankly, I miss another thing that doesn't even apply to Michael Dukakis. I enjoyed a certain amount of cameradarie with the leadership even though we were at each others throats."

Then does he miss it enough to run in 1978? "I don't know," he said, "I honestly don't know at this time. I'll have to examine my feelings next year, see how the state looks, how the national scene looks, then I'll know."

But there is one thing that heartens him, that makes his eyes shine in anticipation of another shot at Dukakis two years hence. "You know," said Sargent, "I can't walk the streets of Boston, or anyplace, without people coming up to me, and not saying, 'I voted for you,' but 'I made a mistake, I didn't vote for you!'"

That he hears the call of a distant drummer is undeniable. It is equally true that he was begun to hear voices — the imprecations of the faithful who wring his hand on sundry streets throughout the city, and tell him that he must run. One of those voices one day may be the omen he has been waiting for — and when it comes, Francis Sargent will be ready. And so will the voters!

keyboards. She began the song slowy and finished it with a quick, funky style reminiscent of mid-sixties soul. But for the most part, the show was rather dissappointing. The crowd undoubtedly enjoyed some of the lewd stage antics and dialogue which seems to have captured a whole new Zappa fanship; and lost many of his old fans, people who probably have never heard Lumpy Gravy or We're Only In It For The Money seem to get off on getting stoned and hearing songs like Stinkfoot and Dirty Love replete with stage props and skits to dramatize the somewhat jaded humor of those recent Zappa songs. The performance was a one-show affair, with a fifteen minute intermission. The group consisted of Frank on guitar, lead vocals, and dialogue, Ray White on guitar, Patrick O'Hearn on bass, Terry Bozzie on drums, Bianca on lead vocals and keyboards, and Eddie Jobson on keyboards and transparent fiberglass violin. None of these musicians got to do too much throughout the course of the show, with the exception of Bozzio who played energetically, if somewhat over-indulgently, all the way through, doing a good job overall. Ray White, a new black guitarist, took two very good solos on Black Napkins and The Torture Never Stops, Jobson, who recently left Roxy Music, got to use the fancy violin only on Black Napkins, where he took a dazzling, electric solo that sent shimmering bullets skyward. The rest of the time Eddie was relegated to playing choppy, simple little chords on electric piano and synthesizer. Bianco sings well but does not dazzle one on the keyboards. Patrick O'Hearn's bass playing, however, can best be described as non-existent, as he was a negligible musical prescence throughout the concert, never really pushing the band as a good bass player should do, never doing anything except producing a weak drone. Almost all the material performed was recent stuff, including the teenage-degenerate-punk song "Chrissie Puked Twice." This material was mostly relatively simple, funky stuff, with lyrics that were predominantly not for adult minds, or basic blues vehicles for Frank's soloing. The crowd liked it, were treated with two encores. Frank also seemed to be enjoying himself, and didn't have that antagonistic attitude toward the crowd that he sometimes has. But he just isn't fantastic any more; no longer is he building structures of musical power that have never been approached. Before he made use of a highly developed conceptual framework and exquisite musicianship, and brilliant use thereof. Not now.

There are a number of reasons for Frank's current rut, all of which would be too lengthy to ennumerate, but one reason seems to be the most obvious; money. He has clearly been making more money since Overnight Sensation, his albums have been selling much better than before, in fact, Apostrophe became a gold album last spring after two years on the charts, mainly because of the more accessible, "funny" music he has been playing, and one finds it hard to castigate Mr. "No Commercial Potential" for choosing to make more simple music that is easier to perform and brings in the dough, rather than having to work extremely hard with and on the other group members to produce complex, rock-based music that doesn't sell hardly at all and is appreciated by all but a few. I don't mean to say that Frank has sold out, indeed, if he wanted to sell out he wouldn't do some of the things he has been doing, even as of late; he could cut out the grossness and get a prettyboy vocalist and things would be all set. But it is as though Picasso was doing Marked Marvel Comics, as one semi-emminent critic has suggested. But I still have hopes for important contributions to music from Frank Zappa sometime in the future, I think the man has too much music inside his head for him to continue on his current course for too long, I believe the music that was hinted at on Lumpy Gravy will sometime be fully manifested. In fact, Frank will be playing with an orchestra in New York at the end of December. He has also recorded a long Varese-like orchestral piece which he financed himself, which I heard before a Zappa concert in Boston about a year ago. It was excellent in the true meaning of the word, but Frank has yet to find any suitable buyers for an album version. Such is the music business. But I think something's got to give. It's just a matter of time. I just hope it's not too long before Frank Zappa again shows us what he is capable of.

Note: I had the opportunity to speak with F.Z. after the concert in Springfield, but, the exigencies of the journalistic world being what they are, I was unable to secure a verbatim transcript of the interview in time for today's publication. Maybe you'll see it in the next issue. Maybe not.

Spunk From the Punk

THE PATTI SMITH GROUP
Radio Ethiopia
(Arista)

Radio Ethiopia is a very good album. I hesitate to use a more laudatory adjective (i.e. magnificent, brilliant, excellent, etc.) because records deserving such terms are rare (although many critics, myself included, would have you believe otherwise) and come about maybe once in a year. Horses, magnifico, was released just about one year ago, but as good as RE is, it ain't quite deserving of that Stellar- Album- Of- The- Year status. Being every bit as unique as Horses, it begs comparison.

Producer Jack Douglas has created a much looser yet cleaner sound on RE than John Cale did with Horses; this new sound is smoother, while being harsher and even heavier. Lenny Kaye, as well as the rest of the band, demonstrates a talent only barely revealed on Horses, particularly on the record's best song, "Ask The Angels."

RE's looseness, however, detracts from its quality in the long run. One of the things that made Horses so very brilliant was its cohesiveness; the fact that six of the eight cuts could've made killer singles. Only three cuts can possibly be pulled off RE without editing, and editing a Patti Smith song would be akin to editing "Sister Ray." Patti's artier, more lyrical, less powerful stuff, like Horses' Birdland", only sound great when you're in that type of mood (which is very rare for some — they're the people who usually hate Patti Smith). There are three of four such numbers on RE (out of eight total songs), and that's not a very good ratio for a rock'n'roll LP. This is not to say that these songs are not very good nor even excellent, but it is to say that they are far from being as consistently listenable as good rock'n' roll inherently should be.

The power numbers are another story entirely. Power is what PS evokes best both live and on record, and the real rock'n' roll songs on RE are every bit as good as those on Horses. "Pumping (My Heart)" could match "Free Money" second-for-second; "Ask The Angels" could easily go the distance with Gloria." And there is no moment nearly as exciting on Horses nor any other record for that matter that equals that fleeting second near the end of "Pissing In The River" (which counterparts well with "Break It Up"), when Patti screams, with abandon and repression uncorked for all emotion to feel, "What about it what about it what about it!..." That moment is so short, but it comes as close to pure rock'n'roll excitement as anything I've ever heard except for the Talking Heads version of "Love is All Around."

The title cut, which segues into "Abyssinia" (though I cannot figure where one ends and the next begins), was recorded live 8-9-76. I think I was at that concert, but Douglas has thankfully left out the applause track, so I ain't yet a rock'n'roll star. Anyway, as long as I'm comparing Horses tracks (no pun intended) to RE tracks, I'd match this up to "Land." I really shouldn't, for "Land" is Patti's masterpiece, it remains her "Sister Ray," but "RE-Abyssinia" comes very close to duplicating that soon-to-be-legendary maestro-piezzo. Where "Land" is tightly powerful, "RE-A" is rawly powerful. Where "Land" is wildly intense and as completely structured as PS will ever get, "RE-A" is equally intense and lacking nearly any structure whatsoever. Although I compare it to "Land," it reminds me a lot more of The Stooges, and in case ya didn't know, that's good.

The listener can understand far fewer lyrics on RE than on Horses, but some of those words are included on the pamphlet that comes with the record. Her lyrics are more free-associative and wildly surreal here than there, but that can be faulted because Horses just about draws the line on utilizing free-associative and wildly surreal lyrics without delving into the incomprehensive drek that most poorer beat poetry usually fails to avoid. RE comes dangerously close to that precipice, but Patti is just too good a poet to quite fall in. Not yet, anyway. The pamphlet ties in lyrical snatches from RE with some biographical and random ideas, and although I can see how each inclusion ties in to the context in which it arises in the pamphlet, I do not get a hell of a lot out of them in the contexts of their respective songs. And I've read and even understood a lot of Patti Smith's poems. Maybe she should take a tip from Sparks and include a full lyric sheet with her records. What's the purpose of writing the words in the first place if the listener cannot pick up enough of them to make any sense of the damn things?

As I stated right from the start, RE is a very good record. Due to its inconsistencies it fails to equal Patti Smith's first album, but if a record as good as this one still fails to rank against any other, then it can only serve to point out just how brilliant that other record is, and Radio Ethiopia does just that. (A-)

Sutherland Brothers & Quiver
Slipstream
(Columbia)

It probably goes without saying how sick everyone must be with me outlandishly praising these supposedly "great, but ignored" English rock bands. Well here I go again — Sutherland Brothers & Quiver are just one of those groups. Slipstream is their fourth American releases and a great one at that — sometimes surpassing last year's Reach For The Sky.

Sutherland Brothers & Quiver's main forte is clean, mainstream pop music. They splash these highly likeable tunes with an array of musical colors — soft rock, R&B, a touch of reggae and the like. Like their past efforts, Slipstream's twelve cuts each have something of their own to offer and brag about. Among the flood of potential singles are "The Prisoner" — a hefty rock tune, "Dark Powers" — undeniable R&B funkiod bliss and "Love On The Side" — a splendid, lush ballad that ranks as one of their all time best.

Slipstream is so varied and exceptional that you'd be doing yourself a disservice to be without it. Once a single is released, the ball should start rollin'. Hopefully the next SB&Q review I write won't have to peg 'em as one of those "great, but ignored" English rock bands. (A-)

Led Zeppeiin
The Song Remains The Same
(Swan Song)

If you've never witnessed Led Zeppelin in concert, this double album will hardly inspire you to camp out overnight in quest for tickets when and if the opportunity arises again. For one thing, the material here is dated. Zeppelin presented this show on their 1973 Houses Of The Holy tour and recorded it at Madison Square Garden. The only probable reason for its being issued at this late date in time is as a soundtrack to bolster the group's film of the same name, which, from what I hear, can use all the bolstering it can get. Were it not for this film, I severely doubt that this album would have ever seen the light of day. It just is not representative of Led Zeppelin, so-called No. 1 rock band in the world today. The rock really never rolls the way it should. The disc starts out with two good hard rockers ("Rock and Roll" and "Celebration Day"), but from here on in, much of the music, too much, is restrained and laid back. It doesn't ever explode out of the speakers the way one would expect a live album from this group to. A lot of the reason for this lies in the performance of Jimmy Page. Large portions of his guitar soloings (particularly on record two) take on a blues vein and while they are technically proficient, they do tend to become tedious after awhile. His electronic guitar gadgetry dooms the twenty-six minutes version of "Dazed and Confused" into sounding amazingly similar to what the song's title implies. Fortunately, he does salvage a bit of glory towards the end, through a series of well controlled heavy metal riffs; but too little too late.

Actually, vocalist Robert Plant should share some of the blame. His efforts here are nothing to crow about, either. The live Plant sounds nothing like the studio Plant; his voice is gruff and raspy and, try as he might, he can't hit those high notes. Just listening to him attempt (gamely but lamely) the closing vocals, so climactic during the studio version of "Stairway To Heaven," is proof enough. This live rendition is hardly a classic.

John Bonham is adequate throughout, but his twelve minute drum solo on "Moby Dick" is hardly the incredible piece of percussionary excellence which people everywhere used to claim it was. Lengthy it is, but incredible? Not really. As for John Paul Jones, well, he's around there someplace trying to tie things together as he alternates between bass and keyboards.

In all honesty, I've heard Zeppelin sound much better doing live material on "bootleg" albums. Perhaps I'd have a greater appreciation for The Song Remains The Same if I had actually seen the group perform, but this recording is all I have to go by. If you don't see the movie, it may be all that you have too, so if you go buy this lp, be forewarned. Being there may really be twice the fun. Anyhow, this release rates a "Zeppelin deflates their own baloon this time." C.

Wendy Waldman
The Main Refrain
(Warner Bros.)

Hold the hosannas. This album will not make you see G-d, or change the rest of your life. Oh, but what it adds to it, what it adds to life!

Took a while, but the lady has come into her own. The songs here have all the raw power of the songs on Gypsy Symphony, but having Peter Bernstein (her bassist) produce this helped give Wendy Waldman a fullness never realized in this kind of country—rock—blues woman's album. The fact that he is so close to the music, so close to the person, gave him the ability to treat the art with care, with respect for the original material, filling in only the spots that needed filling in.

Highlights: Linda Ronstadt's backup vocals are the perfect complement to Wendy's voice and add, in each case, exactly what the song asks for. Would that Linda did so well on her own albums. You just have to hear it!

The "Eagle and Owl" is the most ambitious song Wendy has ever written. Lyrically, it's a simple story—description, but musically it is more three-dimensional than her straight melody lines and choruses, overlapping the separate parts, attacking the story with two different voices, it succeeds beautifully.

"West Coast Blues" is a gem — not a flaw in it. With Taj Mahal doing very subtle vocals. It's the best. The harmonies in "Prayer For You" are outstanding and rescue what could have been an average song. But this could go on forever, mentioning all the little things that set this album apart from the others. Suffice it to say, this is an album that should be owned. And a special thanks to Warner Brothers for their encouragement. (A)

Mott The Hoople
Greatest Hits
(Columbia)

Here we have another of the innumerable greatest hits packages which have been recently released in order to provide the perfect Christmas present for little Johnny Know-nothing. While Mott the Hoople was together, they were an exciting rock-n-roll band capable of producing underground classics as well as hit singles. This is a decent collection of what they did back in the days before Mick Ralphs left to join Bad Company, and a few of the newer songs with Ariel Bender on Guitar. "All the Way to Memphis", "All the Young Dudes", "Roll Away the Stone", and "Hymn For the Dudes" are the best to be found here. Bowie, Andy MacKay and others lend aid to Ian Hunter and Co. Most of the other songs are either good rockers or slow ballads. Actually, it is a pretty good album, especially if you have no Hoople albums but have a weak spot for them. (B)

Kansas
Leftoverture
(Kirshner)

Kansas had promises of being a great progressive rock band — Song Of America remains their classic lp. Ever since then, it's been all down hill. The follow-up, Masque, showed little punch, even its best moments were stock and trade milking of Song Of America's strongest points. Leftoverture has some flashes of past glories, but it also gives us a glimpse of a band that doesn't know what to do with itself. While Kansas seems refreshed, the material is nothing to take-off on. When not resorting to stupid song titles ("Gnat-Attack", sounds like senile Zappa), they run up and down, over and under — even sideways — with such aimless stiffness it's embrassing. Maybe they weren't that good after all? (C)

The Best of Nils Lofgren and Grin
(Epic)

"Best Of" collections are often a solid grouping of hits by established artists. The recent albums along these lines, those of War, the Doobies, etc. bear this out. And most "Best Of" albums are impossible to fault. It is not very often that albums the likes of this are out, and it's to Epic's credit that they've released The Best of Nils Lofgren and Grin.

Lofgren's story is classic rock n' roll material. He was discovered when he lept up on stage and started playing with Neil Young. He joined Young's backing band Crazy Horse for their finest album and sat in on sessions for some of Young's best work. But all along he continues to work with Grin. Frustrating as it must have been, the group never made it, though a listen to the 10 cuts here would not tell why. Lofgren wrote and led all the tunes for his band. Now defunct, Grin had a handle on basic rock, they knew how to get it across. Lofgren is now fronting another group, hopefully for him, one that will put them across to the many history course for those that missed his previous incarnation. Rock is romance ("Take You to the Movies"); it is careening and giddy ("Heavy Chevy") and it is optimistic ("We All Sung Together") and serious ("White Lies").

In the album's liner notes Ben Edmonds makes a case for Nils' credentials to join the Rolling Stones, but he belongs alone, not on the shadow of another performer or group. And the Best of Grin is all the proof of why it should be that way.

Existence of two men questioned in trial

By JAMES ODATO
Collegian Staff

The second day of the larceny trial of Prof. Cleo Abrahams focused on the questionable existence of two men who the former UMass professor said he paid university funds. Several questions were raised about the possibility non-existent pair, yesterday in Hampshire County Superior Court.

The two abstract persons, William R. Downey and Henry B. Jones, were issued checks between 1972 and 1973 for amounts totalling at least $1,500 for consultant services in the Brooklyn, N.Y., unit of the Career Opportunities Program (COP) Abrahams directed.

Abrahams testified he signed the names of the unknown pair, endorsed with his signature, and cashed the checks in the interest of the two alleged COP workers. He said payments were made to Downey and Jones.

Abrahams is charged with four counts of larceny of money from the COP, an outreach project designed to create degrees and para-professional teaching aid jobs for low-income persons in the Brooklyn, Springfield, and Worcester bases. Abrahams was working at the Center for Urban Education, a department of the UMass School of Education, when the alleged larcenies occurred.

He faces 27 indictments after this trial which resumes today at 10 a.m.

Defense attorney Jay M. Forgotson, conceded Abrahams cashed and issued the checks but maintains the defendant had the money delivered into the two alleged COP consultants.

Abrahams testified it was "normal" for Brooklyn COP checks to be signed for the worker, endorsed in Abraham's name, and cashed in Amherst to be delivered in New York by student workers travelling to the project by automobile, bus or plane. He also said like most COP workers, he never had any contact with Downey nor Jones.

Asst. district attorney Bernard Whalen, stressed his distaste for this method of payment.

"You mean to say one day within 1972-1973 you sent out $3000 in envelopes brought by students to people you don't even know?" the prosecutor asked.

Social security numbers and addresses of Downey and Jones registered on payment affidavits proved inacurate yet curious, the prosecution revealed.

These notorized statements were requested by auditors investigating the Downey-Jones payments.

Robert G. Spalding, asst. manager of the Holyoke Social Security office, said the numbers given by Downey and Jones were incorrect. Whalen indicated that the first five numbers of Downey's social security listing on the affidavit form and Abraham's are identical.

The address of Downey was reported 1239 Brookside Rd., Piscataway, NJ, the home of Norma Farrar, a public school teacher.

Farrar testified a friend, Curtis B. Lawson, a New Jersey teacher and former UMass education student, told her he gave William Downey her address and telephone number and instructed her to take messages for Downey.

The address of Jones was found to be the same as that of Isolene Williams, a "family friend" of Abrahams.

Abrahams said all COP workers must have an address for their checks to be cashed. He said many New York workers had difficulties attaining money exchanges in banks.

Many COP workers were given the address of his professional mailbox and others used home addresses, he said.

Abrahams said he did not ask Lawson to give instructions to Farrar, and did not realize the address of Williams and Jones were the same.

Mark Peel, former staff worker at the Center for Urban Education, said he prepared at Abraham's request, the draft of the affidavit statement to be signed by Downey and Jones. He said he "did not recall" if Abrahams gave addresses to him of the two individuals.

Peel said any number of persons could sign documents needing Abraham's signature because of the heavy flow of such materials.

R. Kirk Miller, asst. treasurer of Howard Savings Bank, Newark, N.J., whose notary seal appears on the Downey affidavit, said although no account record exists for Downey in the bank, Miller notarized Downey's document, but could not describe nor remember meeting the man.

"We do not request identifications, but notarize if there are bank records," Miller said about the bank's notarization policy. He said he acknowledged the Downey affidavit because he believed there were bank records at the time of his authorization, but the records "were probably lost after the account was closed."

Mack B. Morant, a School of Education graduate student, testified he had signed the Dec. 26, 1974 letter which verifies he delivered cash to Downey and Jones in New York. He said he delivered a box containing books and envelopes during the summer of 1973 to an office in Brooklyn.

Morant said Abrahams later requested him to sign the statement confirming the payment delivery after the former COP director displayed letters verifying that Downey and Jones received the money.

Hand writing specialist Catherine A. Cusseck said after detailed microscopic examination, she found that Abrahams did not sign the names of Downey and Jones on the affidavit document.

Cusseck said she believed Abrahams did forge Downey's and Jones' signatures on two 1972 UMass invoice forms for venders certification, endorsed Downey's name on the back of 1972 $400 check, and wrote Jones' name on an Aug. 11 (no year given) agreement form.

In a chart Cusseck displayed before jurors, she revealed there were two different authors of various signatures of Downey, Abrahams and another, had three signers of Jones' name, one of whom was the defendant.

Abrahams was convicted in August of larceny of a $28,875 federal grant check which he allegedly deposited in his personal bank account.

Group charges DVP

By CHARLOTTE ALLEN
Collegian Staff

More than 40 people, representatives of campus women, the Third World and student governance organizations, met yesterday with members of the Distinguished Visitor's Program (DVP) to discuss alleged sexist and racist attitudes in the policy making decisions of the DVP.

The press conference was called to protest the refusal by DVP to bring tour women speakers to campus.

These speakers include Charlotte Bunch, editor of Quest, a feminist publication; Yvonne Wanroe, a Native American woman convicted of the murder of the men who attempted to rape her, her daughter, and her babysitter; and Martha Pitts, a member of the Assatta Shakur Defense Committee.

An alleged imbalance of Latin speakers was also debated.

In a prepared statement released yesterday, a group of women stated: "... because of the actions of the DVP, we are requesting that the Student Affairs Office and the Student Government Association move immediately to freeze the budget of the DVP."

"We are charging that the organization has deliberately discriminated against women through an arbitrary and sexist process of choosing speakers for the program, which is funded in part by Student Activities monies," the statement continued.

John Kiley, co-vicechairperson of the DVP said, "We try to hit different segments of the campus community. We deal with politics too heavily. We have to make an objective decision about what the community thinks."

In response, a member of the opposition said: "Hit or miss is one thing; treating and considering proposals for speakers equally is another thing."

According to Roberta Tricomy, public relation and women's coordinator for the DVP, there was discussion at Wednesday night's DVP meeting about the merit of the four women speakers, and whether or not they are representative of the women's community.

A member of the Third World said, "It is apparent that the women present are very much upset and in favor of more women's programming.

"If the DVP claims to be represectative of the community's interests, they are responsible to be truly representative," he said.

Tricomy agreed that programming is inequitable and that something needs to be done. She said she plans to call a meeting of all interested women from the UMass community to suggest and discuss future proposals for women speakers.

She said she has tried to incorporate women's programming into the DVP's program, with virtually no support from within the organization. When committee members were asked to compile lists of potential women speakers, none were returned to Tricomy who requested them

In contrast to the nine male speakers brought to campus this semester, only one woman has spoken, at the cost of $500.

This semester the DVP has spent $13,675 for male speakers, some of whom have received up to $4,500 in fees and expenses.

The money spent for women speakers is four per cent of the total funds allocated by DVP this semester. Women make up 52 per cent of the campus population.

Future speakers for the DVP include Harlon Ellison, for $2,000 author of the book, "A Boy and His Dog," and Bella Abzug and Barbara Jordan, women politiicians.

At Wednesday's DVP meeting, $5,000 was allocated for speakers for International Women's Week, March 2-8, and $5000 for Martin Luther King Week.

One of the protester's objections was that $2,500 was spent to bring Eldridge Cleaver to campus despite verbal and written opposition from the Third World.

The statement released by the women's group yesterday also stated: "We support the right of groups and individuals to propose Third World speakers, both female and male."

"We refuse to be played off against the needs of Third World students on campus," it read. "Women's programming, including the programming of Third World speakers, is a legal obligation of the DVP."

Some of the protestors speculated that at least one of the four proposed female speakers will be passed in reconsideration at a special meeting being called for Monday night at 9 p.m. in the DVP office, Student Union rm. 412.

They believe that passage of the proposals will ward off court action on the part of enraged individuals and organizations. Although a decision is not appealable, according to Ellen Faber, chairperson of the DVP, Paul Cronin, Student Government Association co-president, suggested the motion for reconsideration through parlimentary procedure could be introduced at the meeting Monday.

Some protestors believe the DVP is violation of the Title IX Education Amendments of 1972 for Affirmative Action.

This states that "no person shall on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving federal financial assistance."

With only 16 days of classes left before finals, the library study areas begin to reflect the pressure and tension of upcoming exams. (Staff photo by Rob Carlin)

25 faculty members

Group against bargaining

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

Faculty at UMass-Amherst are being contacted by yet another group these days as Dec. 1 and 2, election days for the vote on whether or not faculty here and at the Boston campus wish to establish a collective bargaining unit, draw closer.

Since late October, a group of 25 faculty members here who call themselves the "Committee for Informed Faculty" (CFIF) have been meeting with other faculty and staff members to halt the movement toward establishing a collective bargaining unit.

Blanche DePuy, head of CFIF and a Spanish professor here, says the group is "trying to prevent this union movement if possible. We feel people are not really seeing the facts because they are being fed propaganda by the two groups vying to represent faculty in collective bargaining."

"We feel people are convinced that the union will happen, but they don't know the real facts," DePuy said.

"Have you ever read a union contract negotiated between a university faculty and its administration?" reads one of the many CFIF newsletters given to faculty members during CFIF meetings.

"If not, you are sure to be surprised by what you find. There are few better arguments against unionization than the contracts already in effect at other institutions," the letter continues. According to DePuy, there are four points against forming a collective bargaining unit.

First, DePuy said, collective bargaining at other institutions provides no greater rights or greater voice for the faculty. She said they seem to increase administration input into recommendations and have intact its decision-making power.

DePuy said the current policy of the Board of Trustees and the Faculty Senate keeps the administration on a far shorter leash than any of these contracts.

Second, DePuy said unionization has no control over the state legislature; it cannot create monies or keep the legislature from specifying anything.

Third, DePuy said salary stipulations undermine the recognition of merit increase. A three year freeze on merit increases is one reason behind forming a collective bargaining unit.

Fourth, DePuy pointed to "negotiations."

She said, "Each side gets only a part of what it wants. To get one thing you must give up another".

DePuy concluded, "Unionization cannot in itself correct the principal ills from which we have been suffering."

Presidents of the two vying organizations to represent faculty in collective bargaining, however, see fault in all of DePuy's arguments against unionization.

Joseph S. Larson, president of the Amherst Chapter of the American Association of University Professors, and professor of Forestry here, and Larry S. Roberts president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors and professor of Zoology here, both say unionization will provide a greater voice for faculty.

Second, both organizations are promising faculty a lobbying agent on Beacon Hill, thus indicating unionization will have control over the state legislature.

Third, both organizations stress the importance of halting the freeze on merit salary increases.

The CFIF is funded by faculty contributions which, according to DePuy, amounts to $300. These monies, she said, are put toward printing up newsletters and other information to give to faculty members.

"We are simply trying to defeat this unionization movement by giving faculty some negative facts on unionization. Up to now, they have only been besieged by the claims of the two groups vying to represent them in collective bargaining," said DePuy.

"Our effectiveness? I suppose that will be answered Dec. 1 and 2 when faculty will vote," DePuy said. "But even that won't be a real indication."

Grad employes consider suit against UMass

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

Graduate Student Employees Union Chairperson Sherry Flashman last night said she was considering filing an unfair labor practice suit against the University for stopping payment on $1000 the Graduate Student Senate allocated to the employe group on Oct. 13.

The Graduate Student Employees Union (GSEU) is currently participating in hearings before the Massachusetts State Labor Relations Commission, to determine the validity of a graduate employe union. If a favorable ruling is granted, an election date will be set.

The attorney for the University in the hearings has said the dispersement of the $1000 is in violation of the State Labor Code, which states that the employer, in this case the University, cannot interfere, assist or dominate the formation of such a group.

Flashman said the Graduate Student Senate is also looking into the matter through the chancellor's office.

She termed the action on the part of the University "clearly anti-union".

Flashman made her remarks at an open membership meeting of the group in Thompson Tower, which drew about 15 union members. The GSEU estimates there are about 650 members now in the union, out of the approximately 1900 teaching assistants and research assistants within the graduate school.

Flashman said the group is in debt for legal fees and needs the $1000 "very badly".

The legal fees will grow, she said, because the labor relations commission has extended the hearings for three additional days in December to allow for additional testimony.

The GSEU has organized in 12 departments since its inception in November 1975, but has members in all academic departments.

In other action, those attending the meeting heard reports from a few of the organized departments in relation to the GSEU.

GSEU members in the Rhetoric Dept. have asked that certain demands be met in contracts for the next academic year. The report said the department seems agreeable to the demands, which include a reduction in the number of sections each grad student is to teach, a reduction in the workload to that of five years ago, and no more fractioning jobs to two or more students where one grad student could fill the position.

The group also heard a report on the GSEU book sale which concludes today. In the first day of sales, the group took in a profit of $300 on books donated by members of the UMass community. The sale is being held in the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union.

Accompanying today's Collegian is the Winter Sports Special featuring previews and feature stories on the UMass winter sports teams compiled by the Collegian's sports department. Also included in the special are complete schedules and analysis of Winter teams' opponents.

Union authority effects change

David Olken

Robert B. Turcotte

By CHRIS WOODCOCK
Collegian Staff

The major benefit of a professional staff union lies in its ability to provide a base of power and authority to affect change, according to Robert B. Turcotte, former president of the Professional Staff Association (PSA) at the University of, Rhode Island (URI).

The PSA is a Rhode Island union affiliated with the National Education Association.

Turcotte, speaking at yesterday afternoon's senate meeting of the Professional Association of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst (PAUMA), said the PSA at the University of Rhode Island has been "very effective in a good number of areas."

Turcotte's appearance at the PAUMA meeting was prompted by the upcoming faculty union elections, to be held December 1 and 2, in which the faculty units on both the UMass-Amherst and Boston campuses will decide whether or not to employ a bargaining unit.

The faculty unit includes faculty and some related professional staff who participate in teaching, counseling, and library work.

Turcotte was asked to speak because the PSA at the University of Rhode Island provides the "closest model of a working, healthy faculty union," according to PAUMA speaker Robert L. Chew.

Turcotte explained the circumstances at URI leading up to the formation of a professional staff union saying the turning point came when administrative support did not increase in relation to the expanded services provided.

"We wanted to be rewarded for extra services," Turcotte said. "In order to get relief from these concerns we had to form a collective bargaining agency."

She said some of these policies were probably in effect already, such as pregnancy leave and child care leave, but that others, like the grievance procedure, needed vast improvement.

The AAUP, she said, leaves these policy making decisions up to their local chapters.

National dues are a maximum of $36 per year according to Polowy, and the annual local fee is usually between $75 and $100.

With these funds, she said, the local chapters can hire counsel for lawsuits, lobbyists or to retain lawyers for other legal services relating to the grievance procedure.

The UMass chapter of the AAUP is not a recognized collective bargaining agent by the state legislature as yet. The Massachusetts Society of Professors, affiliated with the statewide Massachusetts Teachers Association, is represented with such an agent.

Polowy said the AAUP has no interest in controlling traditional faculty concerns such as curriculum or graduation requirements.

Turcotte pointed to two basic considerations in a decision of whether or not to form a professional staff union.

"First," he said, "you have to take an honest look at yourself and at your colleagues and see if you're getting fair treatment. Then you have to look at the political realities of the university. Is the board of Trustees going to talk to you in good faith when you have no bargaining power?"

Another basis for the support of unionization, according to Turcotte, lies in the fact that professional staffers are better managers than the administration.

"We are better at what we do," said Turcotte. "We have specialists in all kinds of areas. We have the talent, the vitality, the resources to be better administrators. We are always going to be better than they are. The administration has maybe a dozen top level administrators, we have a pool of 600."

Turcotte explained that the professional staff's position within the university changes as a result of unionization, especially in the area of responsibility.

"You will be forced to take on personnel and management roles," he stated. "You must be prepared to take on heavy responsibilities of administration, and that means sacrifice."

The transition from being just a group of professionals to being recognized as an actual union will not be an easy one, Turcotte said.

AAUP forum for improvement

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

An associate counsel to the national board of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) told a small gathering of faculty yesterday that the AAUP will provide the best forum to improve the status of women and minority faculty at UMass.

Carolyn Polowy said the AAUP provides a high degree of autonomy to campus organizations affiliated with their group, and because of this, the local groups can decide the policies they with to pursue in collective bargaining concerning discrimination.

Polowy, speaking in the Campus Center to a group which ranged in size from four to eight persons, said that in her experience, collective bargaining provides a better format for grievance procedures usually related to salary or rank complaints.

The AAUP and the Massachusetts Society of Professors are the two professional organizations seeking to become the faculty's representative in collective bargaining. A recent Massachusetts State Labor Relations Commission ruling has also included librarians, some part-time faculty, and some professional staff and librarians in the bargaining unit.

These faculty and staff will vote in elections Dec. 1 and 2, at both the Amherst and Boston campuses of the University to choose between the two groups and "no agent".

Polowy discussed a series of policies which she felt collective bargaining facilitates: salary equity review on a campus-wide basis, the grievance procedure, affirmative action, pregnancy leave, child care leave, and a full-scale rank review.

NEAG president resigns; cites 'personal' reasons

By RICHARD KLEIN
Collegian Staff

John Weisse, president of the Northeast Area Government (NEAG), has announced that he is resigning, effective the end of this semester.

Weisse, at a NEAG meeting last night, cited personal reasons, which he said "I really don't want to get into now". The area government will have to choose a new president by the end of the semester, Weisse said.

Treasurer John Gross itemized the area government's expenditures of $1111. 90. The largest allocations were for movie expenses and for a new weight room.

The area government is sponsoring a free "Film Festival" this Friday, Nov. 19, in the East Room of Worcester Dining Commons. The movies to be presented are "Sleuth" at 8 p.m. and "Straw Dogs" at 10 p.m.

The weight room should be ready next semester. The equipment has been ordered and should arrive in two or three weeks.

There was much discussion of a proposal for an area pottery room in Dwight dormitory. Results of a survey that had been distributed indicate that about 70 per cent of the respondents favored the idea of establishing a pottery room.

The main question concerning the project is its as yet undetermined cost. The kiln would cost about $250, tools and clay about $50 to $100 per semester.

One NEAG member "guesstimated" that $2000 might be needed to outfit the room with the necessary equipment such as a sink and a hood. Funding sources for this cost are being investigated.

The area representatives approved by a vote of nine to six the transfer of $1200 of Program Support Funds to the Sylvan Area Government. This was a vote of confidence for the Executive Business Committee of Sylvan-Northeast, which actually controls these funds. The Executive Business Committee took the action to help alleviate Sylvan's severe and pressing financial problems.

In a related development, representatives from the joint Northeast-Sylvan Area Governments Activity Committee reported no significant action at their last meeting due to Sylvan's financial condition.

An area-wide Ping-Pong tournament was proposed by Robert Jones. Most members liked the idea, and agreed to discuss the specifics with their constituents. The representatives decided that the event will probably take place early next semester.

A committee set-up for next semester was proposed by Beth Tibbetts, NEAG secretary. She proposed the establishment of a Quad-Day committee, a Semi-formal committee, and a fund-raiser committee to expedite these activities. A "planning committee" was also proposed to investigate new ideas as they come up.

FacSen meeting on bargaining set

By D.A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

Professor Eric Einhorn, chairperson of the Faculty Senate Rules Committee yesterday announced there will be an open meeting of University faculty on Monday, Nov. 29 to discuss collective bargaining issues and the future of the Faculty Senate under collective bargaining.

The meeting will be held at 3:30 p.m. in SBA 120, Einhorn said at yesterday's Faculty Senate meeting.

The agencies who desire to become the collective bargaining agents for UMass faculty, the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) and the Massachusetts Teachers' Association (MTA), will attend the meeting and answer questions from the faculty about collective bargaining.

The vote between the two groups and "no agent" will be held Dec. 1 and 2 in rooms 168-172 of the Campus Center from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery attended a meeting yesterday at UMass President Robert C. Wood's office in Boston with the chancellors of the UMass campuses at Boston and Worcester to discuss the alliance settlement of faculty salaries.

The settlement, he said, will be voted on today, and if it is accepted, will go to the governor for his decision. He also said an agreement had been made to consider those faculty members in the University who are not under collective bargaining.

In other action, the senate passed a motion to create a committee to evaluate the chancellor and another motion for an ad-hoc committee to evaluate the president of the university. Both committees will be made up of students and faculty members.

Day of fast, fund raising culminates in conference

By CAROL FLYNN
Collegian Staff

The first annual Oxfam America Conference was held last night in the Public Health Building. The conference, attended by about ten students, followed a day of fasting by some UMass students.

The fast was held to raise money for underdeveloped nations to improve their farming methods, nutritional knowledge and general education.

This year, only about $200 was collected from UMass, a great reduction from last year.

The fast has been very successful in past years at Mount Holyoke College and many other institutions, according to Howard I. Goldman, who organized the fast at UMass.

At Mount Holyoke this year the fast was supported by the administration and forty per cent of the student body. The fast resulted in more than $1100 for the cause, Goldman said.

According to Dr. George Cenardo, a professor at the UMass Graduate School of Public Health, Oxfam America succeeds in getting its funds to go where they are really needed, as opposed to many organizations that tie up a great percentage of their funds in administrative overhead. There is waste in all these programs, he said, but Oxfam seems to be more responsible.

It is commonly realized Cenardo said, that quite often the food or money that is supposed to be donated to needy countries is often sold to the nations that can afford to buy it, and the nations that really need it do not get it.

"I am down on the philosophy of many charitable organizations because they do not support self-help. They want the countries to remain physically and politically dependent," he said.

"Oxfam is the best of a very bad lot. They don't have high overhead. Although they do lack technical expertise, they are very good hearted. If you are going to give a buck, you might as well give it to Oxfam," he said.

Another speaker, Dr. Guy Morocco, a pathologist at the Cooley-Dickinson Hospital, Northampton, spoke about the hygienic conditions in developing nations, with particular reference to Afghanistan and Jamaica. He said that virtually 100 per cent of the people in Afghanistan contract tuberculosis before the age of 20. This is due primarily to poor health education. This disease is also shared by 100 per cent of their cattle.

There are many other existing conditions that lead to disease in this country, Morocco said, such as human waste disposal in fields, cleansing of food in dirty water, and general lack of knowledge of proper hygiene.

Other water-borne diseases such as cholera are very prevalent, he said.

He said that education could help the people to understand that hygiene is needed for a healthy existence.

Dr. Mark Bert, from the Dept. of Food Science and Nutrition, spoke about the irreversible effects of brain damage on malnourished infants with particular reference to kwashiorkor and marasmus.

These diseases, he said, are caused by severe protein deficiency at a young age. Children in these countries are offered insufficient diets that contain little protein. In severe cases the child becomes permanently brain damaged.

Dr. Bert showed a film dealing with these two diseases and the eventual cure of both.

To help relieve these diseases high protein, low cost foods have been developed. Education of nutritional needs can also help.

Next year, the program will be more publicized to encourage greater student involvement at UMass.

Business, government reps here

The Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students (CCEBS) is sponsoring its third annual Career Day on Tuesday, Nov. 23, from 2 to 6 p.m. on the lower level of the Campus Center.

The purpose of the event is to provide CCEBS students with an opportunity to meet personnel recruiters from various businesses in order to explore job possibilities and to learn what an undergraduate student must do to prepare for employment, according to Michael L. Jackson, director of CCEBS.

Rosslyn C. Sherman, coordinator of the graduate and career development division of CCEBS, said yesterday that 35 companies and federal agencies from the northeastern part of the country will attend Career Day. Among these are the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, the Internal Revenue Service, Harvard University, Aetna Life and Casualty Insurance Company, and John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Company.

"Career Day is an activity for CCEBS students. They will be the primary recipients of all the tangible benefits and we expect them to give 100 per cent support," said Sherman.

"The success of this Career Day and all others hereafter depends on the students. It is important that students show an interest as this is a unique opportunity for them to explore the realities of future employment," Sherman added.

"Large numbers of representatives from corporations and agencies will be present to pass on vital career information," she said. "Job opportunities will encompass career placement, internships, and summer placement."

CCEBS Career Day will commence at noon, Sherman said, with a luncheon on the tenth floor of the Campus Center that will give students a chance to meet prospective employers in an informal setting.

Group seeks support for Israel

By BRUCE SMITH
JNS

For the first time at UMass, a drive for the Israel Emergency Fund has been launched. Last week several people were going door-to-door to try to raise money for this charity that sponsors many social services in Israel.

This week, in the Campus Center Concourse, a table has been set up to collect funds and, more importantly, to inform people of the critical situation that exists in Israel today.

Lynne Satlof and Carol Weiner, two of the many people that have given up their time to try to help Israel, stressed the educational aspect as opposed to strictly earning money:

"We feel one of the most important goals is to raise an awareness on campus concerning this issue. Once people learn about what is happening in Israel today and become aware of their urgent needs, we hope that they will want to give their support in many ways."

Some startling facts were brought up in regard to the desperate situation in Israel. Some of them are as follows:

The Israeli people are the highest taxed people in the world. They pay an incredible 70 per cent income tax. This means that a person earning $100 only gets $30. In addition to this tax, a new sales tax has been added, bringing the current tax up to 78 per cent total. Translated into dollars, if a person buys a meal for $5 dollars, he has to pay $6. This is true for everything the Israelis purchase.

The reason for this exorbitant tax, is that Israel is surrounded by twenty Arab nations seeking her destruction. Over 30 per cent of the Gross National Product (GNP) in Israel must go to defense for Israel to be secure militarily. The US only spends 6 per cent of the GNP, and this runs into hundreds of billions of dollars.

Because of this high defense need, many social services in Israel are being forced to close. The government has had to cut $90,000,000 from services such as aid to the aged, sick and handicapped, immigrant housing and absorption, job training and education. In fact, the government for the first time has had to limit state paid education to the 10th grade. Anything above 10th grade has to be paid by the individual.

Israel must depend on money from abroad to help pay for sorely needed services. The Israel Emergency Fund raises money strictly for the social services. No money goes to military spending. Also, 100 per cent of the money raised is sent to Israel, none is spent for workers, advertising, etc.

The drive this year is more important than ever, because more people in Israel are not able to earn enough money to support their families with essential services that we take for granted. The government of Israel is in debt $8.4 billion, and must undertake severe austerity measures to try to make a sound economy. That is why the Israel Emergency Fund is so important this year.

The goal of the UMass Israel Emergency Fund is $1,500. Lynne and Carol ended with this appeal:

"Thus far, we have been pleased by the general response from students on campus. We hope that this interest in Israel will not die out at the end of this week, and that collection for the Israel Emergency Fund will become an annual event."

News in Brief

Fallout to hit U.S.

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The fallout cloud from China's nuclear blast Wednesday morning will begin arriving over the Pacific Northwest Saturday evening, the Environmental Protection Agency said yesterday.

"At this time it is not possible to predict the exact levels of radioactivity that might occur in the United States," EPA said. "However, the usual case would be that the material would be largely confined to the upper atmosphere and ground-level exposures would be quite low.

"There is the possibility that turbulent low pressure systems and subsequent rain might bring the material to earth which would be significant through the pasture-cow-milk pathway to man."

Heavy rainfall after the last Chinese blast Sept. 26 resulted in detectable fallout levels on the ground in Pennsylvania and other eastern states.

SALT LAKE CITY: Condemned murderer Gary Gilmore, who tried to take his life in suicide pact with his fiancee, glares over his shoulder, yesterday, as he is lead from the University Medical Center by prison guards. (UPI Telephoto)

Unemployment drops

BOSTON [UPI] — The New England unemployment rate declined to 7.1 per cent in September, according to statistics released yesterday by the U.S. Labor department.

Wendell D. Macdonald, Regional Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, says unemployment fell in all six New England states when in August 7.8 per cent of the region's workers were out of jobs.

He said the number of jobless workers decreased by 40,000 to a total of 395,900 during September.

Political reform

MADRID, Spain [UPI] — The Franco-era Cortes yesterday approved a bill to abolish itself and set up a Western-style parliamentary system in Spain.

The bill, the final and most important part of the government's program of democratic reforms, passed 425-59, with 13 abstentions.

The bill amounted to the decisive step in dismantling the Franco regime, as many deputies said during the three-day Cortes debate. It was passed two days before the first anniversary of the death of Generalissimo Francisco Franco, who ruled Spain for 36 years.

Spaniards must approve the reforms in a referendum scheduled for mid-December.

The new parliament which will replace the Cortes will be elected during the first half of 1977 in what is expected to be Spain's first free election in more than 40 years.

Approval of the law in an often tense debate was a victory for democratic-minded King Juan Carlos and the cabinet of Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez. Against the advice of many opposition groups, they had insisted on carrying the reform through the constitutional channels and having it approved by the Francoist-dominated Cortes.

The majority exceeded by far the necessary two-thirds majority. With 497 of the 531 Cortes members present at the vote, the government needed 330 votes for passage.

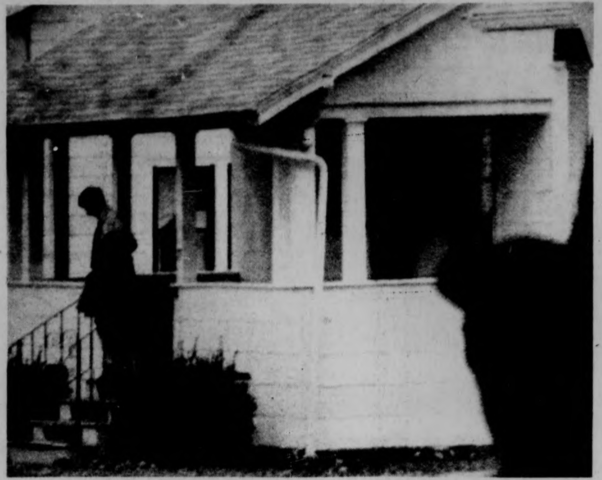
Prisoners released

SANTIAGO, Chile [UPI] — Chile's military government, under sharp international criticism for alleged human rights violation, freed 166 political prisoners yesterday bringing the total released in two days to 295.

President Gen. Augusto Pinochet denied that the decision to free the political prisoners had been influenced by President-elect Jimmy Carter and vowed that "restrictive measures of security and order" will be left intact.

Another 888 persons either being tried by military tribunals or already serving prison terms for political reasons were not affected by the general amnesty.

The prisoners freed yesterday were bused into Santiago under heavy guard from Puchuncavi, a prison camp on the Pacific coast, and released at the Tres Alamos prison camp in the capital's southern outskirts.



ROCHESTER, N.Y.: Rochester Times reporter Mike Shore leaves the suburban home where he had been held hostage for about four hours by an alleged jewelry store bandit. Shortly after Shore was released, the suspect, John Martazzo of New York City, shot himself in the head and died in the hospital one-and-a-half hours later. (UPI Telephoto)

Carter appoints Ben Brown; first Black

PLAINS, Ga. [UPI] — President-elect Jimmy Carter, in line with a campaign pledge to tap minority group talent for high government service, will appoint Georgia state Rep. Ben Brown, a black, to a post in the new administration, Carter's spokesman said yesterday.

Press secretary Jody Powell confirmed reports that Brown, 36, of Atlanta, Carter's former deputy campaign director, will get an unspecified job in the transition organization and, later, appointment to a post in the administration.

Blacks voted overwhelmingly for Carter, and the president-elect said after the election he would appoint large numbers of minority persons to compensate for their exclusion in the past.

Carter spent the day in his one-story brick home, signing correspondence and reviewing proposals for financial disclosure and divestiture by high-level appointees.

Powell said these also included suggestions as to how Carter might handle his own holdings of farmland and a peanut warehouse, "although I think no one expects him to sell a farm, which has been in the family for several generations."

Carter and Vice President-elect Walter Mondale will get their first post-election briefing from CIA Director George Bush in Plains Friday and will meet with Secretary of State Henry Kissinger in Plains Saturday.

Carter will fly to Washington Sunday on a 48-hour trip.

He will meet with President Ford in the White House Monday afternoon. That same day, cabinet members and Federal Reserve chairman Arthur Burns will meet Carter at his government-owned lodgings across from the White House.

Blind justice

By the time that the Utah execution affair is over, there will no doubt be a few more bleeding hearts of various kinds in this country. Those pseudo-progressive types will no doubt bleat more loudly than ever about the cruelty of capital punishment. But that is all sound without substance.

All truly enlightened people will finally have something to rejoice over this week, when our society will be rid of the first of the made dog killers who have so plagued the nation during the murderous decade since our last execution. We exult with them that the great state of Utah will finally break the vicious circle of judicial permissiveness when it carries out sentence on Garry Mark Gilmore. The only surprising thing is that it is not Georgia, the usual trend-setter in such matters, which will take the first step. But then it is understandable that Georgia would not want the credit for both Jimmy Carter and Blind Justice all in one month.

However, Utah is showing that it can handle the job quite adequately. It is also doing its best to put some of the fun back into justice. Executions used to be somber occasions. Electrocutions would take place in small, dark chambers with maybe two or three dark-suited state witnesses. Official hangings would be carried out in silence and solemnity in the early dawn hours. (Unofficial hangings were better carried out at night.) In short, few ever derived pleasure from executions. But that may now change since Utah has decided to have a firing party.

All those concerned have responded favorably to their invitations. Utah officials will surely be there. Mr. Gilmore, the guest of honor, has already indicated that he would not miss him going-out party for the world, and has even suggested that the date be moved up. The only problem that apparently still remains to be solved is deciding who will do the catering. But there seems to be no shortage of people willing to take a shot at it. And no wonder. For some, participating in a firing squad function is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity. We just hope that qualified women and minorities will be hired in proportion to their number on Death Row.

For some, participating in a firing squad function is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity....

Despite Utah's fine innovations, we must admit that one aspect of the affair still rankles. Being firm believers in the principles of egalitarianism, we resent the exclusiveness of this function. It rightfully belongs to the people, who after all are paying for the prison facilities with their tax dollars. But while Utah officials continue to be uncooperative on that issue, there are signs that Mr. Gilmore and his attorney, Dennis Boaz, are also concerned with this problem.

In a variation on a Saudi Arabian theme, Mr. Boaz, presumably with his client's concurrence, has suggested that his client be shot in public as a deterrent to other criminals. "I think executions ought to be on prime time. Then we would get some deterrent out of it." Not to mention large audiences and rave reviews. Now that the networks' "Family Hour" policy has been ruled unconstitutional, the 8-9 o'clock slot should be used. That way the whole family could be deterred. Highlights and instant replays could be shown on the "Tonight" show.

As a heartwarming footnote, Mr. Boaz has let it be nown that he intends to give 50 per cent of the royalties he will receive from writing the inside story of the execution to charity. Hopefully this will set a precedant for future class of this sort. It might even be possible to exhort convicts with life sentences to ask for execution so that charities will be benefited. Give so more will live.

Lastly, may we suggest that all condemned prisoners be transferred to Utah where they may be dispatched in the style to which we will soon become accustomed.

In light of the pornography referendum results, we are certainly glad that Southwest has a Civil Liberties Committee. Unconfirmed reports have reached us that the Committee will live up to its name and promptly challenge the constitutionality of the pornography ban in the University Judiciary.

Here we go again

Here we go again. It is time to pre-register for next semester's courses. I have my schedule booklet and course description handy to help me. It has to be easier this time around (it certainly can't be any worse).

Last semester, my first semester at this highly esteemed University, was a disaster as far as scheduling goes. I was undecided on my major and totally lost when it came time to pick specific courses. I had in my possession a course description guide and I found it to be very little help. I couldn't understand how anyone could choose good courses with so little information. I eventually chose my courses, but not without numerous frenzied add-drop rearrangements.

Now I have decided on what my major is, so it should be much easier to choose the best course for myself. I have my trusty course description guide at my side which will provide basic, necessary information. But again I have found the guide nothing more than little summaries of a partial listing of the courses.

What other ways can I choose my courses? Well, some of the more scientific methods available are choosing by title, speculation, guesswork, or by a little help from my friends. The last method is the one that seems to be helping me the most. Over last semester when someone said to me, "You should take this course because it is very well taught and knowing your interests I think you would like it." Or some people said (usually right after they had had the class), "Don't ever take the class it is the worst I have ever taken. Avoid it like the plague." Some people would walk away proud of themselves for taking the course and spreading the good news while others would be swearing under their breath and would be secretly snickering because they had relieved their frustration via revenge.

During these informative monologues I would grab any piece of scrap paper available and furiously write down the title of the course, the course number, the name of the instructor, and I would take notes on the actual criticism. I would also take the person's pencil that I had borrowed temporarily; they were usually too emotional to notice the theft.

So, I have a large surplus of pencils cluttering up my room and I can't find the vital pieces of paper. All I find are scraps of paper with indistinguishable blackish smudges and strewn with particles of red rubber. I think the pencils are getting me back because I abducted them. Anyway I wish I had put the papers in a safe place (away from the pencils) where I could find them now. They would be very helpful and I would not be in the same predicament as last semester.

Some people have suggested that I go to the different instructors of each course I am interested in to find out the specifics. It would take an awful large amount of time and there is a deadline to meet — or else. Imagine if every student went to the instructors to ge the low down on every course. There would be chaos. Schedules would be disrupted. But, on the other hand, it might be a lot of fun. "I'm sorry," said the Harlequin, humbly.

I am really disappointed in myself for not being able to save those pieces of paper. I could kick myself. But instead of kicking myself, I am going to bury my course description guide. It is biodegradable, isn't it?

Wayward boys

At a time when the state of Massachusetts is suffering from economic burdens and over-expenditures in low priority areas, when most human services are suffering with poverty-level budgets, it is indeed comforting to know that the Belchertown Home for Wayward Boys is alive, well and functioning efficiently. This correction house is quite different than the state school and hospital, in that the maximum occupancy rate of six allows the habitants to deal with each other on an intimate, personalized level, on a one-to-one basis that lends itself to individual therapy. Counseling is unscheduled, individual or collective and done by the boys themselves or by the supervisors.

For the most part, the boys are left to their own devices (or vices) yet there are two part-time and one full-time volunteer supervisors. They are on hand to smooth out the edges if and when the occasion arrises. Occasionally overnight guests are allowed to give the boys cultural diversity and social awareness lest they start feeling frustrated from monotony.

The Home is partially funded by the government to subsidize food and boarding costs. The difference is made up by the boys themselves through their choice of rehabilitation projects. Two work at a local printing press doing paste-up for the Daily Confusion, another works in the kitchen of the UMass Health Services, while another works at the Soup Kitchen in Northampton. All serve to provide the boys with a working understanding of the responsibilities of budget control.

The Home is allowed to have pets which remains a controversial issue within the management board of the program. It has been argued that the boys have a hard enough time looking after themselves, nevermind pets, but the majority of the board decided that the responsibilities entailed in pet ownership are educational and therapeutic. When no one else is home, at least one has the dogs to talk to.

The Home is located about eight miles from campus, away from the maddening crowd that could lead these wayward fellows down the road to destruction and further deviancy. The house has only one story since some of the boys lack the physical coordination required to climb stairs. It rests amidst trees and shrubbery, with an open front yard for the boys to run off their excess energies. Exercise is encouraged; some of them play on the UMass Frisbee Team with permission from their doctors. And they play quite well, considering. Activities vary according to individual tastes — some attend classes here at the university, one builds waterbed frames and another assumes the role of ace reporter.

The abuse of alcohol and marijuana are recognized, yet not condemned, as they help to keep the boys sedated and under control. Idle hands are the devil's tool so rolling joints keeps them busy. Being high also helps the supervisors and guests feel at ease with the patients.

It is difficult to pinpoint the causes of the inhabitants' deviancies — one revealed to me in a telephone interview that he was a hormonal deviant which may explain part of the problem. They are prone to fits of hysterical laughter, and have been known to take out their frustrations on the stereo, bathtub and guitar. But in general, all is quiet on the wayward front.

Visiting hours are flexible and open to the public, but if you go there, please don't stare. They can't help themselves.

outdoor scene

A mountain resort

By DAVID T. SIRKIN

Something is missing. M.I.T. has one. UMaine has one. Harvard has one. U.N.H. has two. Dartmouth has seven. UMass is indeed lacking.

What is it that all of these schools have, leaving us far behind? The answer: An outdoors cabin!

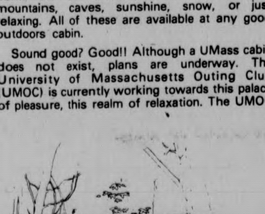
I can already hear some of the urbanites questioning my sanity.

"What?! One of those funny log things that Abe Lincoln used to sleep in?"

"Oh Yeah? What course is it for, 'Antisocial Aspects of the Hermit, 132'?"

In fact, to many people, a cabin is the ultimate in living conditions. No city noises, no ultra-modern conveniences to break down, and plenty of good, clean comfort. Heating by wood fires. Water from a well. The sounds of nature, unlike a dorm on a weekend. Birds, wildflowers, mountains, caves, sunshine, snow, or just relaxing. All of these are available at any good outdoors cabin.

Sound good? Good!! Although a UMass cabin does not exist, plans are underway. The University of Massachusetts Outing Club (UMOC) is currently working towards this palace of pleasure, this realm of relaxation. The UMOC cabin committee, an 11 member panel, has already begun drafting plans.



The finished cabin will be approxiamtely 16 by 40 feet with sleeping capacity for upwards of 25 people. It will have a large fireplace, a stove, sink, open floor area, and a sleeping loft.

As to a location, land is being researched in the White Mountain area of northern New Hampshire.

Although the cabin will be maintained by the Outing Club, it will be available for use by the entire University Community.

One of the main problems in planning the cabin is finances. Although the club held a raffle last month, it's profits are only a drop in the bucket. The main expense will not be the cabin, but rather, the purchase of the land to put it on. This is expected to cost 2½ to 3 times as much as the cabin itself. Labor for the cabin will not cost, since the manpower will come directly from volunteers.

During the upcoming week, petitions will be circulated among the student body. A large collection of signatures will show that the people of this campus are actually in support of this project. Then, an appeal will be made to the student senate for funding. According to the figures of the cabin committee, this funding would require about 50 cents of each undergraduates student activity fee. (This is the fee which each student pays at the beginning of the semester to support the operations of recognized student organizations.)

The cabin will then exist for the use of university students. Only by signing the petitions and speaking to your student senators does the cabin stand a chance of being built. The Outing Club is trying to build for UMass its own mountain resort.

Interested??? Come to any Outing Club meeting on Monday nights, or attend a cabin committee meeting. Times and places are posted on the Outing Club bulletin board (in the S.U., next to the ride board).

Grad senate responds to cutbacks

To the Editor:

The Graduate Student Senate of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst has noted with steadily growing concern, the recent moves to cut back governmental aid the child care facilities in this area. The number of funded Welfare slots for the Amherst area has been substantially reduced and, as announced in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian on Monday, the Hampshire Community Action Commission has now dealt another blow to the dwindling supply of quality child care.

The Senate has for several years been a propenent of the cause of children's welfare, and has done its best, with the limited resources available to it, to bear some small part of the burden of supporting agencies both on and off campus. However, as times passes, we see the University and the State alike relinquishing more and more of the burden, with fewer and fewer places being made available to those who have chosen to further their education, undertaking the financial sacrifice that such a step often involves.

On Monday, at its weekly meeting, the Senate was informed of the latest cutbacks in the area, and chose to pass, by a Unanimous vote, and after somewhat impassioned discussion, the following motion:

"MOVED — That the Graduate Student Senate deplores the intolerate situation resulting from bureaucratic inefficiences, a cost-accounting mentality and a complete absence of any regard for good faith or human welfare on the part of the Massachusetts Welfare Department, in respect of its recent dealings with local child care authorities."

I hope that you feel able to respond to the sentiments here expressed, both in words and in actions to redress the problems caused.

Time for a change

To the Editor:

It is a disgrace that all the sandwiches sold at the Top of the Campus Restaurant contain animal flesh.

If the TOC management remains insensitive to non-meat eaters, then perhaps they should be moved into where Earthfoods works out of now, and then Earthfoods could serve at the TOC.

To the Editor:

I would like to respond to Charlotte Allen's commentary in the Friday, Nov. 12 paper. First I would like to stress most strongly that discussing lesbianism and lesbian separatism [there is a difference] in the Collegian is totally inappropriate. Second for Charlotte to speak of a socio-political-philosophical ideology which she, obvious from her articles, knows nothing about, is not only absurd, but politically damaging to all women. I am amazed at the insensitivity she shows.

Changing Signs

By JACOB LOVE

The astrological weather for the day should be fair and mild as the Moon makes four minor planetary connections. The Moon, symbolizing our emotional growth around the Zodiac, is finishing up in Libra (the sign of balance in relationships) this morning and moves on into Scorpio (the sign of regeneration) this afternoon. She's headed for her moon-thly meeting with the Sun — the New Moon — Sunday morning at 10:11 a.m. Between now and then we can expect to wrap up our last month's business and empty ourselves to begin a new cycle. This past cycle emphasized partnership-productivity, as it originated in Scorpio, and those partnerships which survived last month's crises will go on to new heights of achievement. On the other hand, those that failed to regenerate have degenerated beyond repair.

Several planets have moved on into the next sign, around the Zodiac over this past week. Last Sunday, Venus, the goddess of love, moved out of Sagittarius and into Capricorn, the sign of struggling up the mountain. As she moves thru that sign over the next three weeks we should not expect love to come easily. Mercury, the planet of rationality and communication, moved out of Scorpio and into Sagittarius Wednesday and, since this is the sign of Deep Wisdom, we might expect the next few weeks to contain insights which seem to lie just beyond the grasp of our ability to put in into words. The potential for gaining wisdom will increase but only genuine students of philosophy will find it within reach of the conscious mind.

Mars, the athletic planet, will move out of Scorpio and into Sagittarius Saturday at midnite. Since "Sag" is a very athletic sign (symbolized by the centaur, half-man and half-horse) we can expect a great increase in the quality of spectator sports as well as an increase in our own desire to run around and enjoy the freedom of energetic motion.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Friday, November 19 — Born today, you are fond of travel and, in fact, find it difficult to remain year after year in the same surroundings. On the other hand, you enjoy having about you the same people and for this reason are inclined -- assuming you are enough blessed with money to be able to afford it – to travel with a regular entourage, some of whom are loyal and loving friends, some of whom, unfortuantely, are hangers-on who hope for whatever material crumb they can get out of you. Somewhat uncertain as to where you will go, how long you will stay, what you will do once you get there and to what end, you often go for weeks and months without any firm plan of action.

Kind-hearted, sensitive, sympathetic, you make friends easily and keep them long. Indeed, only some extremely disloyal act could cause you to terminate a friendly relationship, for you believe that once such a relationship has been established, there is something quite sacred about it, something that you are honor-bound to protect and safeguard. There are, of course, some who will play upon that characteristic of yours and take advantage of you; you should, however, be able to take care of yourself in this regard.

Saturday, November 20

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Keep the key to another's nature to yourself; otherwise, you may well lose the advantage you gained when the key was vouchsafed to you.

SAGITTAIRUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — The pleasure you take from domestic life should be obvious to all with even slight powers of observation. A good day.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — So long as you know which is the master and which the servant, which the governor and which the governed, all should ultimately end well.

AQUARIUS Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Consider the question of family fun in a new light. You may be pushing too hard for the light-hearted rather than the challenging.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Wisdom leads you into the making of decisions others may cause you to regret. Take a second look and be proud of being right.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Your liability causes another considerable concern. Make an effort to lay the fears of loved ones to rest; Be an observer today.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Reflective thought brings you to the attention of a man of influence. A good deed early in the day brings rewards by evening.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Changeable youngsters make it possible for you to lead without seeming to boss. Vary your approach in accordance with the time of day.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Your own conscience keeps you from making an obvious and common mistake. Reconsider a recent decision for change. Stability proves attractive.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Another peculiar conception of how a new kind of work ought to be accomplished gains you unexpected support. Realize an ambition.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — An explosive meeting between enemies may cause upset on the home front. Don't allow yourself the luxury of going to pieces.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — A barrier to your enterprise may cause you to take a new tack. Adapt quickly to new circumstances on the home front.

ATTENTION RSO's

Any RSO desiring funding from the Student Senate for fiscal year 1978 must submit a budget rationale to the Senate Budgets Committee by Tuesday, November 23. Minutemen host Eagles in finale

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

The disappointing 1976 UMass football team will attempt to close out its season on a positive note tomorrow afternoon, when the big-time city slickers, the Boston College Eagles, invade the peaceful rural setting of Alumni Stadium for a 1 p.m. kickoff.

The Minutemen, who convincingly lost the Yankee Conference title to New Hampshire last week, 23-0, are going to have to turn in their best overall performance of the year just to stay within striking distance of the Eagles. A strong performance by the Minutemen could make things rather interesting on Saturdav.

BC has been suffering from the same problems the Minutemen have encountered all season long, and that is inconsistency. The Eagles just have not reached their potential or their early-season expectations because of little mistakes, such as fumbles and penalties, which have been BC's achilles heel this season.

BC coach Joe Yukica brings to Amherst a team that has thus far compiled a 6-3 record, but even with the early season upset over nationally ranked Texas, losses to Villanova, Florida St. and Miami have tarnished the Eagles winning record.

The Eagles' strength lies in its defensive unit. Up front the Eagles average 6'3" and 240 lbs., and are led by defensive end Bryon Hemingway, a 6'2" - 220 lbs. senior, and Fred Smerlas, a 6'4" - 275 junior defensive tackle from Waltham.

However, the real blood and guts of the BC four-four defensive alignmenent is found in its linebacking corps. Spearheaded by captain Peter Cronan, the four BC linebackers have lead the defensive unit in tackles during the season. Bob Watts is one of the outside linebackers, and for a person 6'3" - 220 lbs., Watts possesses exceptional speed and is an extremely active linebacker.

Kelley Elias, Mike Mayock and Jeff Kaufman are the three deep defensive backs, and between them they have intercepted 15 enemy passes during the season. Elias has seven interceptions and is one of the top pass-snatching leaders in the country.

The only word to describe the Eagles defense which has not allowed an opponent more than 270 yards on offense this year is - awesome. However, if there is a weakness to be found, it is on offense.

"This year's BC team is as talented as any other previous BC team, except at the quarterback spot," said UMass football coach Dick MacPherson.

Junior Ken Smith and Joe O'Brien have been sharing the quarterback spot for coach Yukica this season. Smith is regarded as the better passer, while O'Brien runs the BC option offense better.

So far, in most of its games this season, BC has seemed content just to grind out the yardage by running the ball, and has received great performances from tailback Glen Capriola. Capriola has gained 818 yards so far this season, averaging 3.8 yards per carry, and is the main gog in the Eagles' offense.

Physically, BC comes into tomorrow's game in fine shape, however the Minutemen will be without their fine defensive safety Ron Harris who is the mainstay of the UMass defensive backfield. Harris suffered a seperated shoulder last week, and according to MacPherson is in a lot of pain and will not see any action.

MacPherson is hoping that his team can shake loose from he dauldrems it has been in since the loss to UConn on Homecoming Day.

"The UConn game had to hurt us the most all season long," he said. "Ever since we came home for that game and lost to an 0-6 UConn team, our players just have not been able to recover emotionally from that."

BC is a game our players always look especially forward to and when we play them on Saturday, I guarantee you that every player will be up mentally," MacPherson said.

The UMass-BC game has become a traditional interstate rivalry in which anything can be expected. BC has dominated the series the past three years, winning by large scores in 1973 and 74 and downing the Minutemen, 24-12 last year.

The last time UMass was able to defeat the Eagles in football was in 1972, the year the Minutemen went to the Boardwalk Bowl.

Skaters seek 2nd win; face-off against Chiefs

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

For the third straight year, the UMass hockey has won its opening game in impressive fashion over New England College. And for the third consecutive campaign, the Minutemen will face off against the University of Lowell and St. Anselm's in their next two contests.

But the UMass sextet will be hoping to begin a break from what is fast becoming tradition when it travels to Lowell to meet the Chiefs tomorrow night in a 7:30 game.

For the last two seasons, UMass has come off a season-opening win over NEC only to run into ULowell and a defeat. Last year, the Minutemen led in the third period, 5-3, but folder quicker than an accordion and eventually lost the Orr Rink clash, 7-5. In the 1974-75 campaign, UMass took it on the chin to the tune of 5-1

It will be the opening game of the year for the Chiefs, who had an 11-10-1 record last annum. Coach Bill Riley, entering his eighth season as head hockey mentor, reported that his team played four pre-season scrimmages, against New Hampshire, Boston College, Northeastern, and Providence, and lost them all.

"Although all the teams we played were Division I in the scrimmages, it's my philosophy to play them anyway because it's good experience for the players to play against strong teams," Riley said.

The Division II Chiefs have their top line of last season back intact. John Costello, who led Lowell in scoring last year although only a freshman, centers junior captain Barry Yeadon (the number four point-producer), and sophomore wing Tommy Jacobs (second in point-getting.)

The defense, which is minus a few standouts of last year, including Scott MacKay, who made the Division II honor roll on a number of occasions, returns three regulars.

Senior Ken Dooley, junior Rudy Polermo, and sophomore Gene Hayes will be back on the blue line for the Chiefs this season, while a bunch of freshman are battling it out for the other spots.

Sophomore Mason Legee, last season's number one goaltender, is being pressed for his job by freshman Brian Doyle, Leggee will start, although Riley characterizes the two as being "very even."

UMass, meanwhile, will go with the same lines and defense pairings which manufactured its 9-3 win and 1-0 record. Defenseman Brian Kittredge, who had been listed as doubtful prior to the game, took a regular turn on ice with his partnerp-Chris Lamby, but wing Nick Carney did not see any action.

"He still has his back problem," UMass coach Jack Canniff said. "If he plays at all, it will only be part-time."

Dana Redmond, who played the entire game in the nets for the Minutemen against New England, will start there again tomorrow night.

Despite Lowell's .500 record last season, and the fact that they were winless in pre-season play, Caniff warned, "They're a much better team than last year. They'll probably eventually move up into Division I."

But all the Minutemen are worried about tomorrow night is to prevent history from repeating itself.

Three-putter grid picks

This week's pigskin prophet is pro golfer, Al Geiberger; famed intellectual and renowned three-putter.

Hi, know me? I'm a pro sports celebrity. Maybe you've seen me on television at such well-known golf courses as Pebble Beach and Augusta. I can tell by the quizzical looks on your faces that the name "Geiberger" doesn't ring a bell. That's okay, because in my lifetime I've walked with royalty, conversed with contemporary folk heroes and messed around with Lassie.

Alright, so Lassie isn't your idea of a sex symbol. Okay the King and Queen of Latvia now live in the low-rent district of Brooklyn and the contemporary folk hero was the guy who did the voice of George of the Jungle. At least I still have my personal pride ... even though just last week I had to accept an invitation to play at Tony's Clam and Mini-Putt Plaza. Miller, Nicklaus, Trevino — Those are easy names to remember. Christ, they've even made a saint out of Nicklaus! But nobody remembers Geiberger. Not even my parents. My grandmother used to call me "Late For Dinner."

My family life is going to pieces. My ... my kids all want to be Jimmy Connors and my wife has taken to eating fried foods. My dog committed suicide. My feet don't smell for the first time in weeks only because my nose is clogged. My mouth is dry and I'm getting liver spots under my acne.

Oh, Lord ... the voices! I hear the voices again! ... I'm coming Sir Isaac. Watch out for that apple.

Picking the football scores for the unfortunately incoherent golf star will be his wife "French Fries" Anna Geiberger.

Brothers Bangor meet face-to-face

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

This Saturday marks the end of the 96th year of Minutemen football and features the 15th meeting between interstate rivals UMass and BC. It also presents a more unique and personal two year rivalry between "the brothers Bangor" Peter and Paul McCarty.

The elder McCarty, Peter a junior at UMass has been roving the sod of Alumni stadium as a starting middle linebacker for the past two seasons. Younger brother Paul, a sophomore has been burning up the astroturf at BC's Alumni Stadium as a punt returner, and as the starting flanker for the Eagles this season.

Mention the name McCarty in Maine, and you'll be engulfed in stories about the exploits of the two Bangor High stars. For two seasons the brothers ran roughshod over opposing ballplayers, turning themselves into celebrities throughout the northern state. Both were three lettermen in football, basketball and baseball, but there was never any doubt what sport they excelled in, football. Both were All-State for three years, and after their senior years both were voted high school All Americans. They are also proud recipients of the Fitzpatrick Trophy, signifying the outstanding high school player in the state of Maine for that season. Peter received the award in 1973, and younger brother Paul repeated after his senior year in 1975.

"Peter was the blocking fullback," said a proud Walter McCarty, speaking of his two athletic sons, "while Paul was the quick halfback who did all the scoring."

The 6 foot 215 lb. McCarty decided to attend UMass after he visited many schools, and weighed his options.

Peter McCarty

"There was just something about the campus which I really enjoyed" said Peter; "the coaching staff was great, and it seemed like an enjoyable place to attend school."

While Peter was acquainting himself with the surroundings during his first semester, younger brother Paul continued to dazzle opponents for Bangor High. During his junior year he had set an all-time Maine scoring record by tallying 150 points.

After being heavily recruited, Paul decided to forego playing in the footsteps of his brother, and attend the school on the "heights."

"I wanned to go to a school with a large football reputation, yet still remain somewhat close to home," said the 6 foot 1 inch 185 lb. sophomore.

But the splitting up of the duo has caused problems for a third party, their parents. On certain Saturdays during the fall Laura and Walter McCarty awake at 5:00 a.m., and prepare themselves for the five and a half hour ride to Alumni Stadium. After catching the UMass game during the afternoon, the dedicated parents travel east to the other Alumni Stadium in order to view the Eagles. The game saves them travel time, however it's a game that's not looked forward to.

"It's not an enjoyable game, it's a game we've got to go to, from the opening kickoff all I think about is let's get the game over," said the eldest McCarty.

Neither combatant enjoys the head-on-confrontations, even though in last season's game they hardly touched each other.

"I try not to think about it, it's just part of the game," stated Paul. "I don't like it either," commented Peter, "but after the first few sets of downs you forget about it."

The numbers read 34 for UMass, and 45 for BC in your program, and should they happen to collide during the course of the game don't be surprised if they don't help each other up, and congratulate each other for a job well done.

Oarswomen in regatta

This weekend the women's crew team will prepare to "bundle up" for the Frostbite Regatta to be held in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

The regatta, sponsored by St. Joseph's College, the Vesper Boat Club and the University of Pennsylvania, will feature women crew teams from all over the East.

Coach Doug Frost will lead the UMass contigent of ten oarspersons to Philadelphia where the emphasis will be on conditioning for the spring season.

The women will be in three races with four people in each shell. The UMass participants will feature Faye Blumenthal as coxswain with Joanne Andreas as stroke and Liz Angus, Tricia Donovan, and Laura Love as the bowwomen.

Manning the other boats will be Susan Massey, Sarah Piermarini, Betty Howley, Maureen O'Brien, and Leslie Bellows.

A new year . . . Men's Basketball . . . a new look

Will this be the one to celebrate?

By RON ARENA
Collegian Staff

A new year, a brand new league, and five returning starters provide the impetus for the 1976-77 UMass basketball team.

The new league, the Eastern Collegiate Basketball League (ECBL), with the likes of Rutgers, George Washington, and West Virginia makes for the most demanding season for UMass basketball in its 76 year history.

But with the return of players of the calibre of Jim Town, Mike Pyatt, Mark Donoghue, Derick Claiborne, and Alex Eldridge, each a starter who averaged in double figures for last year's 21-6 squad, the Minutemen have the personnel to meet such a challenge.

"We just have to get tougher now," head coach Jack Leaman assessed. "Personnel-wise, we're good enough to play with these teams. We just have to get tougher mentally and physically and go at them. This is a very physical basketball league.

"We won't really be playing any teams much tougher than, say, Providence College or Holy Cross, teams we've always played," continued the 11th year coach. "It's just a situation where we'll be playing teams of this calibre much more consistently. Every game will be a tough one."

To overcome this, UMass will have to depend on its bench more than ever. Town, last year's New England Player of the Year as a junior, averaged nearly 36 minutes a game. To play that much and still be effective against some of the frontcourts he'll face remains a question, so a strong bench would be a beneficial factor.

The battles being staged to earn starting roles hint that UMass might very well have the necessary depth. Only the 6'7 Town at forward, and 6'2 Claiborne, an underrated junior, at guard have been assured starting roles when the Lea-men debut their squad November 26 in the opening round of the Hall of Fame tournament in Springfield.

"We have some great challenges going on at the other positions," Leaman noted. "Town and Claiborne have been the most consistent players we've had all year. At the other positions, things could change tomorrow or the next day."

Pyatt, a junior, and Donoghue, the senior captain, finished 1-2 in UMass scoring last year, and appear to be good bets to retain their starting roles up front. Donoghue missed the first 10 days of practice with an irregular heartbeat, but was then cleared to begin playing. Their main challenge will come from 6'7 senior Steve Mayfield, and a trio of improved sophomores, 6'9 Len Kohlhaas, 6'5 Eric Williams, and 6'4 Brad Johnson. According to Leaman, the three second-year men have been the most improved players on the team.

Eldridge, a junior who teamed with Claiborne in high school and his first two years here in the backcourt, has been fighting to retain his starting role with junior Chuck Steveskey, and freshman Bill Morrison. Eldridge has been inconsistent, but at his best he has been the man which makes this team go. And since UMass hopes to continue its running game of last year, Eldridge appears to be a vital cog. Steveskey gives the Minutemen a threat from the outside, while Morrison, recruited from the same high school as Al Skinner, is said to play in a similar mold to Skinner.

When practice began four weeks ago, Leaman and his assistants, Fan Gaudette and Ray Ricketts, concentrated on a list of goals for the month. Among these were to play much more physically and aggressively, to have a better team defense, better team discipline, and a more effective fast break.

"I'm pleased with the progress we've made," Leaman said. "We've been running extremely well, and our rebounding has been much more aggressive."

In latter years, the goal of the UMass basketball team has been to win the Yankee Conference, which the Minutemen accomplished the last four years.

"This year changes a little bit," commented the coach. "We'd like to be very representative in the new league, and hope to represent the new league in the NCAA tournament at the end of the year."

To do that, UMass will have to win the league tournament in the Spectrum in Philadelphia, March 3-5. In a format similar to the Atlantic Coast Conference, the winner of the tourney, regardless of its season record, gains an automatic bid to the NCAA regionals.

But March is a long way off. UMass will have 26 games to prep itself for its Spectrum showing. And these upcoming four months promise to provide the most exciting season in UMass history. After all, doesn't an increase in competition provide for an increase in interest?

ECBL

The East's elite eight

By BOB HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

OK, you know about Rutgers. So you know the Eastern Collegiate Basketball League will be tough — after all the Scarlet Knights were in the semi-finals of the NCAA tournament last year, right?

But there are a few other teams in the ECBL, and most of them are tough. In fact, only one had a losing record last season, and most have the majority of their starters back.

Briefly, here's how they stack up:

EAST

Rutgers — 31-2, fourth in the nation last year. Lost All-American Phil Sellers, but if you watched the tournament, names like Ed Jordan, Hollis Copeland, James Bailey and Abdul Anderson ring a bell, and they're all back. Obviously, UMass coach Jack Leaman rates the Scarlet Knights as the team to beat, in both the division and the league.

George Washington — The Colonials have 10 returning lettermen, including four starters, plus three impressive recruits. And a year ago they were 20-7. Guard John Holloran is the leading returning scorer (14.3 last year). Other returning starters are 6-4 junior Les (High Rise) Anderson, 7-2 center Kevin Hall, and 6-6 forward Jim Smith. "They're a run-and-gun team — they'll score a lot of points," said Leaman.

Villanova — "They've got everybody back," said Leaman of the Wildcats, who beat UMass at the Springfield Civic Center last year, 87-82. John Olive and Larry Herron, both 6-7, head a strong front line.

The other squad in the East is, of course, UMass. Generally, this division is considered to be the tougher of the two.

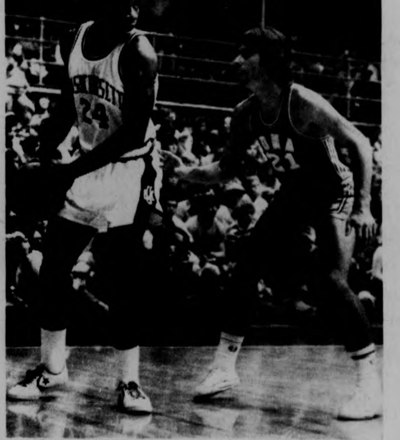
WEST

Pittsburgh — The Panthers had a lot of bad luck with injuries a year ago, and had to go with freshmen and sophomores. Last year's fill-ins, like 6-6 Larry Harris (22.1 avg), and are now veterans. And with some talented recruits, Pitt may be the "class of the West," according to Leaman.

Duquesne — Like everyone else, the Dukes have just about all their starters returning. "They beat us badly," said Leaman of last year's UMass-Duquesne battle at Springfield, (Duquesne, 100-69). Among the returnees are forward Mickey Davilla and 6-2 guard Norm Nixon, (21 points per game last year), who is being touted as an all-America candidate. According to Leaman, the Dukes are "quick, young, with a big front court."

West Virginia — A traditional basketball powerhouse, and the alma mater of Jerry West, always with a very tough schedule. Man to watch is the one in the middle, 6-11 sophomore center Julius Lewis. Beat UMass 89-85 two years ago.

Penn State — The mystery team of the conference, and the only one with a losing record last season. "We don't really know much about them," said Leaman. "They don't figure to be much improved from last year."



Often spectacular junior Alex Eldridge displays some of his uncanny floor knowledge as he peers up court in last seasons action. Eldridge will be returning for his third year with the varsity. (Staff photo by Andy Bernstein)

Captain Donoghue now a 'Leader of the Pack'

By RON ARENA
Collegian Staff

People don't speak of Mark Donoghue as a "natural." Granted, he is a young man with a lot of basketball ability, but he is not an athlete born with the gift to play a sport.

And Mark Donoghue himself knows this. He knows that to compete on the level that he does here at UMass, his pure talent would not carry him very far. And so he works. He works harder than any basketball player at this school. And the results have earned this 6'8 senior from Greenfield, Mass. the admiration and respect of all UMass opponents.

"I don't have the athletic ability of a Jimmy Town or a Mike Pyatt, or the quickness," Donoghue said. "So I bust my butt to overcome this. I'll fumble the ball sometimes, but it doesn't matter how you do it as long as you get the ball in the hole."

The UMass captain has done that quite effectively, scoring at a 15.5 clip per game last year, leaving him just percentage points behind Pyatt as the team's top scorer. He has worked endlessly to develop one of the prettiest turnaround jump shots you'd hope to see.

But Donoghue is more than a scorer for the Minutemen. More importantly, he is a leader. By working himself to levels of exhaustion out on the court, he provides an example to anyone on his team.

The leadership and hard work of Donoghue took effect immediately when he transferred here two years ago from Dartmouth. Forced to sit out his first year here due to the transfer, Donoghue had enough impact on his mates just by practicing with them that he was named co-captain as a junior without ever having played in a Minuteman uniform. And now, a long and difficult year later, he is the sole captain.

The outset of practice this season brought a scare to Donoghue and UMass when he flunked his physical due to an irregular heartbeat. He sat out 10 days before the defect was diagnosed to be caused by a possible virus. The heartbeat left him 10 days behind his teammates in practice, but coach Jack Leaman feels this will create no problem.

"He just has to work himself into shape now," Leaman said. "It'll just be a matter of time before he reaches top form.

"But he is such an interesting kid," Leaman continued. "He's a hardworker, he lives to be a basketball player, so getting in shape won't be a problem for him."

Indeed, Donoghue does live to be a basketball player. Basketball was his reason for transferring from Dartmouth. And basketball is his reason for coming to UMass,

"I've been playing basketball since I was 10 years old," Donoghue said. "I've played every day of my life since I was 14. I'm 22 now, I've changed schools, and I've gone for five years just for basketball.

"Basketball is the biggest thing in my life. Everybody has something they love, something that when they get up in the morning they are happy because they know they'll get to do it that day. For me it's basketball. I love coming to practice, and I love playing in a game."

As captain, Donoghue sees his duties as "being a leader and helping out coach Leaman with problems."

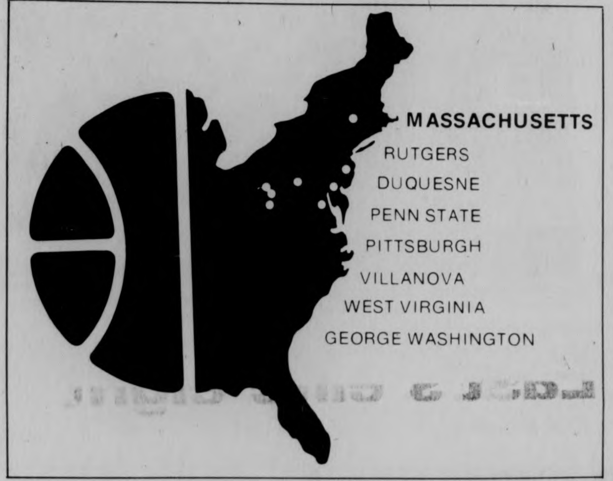
I try to be a representative of this team all the time," he said. When I got here, we definitely had to bring these guys together into one group. I think we've done that very well.

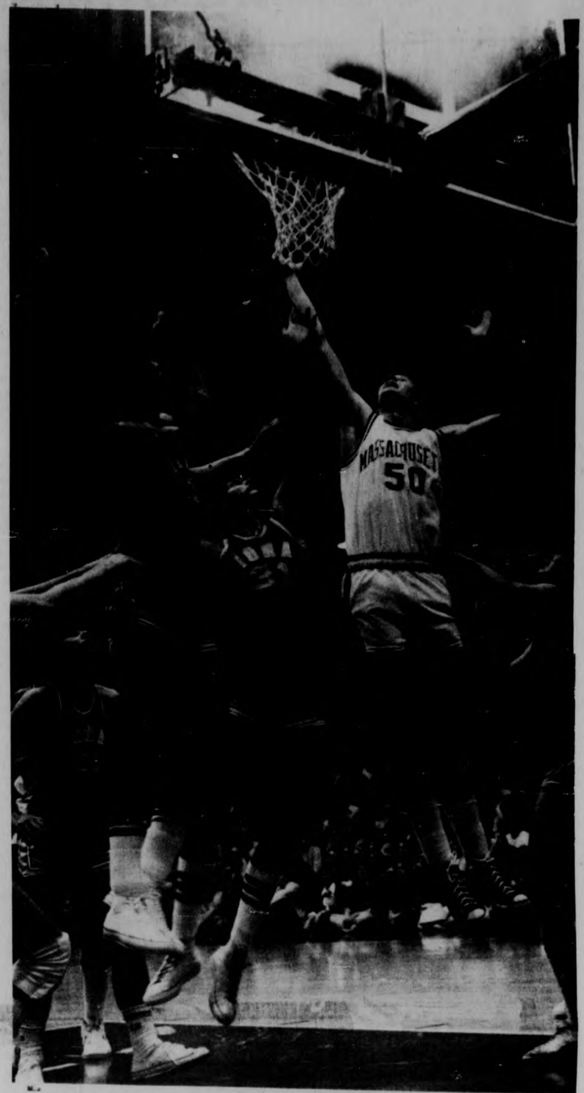
"The guys on this team have total respect for one another," he added. "Away from the court, some of us do different things. But this is our common thing, and we get along well doing it. Once we leave the locker room we go our different ways. But look at the Celtics; JoJo White and Charlie Scott don't hang around with Dave Cowens or John Havlicek, but on the court they share in everything, a team."

And that is what Donoghue wishes for the most this season, a total team performance. This, his final year, he again intends to give 100 per cent "at all times and say I did all I could." But his goal is team oriented — to see UMass win the league tournament in Philadelphia in early March to make the NCAA playoffs.

If everyone works as hard as Mark Donoghue, dives after as many balls as he, or puts out as much sweat, then the possibilities of this team are virtually unlimited.

So hello Philadelphia, here we come.





Senior center Mark Donoghue here battles a host of Iona players in a game UMass won last year. Hustle and desire like this helped Donoghue to be the second leading scorer on the team last year. (Staff photo by Jay Saret)

'The new league' and UM — what direction will they take?

By RON ARENA
Collegian Staff

After 28 seasons and eight championships, the Yankee Conference is no longer. Oh yes, the league still exists — but non in the eyes of the UMass basketball team.

For the Minutemen, it was a time for change, a time for an upswing, a time for the Eastern Collegiate Basketball League (ECBL). So as the New Hampshires and the Maines gradually fade out as league opposition, the Rutgers, and the Pittsburghs and the George Washingtons enter the light.

UMass will compete in the east division of the new league, with Rutgers, George Washington, and Villanova, while Penn State, West Virginia, Duquesne, and Pittsburgh comprise the west division.

When the move was originally announced, UMass Athletic Director Frank P. McInerney said it was because "the geographical spectrum of the ECBL members will give the University of Massachusetts more visibility and recognition in areas where many of its alumni live."

According to Minuteman coach Jack Leaman, the league began as "an invitational league to some of the better athletic schools in the east."

Syracuse was supposed to join, but decided against it, and UMass got the offer. "We sort of got in on the rebound," Leaman said.

"The Yankee Conference was giving us nothing," he explained. "It was hurting us, and we had the opportunity to take the chance to move.

"We felt the time was just right," Leaman added. "We had all our players coming back. There was no great increase in the budget and we figured we could survive the next couple of years with the players we had. It's a calculated risk, but it's worth it."

Does the new league mean the UMass basketball program is headed for an upswing? "It has to be," Leaman said. "Just the association with other programs like Penn State or West Virginia shows that. These are giants in their field of athletics.

"From top to bottom I believe that this is probably the best basketball league in the United States. Sure, there's other top teams better, but in this league we have seven or eight teams who could conceivably win the league."

It usually takes two years for a new league to be considered for an "automatic" bid in the NCAA tournament, but the ECBL has been granted that bid in its initial season. "We got that rule waived because of the structure at the top," Leaman explained. "That to me is impressive, and shows how strong this league is.

"We've always been taking the long end of the stick from the ECAC. Now we can dictate to them. That's impressive," the coach concluded.

Mike Pyatt sprawls on the Springfield Civic Center floor in a key game last year. Let's hope Pyatt feels more at home this season as UMass will be there five times. (Staff photo by Jay Saret)

Women's Gymnastics

Rookies fill gaps

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

Among the rough and tough winter sports of basketball, hockey and wrestling arises a sport of equal skill and strength.

Women's gymnastics is every bit as exciting and competitive as the rest and UMass is graced with the honor of having one of the top teams in the nation.

Under the coaching expertise of Virginia Evans, the team has maintained its perennially strong position on the gymnastics scene. Last year's year finished with a third place finish in the Easterns and a very impressive seventh place finish in the national competition. It appears the Minutewomen have just as much potential this year as in past years.

"I think this year's squad is just as strong, if not stronger than last year's team," commented Evans confidently.

This may be hard to believe with a team that lost six of last year's members. Co-captains Alicia Goode and Gail McCarthy graduated last spring. Roseanne Kennedy, Debra Law, Cheryl Smith and Pam Steckroat will not compete due to a variety of reasons. Kennedy and Steckroat both made strong contributions during the competition at the nationals and they will be missed in the all-around ranks. Smith and Law were to be this season's co-captains so their leadership and gymnastic contributions will be missed.

All is not lost however. Four new members of the squad are destined to bring good things to the team. Transfer Julie Heggie has the distinct honor of being elected captain during her first semester on the team. Heggie will compete in all the events, as will newcomers Karen Hemberger, a freshman, and junior transfer Stephanie Jones. Hemberger and Heggie have the distinction of receiving elite ratings during their performances with Muriel Grossman's Gymnastic Club.

Jones comes to UMass from Southern Connecticut and is especially strong on the bars according to Evans.

The fourth new addition is freshman Laurie Knapp. Knapp's strongest event is the balance beam and she will help fill the gap left by Smith's departure. Knapp will see action primarily on the beam this season while she prepares herself for future all around competition.

Seven members of last years' squad will also return to competition for UMass to form the nucleus of its strength. Junior Susan Cantwell returns as the team's top all-round performer. Cantwell finished sixth last year at the Easterns and is a consistently strong competitor for the Minutewomen. Junior Keely O'Rourke is also an all-around competitor and has been tapped by Evans as making excellent improvement already this season.

Youth will again be a factor this year with four returning sophomores and one second semester freshman. Sophomore Jean Anderson will see action in three events, with the bars being her best event. Sophomore Diane Laurenson, who received raving remarks from judges for her floor exercise routine during the national competion last year, will continue to specialize there as will as working the vault and beam. Sophomore Cheryl Morrier is another gymnast who Evans sights for improvement and has the potential to be an all around performer. Sophomore Julia Myers is stepping up the difficulty of both her floor and beam routines and will add needed depth to the beam team. Frosh Barbara Burmeister joined the team at the semester break last year and was hampered by illness, so her true value to the team is just now being realized.

The team has been working out since September and Evans is very pleased with the progress it has already made. Evans commends the work of her assistants in adding to this progress. John Calabria will be his assistant coach again this year and his contributions are highly valued by Evans. The team's choreography will be done by Peggy Atkins of the University Dancers. Tom Foster will coordinate all the necessary music for the gymnastics floor routines.

This year's competitive schedule is shorter but tougher than last season's. The gymwomen open the season with a very tough double dual meet at Penn State. The Nittany Lions finished second in the Easterns and were fifth in the nation last year as well as handing the gymnasts their only defeat during the regular season. The Penn State meet is the only competition this semester for the gymwomen as the bulk of their schedule begins after intercession.

Clarion, which was the top team in the country last year, is also joins the Minutewomen's schedule this year. Clarion, complete with Olympic gymnast Carrie Engelbert and individual national champion Connie Jo Irasel, will definitely test UMass' abilities.

Canisus and Springfield College are both top Eastern gymnastic powers and will meet the gymwomen during the regular season. Springfield College and UMass will face off in a big double dual with the men at the Springfield Civic Center in February.

Coach Evans is very optimistic about the gymnasts' upcoming season.

Guide to events and scoring

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

Thanks to Romania's Nadia Comanici we are all fully aware of what a perfect 10-point gymnastic performance looks like. But how was this score obtained? To the layperson the system seem rather obscure and tends to detract from the performance. Ah, but there is a method to this madness.

Additional importance will be placed on scoring in this year's women's gymnastic competition. For the first time the top four scores will be counted instead of only the top three. In each of the four events each gymnast is given a score by each one of four judges. The judges have all been tested by the Gymnastic Federation and are retained by the hosting school. Of the scores awarded, the high and low scores are thrown out and the two middle scores are averaged together. The top four individual scores are combined for the event score. Likewise the four event scores are totaled for the total team score. In addition, each gymnast performing in all the events has her scores added to produce a total score which determines the individual all around titles.

The judges are also looking for specific things when they score the events. The floor exercise, balance beam and uneven parallel bars are all scored on the same system. The maximum score is a perfect 10. In order to receive a 10 each routine must contain at least three superior moves and four of medium difficulty connected with basic transitionary moves. Execution, form creativity to amplitude, are also incorporated in the judges score.

On the floor, a superior routine would contain four diagonal main tumbling passes. Covering the entire floor space is also important. The music, which is only used by the women, is also considered. The music is selected by the gymnasts and will usually contain a change of pace to facilitate more movements.

The element of risk of "tricks" on the balance beam is important. The combination of movements, up and down, and back and forth, all influence the judges score.

For the highest results on the bars a gymnast must go over and around both of the bars. Handstands, sommersaults and twisting movements should be included in each routine as the gymnasts work around both axis in both directions.

Vaulting is scored slightly differently. The most difficult vaults contain twisting movements and are worth a possible 10 points. A Tsukahara and a half on full twist off are examples of 9.4 and a handspring vault is worth only a maximum of 9.4 and a handspring vault is worth 9.2. Overall form and the dismount are also considered by the judges.

With the addition of the fourth score in each event a "good" team score should be up around 134 points which an individual average around an 8.5.

Dedication earns Cantwell honors

By BILL LOCKE
Collegian Staff

It's not unusual that athletes from this campus are named All-American. More times than not the athletes come from sports which are not considered to be major by many Americans. In recent years, the University has been blessed with All-Americans who represented this campus in lacrosse, swimming, cross-country, gymnastics, and golf. Most of these students achieved this high honor in the latter two years of their collegiate career.

Susan Cantwell was one of the few University athletes to achieve All-American status as a freshman. Two years ago Susan was very instrumental in helping the women's gymnastics team to a second place finish in the National Championships. Her efforts at this championship in the floor event also earned her All-American status. For the past two seasons she has been named to the All-Eastern team.

It hasn't been an easy route that Cantwell took to become the good gymnast that she is today. She began practicing the sport when she was 11 years old at the Mannets Gymnastics Club in her hometown of Philadelphia, Pa. A great deal of help was provided by Mrs. Cantwell, who doubled as both instructor and chauffeur. Every day, beginning in the 6th grade and continuing right on up through high school, Mrs. Cantwell drove Susan and five of her sisters to the gymnastics club where all six would practice under their mother's instruction. Contrary to those who think good athletes learn their trades under the best of conditions, the gym the Cantwells practiced at was rundown and decrepit. Sometimes the family would make a mad dash to the safety of the car because the gym was located in the bad section of town!" "When we practiced there, there would sometimes be mice running around on the floor," according to Cantwell.

It all paid off for the family. Today, Susan's older sister Janet, 23, is the women's gymnastics coach at the University of Pennsylvania. Dianne, 21, was a member of this University's program until a back injury forced her to retire from active competition. That's not all! Lynn, 19, competes for Penn St., and the family member with the most potential is 16 year old Barbara.

On top of her rigid gymnastics schedule, Susan also performed ballet. In fact, she performed well enough to be chosen to appear in the "Nutcracker Suite" several times with the Pennsylvania Ballet Company during her early teens. Ballet was essential to her development as a top-notch gymnast.

Cantwell knows that excellence is achieved through practice. Before coming to the University, gymnastics was a year round activity. During the high school academic year Susan practiced at least five days a week. These practice sessions lasted a minimum of three and a half hours. During the summer, Cantwell put in four hours at least four days a week practicing her routines.

When college came, she had to choose between Penn St., another collegiate gymnastics power, and this University. She said, "I chose here because of the schools' good academic reputation, and I also wanted to see what it would be like to live away from home."

At the University, she practices three hours a day, as does the rest of the squad six days a week. The season begins the day they arrive at school in the fall and ends in mid-April. The only break in the schedule is one week for Christmas.

Despite the rugged schedule and all the long hours of practice, she does it for fun. Susan has always enjoyed what she's done including the practice. Cantwell summed it up best when she said, "I enjoy it, that's why I do it."

What does such a good athlete attribute her success to? "I've been lucky. I've been able to pick up routines very easily. I've trained hard and learned the proper techniques. Good coaching is essential and I've been fortunate in that respect. Also, I've been lucky in avoiding injuries."

Unfortunately for Susan, the only major injury came at a most difficult time. It was during the tryouts for the 1972 Olympic team. She was 15th after two events, but a fall during a routine trick on the balance beam tore ligaments in her leg, forcing her to withdraw. Not only did this end her Olympic hopes but because of the injury, her doctors kept her away from gymnastics for a full 18 months.

Cantwell's attitude toward gymnastics reflects the attitude all athletes should have when competing in sport. Sometimes her concentration will make her completely oblivious to the crowd during competition. "I want to do the best I can," she said. "I've always been oriented toward achieving more."

Cantwell is not one to rest on her laurels. "Personally, I'd like to win the balance beam in the nationals this year." More importantly to hear, she'd like the team to do well. "We have a lot of talent on our team this year, as we have had in past years. This year team spirit and support of one another will finally help us to achieve our fullest potential."

B-Ball

Frontcourt is women's strength

By JOHN LOWNEY
Collegian Staff

"We have the potential to compete with the type of schedule we're facing this season, but of course, it's up to the team to decide where we're going to go. The way I think we can beat the tougher teams on our schedule is to run and play pressure defense for forty minutes. That means everyone will be playing. We'll be a twelve man team rather than a six or seven man team. To run and play pressure defense we'll need depth." — UMass women's basketball coach Mary Ann Ozdarski

One position where the Minutewomen have both depth and experience is in the front court. In a running game the front court plays a very important role. The forwards must grab the rebounds before any type of fast break can be established. The pressure defense which Coach Ozdarski describes can only work with quick, smart forwards.

All three starters as well as two top reserves return for the Minutewomen this season. Juniors Jo Balletta and Ginny Peebles will provide backup depth. Most importantly, Nancy O'Neil, Lu-Ann Fletcher and Chris Basile, the top three scorers and rebounders from last year, will resume their positions in the front court. Although each is a veteran of UMass basketball and each is from Massachusetts, O'Neil, Fletcher and Basile have different basketball backgrounds.

Nancy O'Neil was probably the most consistent performer on last year's squad. She led the Minutewomen in practically every statistical department, including points, assists, field goal percentage and free throw percentage. This is her fourth season playing basketball at UMass.

O'Neil played very little ball before high school, but it didn't take long for her to display her natural ability. She did have one advantage, as her father was a gym teacher. O'Neil eventually led Scituate High to the Southeastern Mass championship. In the process she set two scoring records, one for most points in one game and another for most points in three consecutive games.

Lu Ann Fletcher did not have the advantage of playing in a strong women's basketball program in high school. She attended Auburn High, where hockey is the major winter sport. "We had good teams for Central Mass," she commented, "but when we left the region we never did very well."

Fletcher, a junior, did not consider the quality of the program at UMass before she attended. "My brother was going to school here," she said, "and that's what got me interested in UMass. I knew very little about the program here. I just wanted to play."

Well, she sure has played. She's been the starting center her two years here and last year led the team in rebounding.

Chris Basile is the other senior starting forward for the Minutewomen. She was a consistent rebounder and scorer for UMass last year. Like O'Neil, she played on a strong high school team, Bishop Feehan of North Attleboro. Feehan was UMass champs in Chris' junior year, but they were eliminated in the semi-finals in her senior year.

Unlike Fletcher, she did know about the program at UMass. "I had seen UMass play before," she said, "and I thought I could cut it." As a four year member of the team, Chris certainly has "cut it".

O'Neil and Basile, as seniors, will have their third coach at UMass. They agreed that Carol Albert brought the program to its improved level of competition.

"Carol Albert brought the program from practically nothing to what it is today," commented O'Neil. "We made it to number three seed in the region last year. Basketball has come a long way here in the last two years."

Basile added, "There was no optimism at all my freshman year. We were actually losing talent as people left the team. Carol brought up the program tremendously. We have a more strategic, more scientific approach now. There's just a lot more pride now."

O'Neil, Basile, and Fletcher and everyone associated with Minutewomen basketball all agree that the program has made great advances in the last couple of years, but what does that mean for this year? With a tougher schedule, what will the Minutewomen have to work on most?

"Our main problem will be on defense," said Fletcher. "We're not too big. I'm the tallest player on the team and I'm just under six feet. Some of these teams will come in with big goons in their frontcourt, making it important to play good team defense."

"Blending the old and the new" is a job in the hands of Coach Ozdarski on the sidelines. On the court, however, the veteran players must "blend the old and the new", creating the coherence which every team strives for. The Minutewomen are fortunate enough to have an experienced front court. Nancy O'Neil, Chris Basile and Lu-Ann Fletcher have played together for two seasons under Carol Albert. It is their job to use this experience to produce stability under Coach Mary Ann Ozdarski.

Women's Basketball

. . . a young team

Minutewomen seeking 'rebound'

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

If UMass women's basketball coach Mary Ann Ozdarski has her way this season, her team will be just that. A TEAM.

"I'm looking to develop an overall team concept," Ozdarski says. "That means a total unit, not just five players on the court at the same time."

Ozdarski, a first-year coach who hails from Greenfield, has been working with her squad since late October, and has already seen some encouraging signs from practice.

"The players are all willing to work and to help each other out," she says. "They've also shown a willingness to push themselves in practice."

The Minutewomen will need that extra spark this season as they get set to play their most ambitious schedule in history. A total of 18 regular season games begin with a December 11 contest at Vermont and concludes with a home clash against Adelphi on February 26. Post-season activity includes the Massachusetts Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (MAIAW) tournament, which will be held the first week of March at Bentley College, and, should UMass get that far, the Eastern Regional qualifications for the National Tournament. That tourney is slated to take place at UConn a week after the MAIAWs.

UMass is led by five returning veterans from last season's 11-7 club, which was seeded third in the Easterns before bowing in the first round to Vermont, 77-75, in a nip-and-tuck thriller.

A frontcourt which has played two straight seasons as a unit returns intact. The trio finds senior forwards Nancy O'Neil and Chris Basile flanking junior center Lu-Ann Fletcher.

The 5'10" O'Neil led the club in scoring with an 18.8 average last season, ranked first in assists with 51, and rebounded at an 11.3 per game clip to place second on that team in that category. Ozdarski says that O'Neil is the Minutewomen's offensive stalwart.

Fletcher, at 5'11" the tallest UMass player, scored 15.6 points a game last year, led the team in rebounding with 11.3 an outing, and chipped in with 40 assists. The coach reports that the three-year veteran is still improving at the important pivot spot.

Basile, who stands 5'10", averaged 8.7 points a game and ranked third in carom-collecting with 7.2 a contest. Ozdarski considers her a strong rebounder who aids the Minutewomen greatly in that aspect of their game.

The forecourt also has a new-old face in it this year. New to the forward spot, but a varsity performer last season, Jo Balletta was shifted to forward by Ozdarski for the upcoming campaign.

As a starting guard last annum, the 5'8" junior popped in 9.3 points and hauled down to average of 6.4 rebounds a game, but mere statistics do not do justice to her play.

Ozdarski terms her "an excellent all-around player that is probably one of the best one-on-one defensive players in the east." That's heady stuff for someone who performs in a region which counts such school as Queens and Southern Connecticut among its inhabitants.

In addition to these people, Ozdarski can also call upon 5'11" junior backup center Ginny Peebles, who played in all but one game last year as she was called upon often to fill in for the foul-prone Fletcher, and forward Gayle Hutchinson. One of two ex-junior varsity standouts of last season on the roster, the sophomore stands 5'9". Freshman Maura Supinski also survived last cuts in the forward slot. The 5'10" rookie from nearby Northampton performed for a high school team which nearly won the state Division I title last year.

With the switch of Balletta to forward, an entirely new backcourt will be on the floor for the Minutewomen this year. Ozdarski has five guards to choose from among her 12-person varsity roster, and all but one are new to UMass system.

Three freshmen are among the candidates vying for the two starting spots . Sue Henry, out of Pennsylvania, averaged nearly 30 points a game in high school and once tallied 61 points in a single outing. The 5'6" point guard played her scholastic ball at Morrisville High School. Sue Peters, another frosh, hails from Southbridge and led her high school team in scoring (25 per game), rebounding (15 per contest), assists, and steals. At 5'7", Peters played both forward and guard last year but will stick to the backcourt in her first year of intercollegiate play.

Besides these two highly-touted rookies, UMass also has first-year player Julie McHugh, who also played varsity field hockey this fall, on the team roster. The other two backcourt candidates are junior transfer (from Greenfield Community College) Cheryl Carey, and promoted JV Grace Martinella. The latter is the only Minutewomen guard prospect who has UMass experience under her belt.

Despite the returnees, Ozdarski says that none of them has a starting berth locked up.

"No one has filled a position," she explains. "I'm looking for the best combination of players who can function together."

"We're going to have a team offense, a team defense," the coach stresses. "The players will have to complement each other."

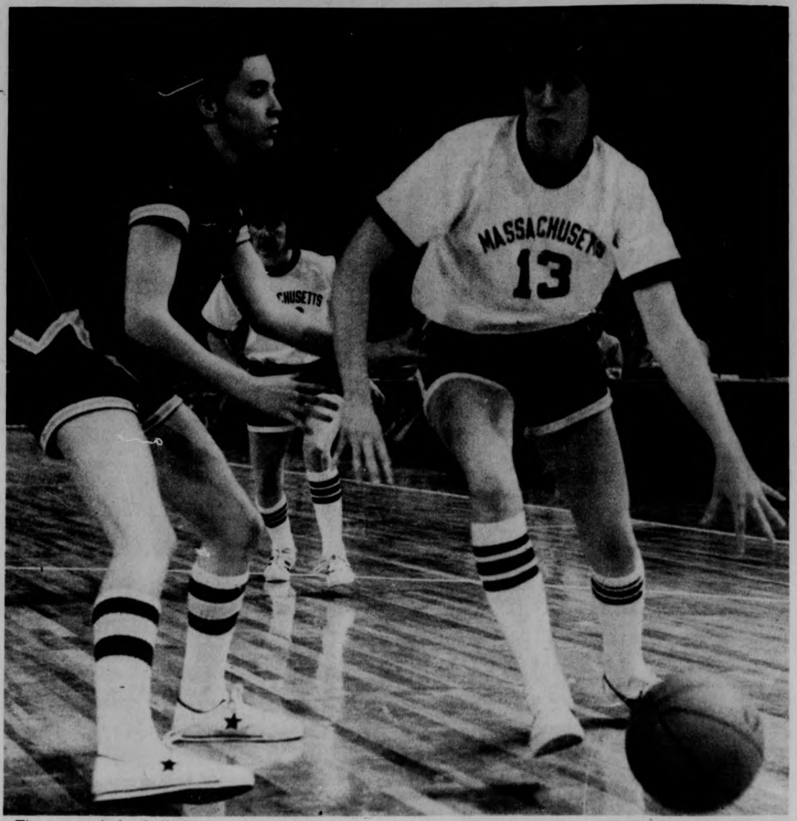
"I'll definitely be experimenting at the beginning of the season," Ozdarski adds. "I'll be using different combinations on the court."

In terms of strategy, Ozdarski expects her quintet to play a running type of game. The team's lack of height (no player over six feet tall) plays a definite part in her tactics.

"The height enters into running," she says. "We want to be quick and aggressive all the time. We'll have to capitalize on the other team's mistakes in order to be effective."

Ozdarski hopes that her planned pressure defense (including a full-court press) will aid the Minutewomen in forcing those errors.

So the UMass women's basketball squad enters its 1976-77 season with fine established and promising talent. But you can bet on one thing. It will be blended together to meet one objective: to play a TEAM game.



The women's basketball team played two games, including the one above, at the Springfield Civic Center last season. UMass also has two tilts there this year. (Staff photo by Daniel Smith)

Schedule taxing, no relaxing

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

Women's basketball coach Mary Ann Ozdarski wasn't kidding when she said, "We have a tough schedule."

The Minutewomen are slated to play 18 regular season games, the most in their history. Although the nationally-known powers, such as Delta State and Immaculata, are not on the UMass agenda, it does include awfully tough east coast schools.

"We don't have a breather in the bunch," Ozdarski said. "We'll have to play each game as it comes."

Highlighting the regular season slate are two games scheduled to be played at the Springfield Civic Center. Both are the opening tilts of doubleheaders, with men's action to follow directly afterwards. On January 29, the Minutewomen will face Brooklyn College, while on February 12 they will tip off against Providence College. All of the other UMass home contests will take place in Curry Hicks Cage.

For capsule summaries of UMass' opponents this year, read on:

VERMONT — "Our grudge match," the coach said. it was the Catamounts who gave UMass an early exit from the Easterns last season, to the tune of 77-75 in the first round. Vermont, coached by Jean Condon, has the height (forwards over six feet tall) and now the experience to be extra tough this year.

CENTRAL CONNECTICUT — Another Eastern qualifier last year, CC finished ninth in the tourney. Only one senior is lost from a squad which went 10-7 while being coached by Brenda Reilly. Leading the veterans are top scorer Connie Clabby, leading rebounder Janice Stanczyk, and much-improved Terry Moylan. Two promising frosh were also snatched up by Central.

RHODE ISLAND — About all we can tell you about this school is that UMass won last year's game, 87-65. No one associated with the Rams seemed to know much about this year's squad.

ST. JOHN'S — Yet another school which made the Easterns last season. Ozdarski reports that the squad looked impressive because of its overall quickness and excellent ball handlers. The over-intersession game will mark the first meeting ever between UMass and the New York college.

LEHMAN — Who? Another unknown quantity. The only information that could be had from this New York school was that its coach's name is Jim Jenkins and that this will be another first-ever game.

QUEENS — Uh-oh. Perhaps the Minutewomen's toughest test this season. The NYC school beat UMass last year, 97-80, in a game which was much closer than the final score indicates. Queens won the Easterns last year, and is a perennial powerhouse in the east. The team lost Gail Marquis, one of its top players, but still has excellent height and depth.

WORCESTER STATE — UMass handled the Lancers last year with ease, 75-55, but that's about all that could be discovered about the team. If past years are any indication, though, Worcester shouldn't be one of the more formidable opponents that the Minutewomen will face this year.

PROVIDENCE — Another up-and-coming team from a school with an excellent basketball heritage. PC has lots of talent, and could develop into a tough team if it is blended together effectively. Paula Hassett, little sister of Friars star Joe, leads the women's attack.

NORTHEASTERN — An 8-7 team a year ago, but coach Jeanne Rollins reports that only two of its players are missing. The Huskies don't start practice for another couple of weeks, so Rollins doesn't know much about her upcoming squad. UMass won last year's contests, 81-55 and 74-64.

SPRINGFIELD — A big area rival, the Chiefs lost Martha Blomberg and Karen Bauer to graduation, and two other players for various reasons. But the squad which won the consolation round of last year's Easterns and had an overall 8-6 record finds top scorers Laurie Smith, Sherry Sanborn, and Mary Regan all returning. The major problem confronting Springfield is a lack of height.

BROWN — Coached by Gail Klock, the team finished '75-'76 at 13-7. Four returning players will probably mold with some freshmen who show potential. But height is a problem, as the tallest player stands just 5'7"

BRIDGEWATER STATE — The Big Red lost three seniors from last year's team, which went 7-3. Coach Regina Gross says that her candidates won't begin workouts for another few weeks. Bridgewater took last year's MAIAW championship game over a tired UMass quintet, 68-66. The regular season game was a different story, however, as the Minutewomen won handily, 72-56.

BROOKLYN COLLEGE — Another new rival which also was unable to be contacted.

FITCHBURG STATE — The above statement holds true for this team. All there is to be said is that UMass won last year's contest, 89-52.

NEW HAMPSHIRE — UMass applied a deadly bite to the Wildcats last season by the score of 82-60. UNH has a good football team, but will women's basketball have the same success? Come to the Cage February 16 and find out.

SOUTHERN CONNECTICUT — A top-notch team for many years, this yearly Easterns qualifier has a new coach but some familiar faces. Center Marney Dacko (a six-footer) and Lynn Spagnesi heads up the list of returnees. According to sources, SC's program has begun to slip due to lack of recruitment but still fields a team not to be lightly-regarded.

UMass dropped last season's game, 88-48, as Lu-Ann Fletcher was injured early and forced to sit out the rest of the contest.

ADELPHI — Another tall team which UMass lost to last season, 66-62. It is a mystery quintet, as its coach and sports information director were both unavailable for comment.

No scholarships take toll

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

In the wake of a total scholarship cut, Minuteman hockey faces a gloomy, uncertain future. UMass, a division II power of the past, can no longer afford to bid for the top high school prospects and must now settle for the mediocre.

Recruiting efforts by the hockey program were already hampered because UMass lacked its own rink. Now, because of the aid cut, Minuteman hockey has been thrust into a desperate situation for years to come.

Inflation, the advent of women's sports, and last year's poor football gate led to a "general tightening up" of the scholarship budget, according to Athletic Director Frank McInerney.

He said that the athletic department had to pay attention to what he called "high intensity interest" sports. In other words, sports with good spectator interest received scholarship priority. McInerney cited women's gymnastics and women's basketball as examples. Obviously, hockey wasn't on the list.

Hockey coach Jack Canniff said men's sports in particular felt the budget squeeze.

"I'm sure it had some effect. It hit all men's sports that were getting it (aid) except for football and basketball," he said.

McInerney said football and men's basketball were in their own league because of their importance as money makers for UMass athletics.

"If you stop giving money to them you're out of business," he said.

Canniff said hockey aid had been decreasing over the years until it was finally dropped last semester. The effect of the aid disintegration is evident from the team's comparative productivity over the past years.

In 1972, with its program in full swing, the hockey team captured the ECAC Division II crown. At that time UMass could give any team in Division I a run for its money. Canniff said UMass gave B.U., the national champion that year, its toughest game of the season.

Last year the Minutemen went 0-5 against Division I teams. This year UNH, Providence and Yale have been dropped from the schedule. In the near future, UMass will drop Division I teams from its schedule all together.

"I can't see how we can step on the ice with them in the future," Canniff said.

The immediate effect of the total aid cut last semester was that many of Canniff's recruits "went down the drain."

"Last year was a lost recruiting year," he said.

Canniff said the economic squeeze hurt hockey more than other sports "mainly because hockey players are heavily recruited in the Northeast."

The competition between colleges for the top high school prospects in this area is indeed severe. Unlike football and basketball coaches who scan the entire south and mid-west, as well as local areas, the hockey coach has only the Northeast and Minnesota areas to recruit from. The exception, of course, are those coaches whose budgets allow them to dip into the Canadian junior ranks.

UMass recruits almost exclusively in New England — an area that is saturated with scholarship money from various Eastern powers.

This means UMass must disregard the proven high school player, who, according to Canniff, will have 10-12 scholarship offers by the end of his high school career.

Instead, Canniff will look for the player with future promise whose talent has eluded the eyes of other recruiters.

"We must look hard and we must look more," Canniff said, to search for the player with "hidden talent."

UMass players who commented on the aid cut said the future of UMass hockey was the main problem. None saw this year's team worse off than last year because of the lack of aid.

The aid cut does not affect any scholarship that was granted in previous years.

"I think it will have more long term effects," said senior captain Mike Merchant.

Merchant said the aid cut didn't affect seniors, but presented problems in finding replacements for the graduating players.

Winger Bob White, a junior, said the team wouldn't be affected by the cut for two years. However, White said the hockey program started to collapse in his freshman year and that pretty soon it "will be falling down."

Bob Jefferson, a senior defenseman, said that while teams offering scholarships will have recruiting advantages, UMass still has good players in its ranks.

Canniff, however, was not so optimistic. He said that many top Division II schools have scholarship programs comparable to those found in Division I hockey budgets. How does UMass size up to these schools?

"We're in trouble," Canniff said. "We're going to go down a lot quicker than people think."

Division II - tough opponents

By TOM CROWLEY
Collegian Staff

This year will be just like last year for ECAC Division II hockey and the University of Massachusetts hockey team — only worse.

The Minutemen will be in a tough, close division with few playoff spots open. Last year, there were two class teams, Bowdoin and Merrimack, and about nine to ten teams, including UMass chasing one of eight playoff spots.

Last year, the hockey team didn't make post season play with a 12-8 record in the division and 12-13 overall. Three other teams, Williams, Boston State, and Norwich, had records over 500 in the division and also did not make the playoffs.

Hamilton was chosen over UMass for the playoffs as UMass had the eighth best record and Hamilton the ninth best, but Hamilton crunched the Minutemen 10-0 and capped its streak to get into the playoffs.

"There are so many strong teams," said head UMass hockey coach Jack Canniff of this year's Division II opposition. There are so many good teams that if you make the playoffs, you must have a pretty good club."

"There are twelve good teams right now," he said.

Last year, UMass and Hamilton were streaking down to the wire for the final slot. UMass won six straight Division II games and eight of its last ten.

Union, which was the top regular season team in Division II, was seeded third in the post-season playoffs despite the fact that their winning percentage was better than Merrimack and Bowdoin, the two top seeds.

The selection committee takes into account toughness of schedule and other criteria, which explains how Union was only seeded third and Hamilton was picked over UMass.

But the selection procedure is changing.

"Last Wednesday (November 10), there was a meeting of Athletic Directors on the committee to get a 16 team playoff. It wasn't accepted," Canniff said.

But the plan will be accepted for next year, Canniff believes.

"Division II is twice as big as Division I, so the coaches say the playoffs should be twice as big," he said.

With 29 teams chasing eight seeds this season, the Minuteman hockey coach figures the season will go down to the last week in February. And even then it won't be easy.

"It'll go right down to the wire and when the committee sits down to pick the teams, they'll ride with the first four teams. But after that, it will be tough. No question about it, it will go to the last week in February and we end with a great game in Salem State," Canniff concluded.

Salem State is "a great game" to end with because they were one of the eight teams to make the playoffs last year. "Salem State is loaded," Canniff said. They're loaded despite the loss of Dick Lamby, brother of UMass' Chris, to Boston University. In last year's playoffs, Salem beat Oswego State, 3-1, in the quarterfinals and lost to eventual champion Bowdoin, 4-1. Last year, Salem was 15-5 in Division II and 19-5 overall, but one of its losses was to the Minutemen in Salem, 6-3.

Merrimack is very good according to Canniff. "They scrimmaged BC twice and lost to Ohio State by one goal in Ohio," Canniff said. Merrimack dumped the Minutemen twice last year, 6-3 and 9-1, as they went on to a 20-2 Division II record and 21-6 overall. As the first seed in the playoffs, Merrimack beat Buffalo, 7-4 and Army, 8-2, before losing to the number two seeded team, Bowdoin, 6-5, for the championship.

Bowdoin, winner of Division II for two straight years is strong again according to Canniff. The Minutemen lost to Bowdoin last year in a spectacular overtime game, 6-5. Bowdoin is very much capable of repeating its last year mark of 12-3 in the Division and 14-9 outside.

Union, Oswego, Buffalo, Army, and Hamilton were the other playoff teams and they are as capable as UMass of making post season play. UMass only played two of those teams last year, losing to Hamilton and dumping Army, 6-2.

"Army made the playoffs last year and Union is in a position now where no one wants to play them. Division II is so big and there are so many good teams," coach Canniff said.

While these teams should be contenders again, the rest of the league has not stood still.

"There are almost thirty teams and you'll find some that used to be weak, but they aren't weak anymore. On any given night, they can give you all you can handle," said coach Canniff.

"There's not the emphasis on hockey as in Division I, but teams don't seem to be weak anymore."

Hockey

Tight defensive game key to year

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

The key to the season for the 1976-77 edition of the UMass hockey team will be how well it does on defense says coach Jack Canniff.

"We've got to play good tight defense," he said. "And that means playing team defense."

The defense will be led by senior Chris Lamby, an All-East selection last year. The other returning veterans on defense are seniors Bob Jefferson and Bob McCormack and junior Brian Kittredge. Newcomers on defense include Ron Vallencenti, Dean Laxcious, Doug Hoague and Lincoln Flagg.

The strongest part of the team according to Canniff is the goaltending, with seniors Dana Redmond and Doug Janik ready for action in the net.

The first line will feature senior Frank Snow centering for seniors Carl Burns and Mike Merchant, who will be the lone captain of the team this season. John Peters will be between the White brothers, juniors Billy and Bobby, for the second line and senior Scott McChesney will center for any combination of wings Mike Badger, Nick Carney and Kevin Sullivan. T.J. O'Brien will center the fourth line consisting of wings Paul Hurley and Fran Pyco.

The Minutemen have had two pre-season scrimmages and dropped both of them, losing to RPI, 12-5 and 8-1 to Boston College.

"I wasn't pleased with our outing against RPI because we had 46 minutes in penalties, which resulted in six power play goals," said Canniff. "When we were both playing with a full house they had the edge, 6-5. It's very difficult to tell how your team is when they are in the box all the time," he added.

"We hadn't worked on our penalty killing too much, but we did kill our penalties a lot better against BC," Canniff said.

Kevin Sullivan, whom Canniff calls a "jack of all trades," will kill penalties along with Merchant and Peters. The White brothers will also see some penalty killing action.

The Minutemen will be hoping to improve on last season's overall record of 12-13. A late season surge saw the Minutemen win six straight Division II games and eight of their last nine to bring their overall Division II record to 12-8, just shy of a playoff berth. The thing that really killed their overall record was an 0-5 mark against Division I clubs. This year the Minutemen play only two Division I teams, Vermont and Northeastern.

"I don't think we should have missed the playoffs last year," commented Canniff. "The only games we lost during that one stretch were to Bowdoin (6-5 in overtime) and Hamilton (10-0)."

Gone from last year's squad are Jim Lyons (11 goals, 9 assists), Scott Stuart (10 goals, 15 assists), Billy Harris (7 goals, 14 assists), Brian Mulcahy (3 goals and 16 assists) and Dave Alessandroni.

The team's big weakness according to Canniff is its depth.

"We've lost defenseman Brian Kittredge for a while with a hand injury and our fourth line is relatively inexperienced," he said.

Another factor regarding depth is that Canniff didn't have any scholarship money to recruit some of the players he wanted to get. "It definitely hurt, there's no question about it," he said.

Canniff said the team's style will be conservative this year.

"Our system is not wide open," he said. "We're not the type of team that's going to win the 9-8 game. We've got to keep the other team down and work like hell for goals."

One thing that might affect the team's play later on, is the semester break. After playing UConn on December 14th, the Minutemen will be idle until January 22nd when they play Boston State.

"It's like playing two seasons," Canniff said.

Hopefully, the Minutemen will put it all together at the start of the season and play the type of hockey they are capable of. If they do, things should be pretty exciting at Orr Rink this season.

Market Profile

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
Collegian
STUDENT UNION BUILDING TELEPHONE 545-3500

The age of traditional college attendance has been shifting. Our study shows that today, 7 out of 10 students are over 20. The median age is 22.6. More live off-campus than ever before and only 1 out of 5 lives at home. The greater independence and increased needs and appetites that each year of age brings means that college students are now taking over the action in the market place that was once the role of their parents.

At the University of Massachusetts there are approximately: 19,000 undergraduates, 5,000 graduates and 1,500 faculty. In addition, it is estimated that there are some 5,000 supportive staff. Of the undergraduates, graduates and faculty, 55 percent reside off campus in the Amherst area.

Our study also indicates the following spendable income:
undergraduates — $15,000,000 per year graduates — $7,000,000 per year
faculty — $22,000,000 per year

Add to these figures those dollars generated by the supportive staff and the University itself and one can sense the economic impact on the Amherst area.

The Daily Collegian services this market each morning, Monday through Friday, of the University year. 20,000 newspapers are delivered to the University prior to 8:30 a.m. each day and the Daily Collegian is usually the first news the community sees.

In addition, the Daily Collegian is delivered to central locations at Amherst, Hampshire, Mt. Holyoke and Smith Colleges. This increases the Daily Collegian's exposure and broadens the Five College Community cooperative concept.

Recognized as a leader in the College Newspaper Field, the Massachusetts Daily Collegian is operated by students, for students in the dynamic Amherst Market.

Men's Gymnastics

Forgotten UMass team strives to regain form

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

Once one of the more prominent athletic teams on campus, the men's gymnastics team has suffered greatly during the past three years because of severe financial cutbacks, the hiring and releasing of coaches, the lack of any scholarship money and an overall incoherency to the program.

But hopefully things will change. It is the start of a new season for the gymnasts and there is a new coach who enthusiastically wants to bring the program back into the limelight at UMass. It is now time to stop looking behind and to being to look ahead.

With 11 people returning from last year's team, first-year coach Dick Swetman has inherited a strong nucleus with which to work and build a very respectable team.

Heading the list of returnees this year are co-captains Steve Marks and Angelo Scaderi. Both are all-around men, who have great potential according to Swetman.

"Steve is very strong in the vaulting and sidehorse events and it will be just a matter of time before he reaches similar perfection in the other events, which he needs just a little more work on," Swetman said.

"Angelo is a very strong performer and one of our most consistent gymnasts on the team," said Swetman. "He should help us out enormously as an all-around performer."

This will mark Scaderi's first full year of competition on the UMass men's gymnastic team after transferring from Springfield College.

Also returning to this year's team are Paul Marks, John Forshay and Dave Kulakoff. However, sitting out the year for the Minutemen are Joel James and Peter Lusk.

"Joel isn't eligible to be on the team, so he has been appointed assistant coach this year. Peter is being red-shirted and will not compete this year because he has two more years of school left with only one year of eligibility remaining," Swetman explained.

Of the people returning, Paul Marks, who Swetman describes as a potential Olympian, will also perform as an all-around gymnast, while Forshay will perform in the floor exercise and vaulting, and Kulakoff in the side horse and parallel bars.

Swetman also hopes to receive additional help in the all-around events from freshman Bob Donahue.

"For a college freshman, Bob has very good technique. It's just a matter of smoothing out a few rough edges with Bob because he has very good potential," Swetman said. "I hope he emerges towards the end of the year and comes through in some of our big meets."

"Right now we are fortunate that we are injury free. We still have a long way to go before our first match on Dec. 4 against Army, and we have a lot of work to finish," Swetman said.

The Minutemen do have to contend with another rugged schedule this year. After their first home meet against Army, the gymnasts will go up against powerful Penn St., Springfield College and So. Connecticut, just to mention a few.

"As of right now, I would have to say that our strength will depend on how well our specialists perform," Swetman said in evaluating his team. "At this moment, our all-around men are weak in a couple of events and that could hurt us in the long run."

In breaking down and examining all six events, Swetman feels that the sidehorse and parallel bars are the Minutemen's two greatest weaknesses.

"Outside of Dave Kulakoff, we may run into depth problems on the sidehorse. Kulakoff is a strong national competitor in this event," Swetman analyzed. "In the p-bars we just have not been consistent to date, and it is by far our weakest event."

The personable Swetman is undertaking his first head coaching assignment in gymnastics. An All-American as an all-around performer at Penn State. in 1969, Swetman has just completed his Masters studies at the University of Washington.

"I want my gymnasts to understand their physical capabilities and enjoy the pure joy of movement," Swetman said.

A look at the events

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

Let's face it, gymnastics isn't one of the easiest sports to follow or understand.

It isn't like basketball where you can casually sit back and watch men and women throw a ball into a hoop. At a gymnastic meet, you have to intently pay full attention to what is going on. You have to be able to pick up the small things that make or break a gymnast's performance.

In order to better acquaint you with the makeup of the sport of gymnastics, the following is a breakdown of the six events in a men's gymnastics meet with a brief explanation of what to look for when judging a gymnast's performance, according to the NCAA Gymnastics Rules Guide, compiled by Ed Gagnier.

FLOOR EXERCISE — Out of the six events in a men's meet, the floor exercise performance lasts the longest and demands the most total physical exertion. The event is based on straight tumbling sequences, with those gymnasts utilizing fast, high tumbling somersaults earning the better scores.

The gymnast should make the routine look easy and not jerky in movement or awkward in landings.

In his floor exercise routine, the gymnast has to fulfill an 11-part requirement; those being one trick of superior difficulty, five tricks for intermediate difficulty, and five tricks of lower difficulty. The floor exercise must form a harmonious and rhythmical whole. It must include parts of balance, hold, strength, jumps and somersaults. All available floor space in all directions should be used.

POMMEL HORSE — Generally regarded as the most difficult gymnastic event for men, the pommel horse requires a gymnast to have good balance, control and smoothness of movement.

Along with having to fulfill the 11-part requirement mentioned before, pommel horse exercises must be composed of clean swings without stops. Other factors you must take into consideration when you judge this event are how often a gymnast turns to face a different direction and the number of times he travels to each section of the horse. The gymnast should never touch the horse body with his feet or his score will be reduced.

RINGS — For this particular event, a gymnast must develop strong arm and shoulder muscles. On the rings, the gymnast performs two major types of movement: swinging parts and hold positions.

In judging this event you should look for the gymnast to perform one hold position of intermediate difficulty and two handstands. Any shaking of the rings or extra movement of the body will be seriously penalized. Also look to see if the gymnast can perform the routine without bending his arms noticeably.

PARALLEL BARS — Whatever skills a gymnast has perfected are adaptable to the parallel bars. The design of the bars make it possible for the performer to duplicate routines from his other events.

One distinguishing characteristic of the event is that the gymnast must release one or both hands during just about every movement. The routine is expected to flow continuously with only three stop positions. Using more stops results in a penalty. Also, a move of more than two or three seconds is improper.

VAULTING — Vaulting is the only event in the all-around program not governed by the 11-part requirement. Only one part is required — the vault.

In evaluating each vault, the judge looks for the difficulty of each vault, and examines the flight of the gymnast from the takeoff position off the springboard and his landing, and overall execution.

HORIZONTAL BAR — At a gymnastic meet, the best is saved for last. Considered the most spectacular of all events because of the high dismounts that end each routine, the horizontal bar (high bar) requires primarily swinging parts without stops.

The position of the hands is the key point of reference, since a routine on the high bar is composed of variations in grip changes during the execution of giant swings. Hesitations or hold positions are considered poor technique.

Matmen open up in Rhody match

By HEIDI BERENSON
Collegian Staff

Today's quadrangular wrestling match being held at the University of Rhode Island marks the official opening of the 1976 wrestling season for the UMass matmen.

The Minutemen opposition at the match will be URI, Clarion State, and Syracuse, teams regarded as the toughest in the East.

Heach coach Dave Amato sees this match as the toughest and most important one of the season. He remarked that, "This match will give the team some invaluable experience."

The team this year consists of many rookies, and as Amato said, "This year will be a rebuilding one.

If we come away doing well, it will really help us out, as our team is young and a lot of them will be seeing action for the first time"

Amato feels that the past practices have been going well and adds, "I've seen a marked improvement since the beginning of the year".

The traveling team for today's match will be:

at 118 lbs. — sophomore Larry Pontbriant

at 126 lbs. — junior Glenn Grenon

at 134 lbs. — sophomore Larry Otsuka, junior Brian Dillon

at 142 lbs. — freshman Gary Barsomian

at 150 lbs. — juniors Jimmy Hodgdon, Tim Fallon, freshman Bruce Rhodes

at 158 lbs. — junior Kevin Griffin, Sean Cronin senior at 177 lbs. — sophomore Mike Riley

at 190 lbs. — senior Bob Spaulding

at hwt. — junior Steve Masiak

At the present time the team is not at full strength as Harry Conforti is presently ineligible, and Dennis Fenton is still involved with the football team. Therefore, throughout the season the line will see some changes.

Amato hopes that the team will fair well this weekend and hopes the season will be just as good as prior ones. As he summed it up, "You're as good as your competition".

Peligra to aid Amato

By HEIDI BERENSON
Collegian Staff

New assistant wrestling coach, Ron Peligra may be new to UMass, but not to the wrestling scene.

Peligra a 1976 graduate of St. Lawrence University was a member of the wrestling team there for four years. He was a Division 3 National Heavyweight champion. He recently completed his position as head coach of junior varsity football and is presently a graduate student in the School of Business Administration.

Peligra has wrestled with head coach Dave Amato previously, in New York, and the two are compatible. Peligra views this year as "a learning experience for me", and added that, "I have high expectations for the team."

Another supplement to the wrestling team this season is the addition of five female managers. They have been readily accepted by both the team and the coaches. Head coach Dave Amato said, "They are a great asset to the team. They attend practice everyday and have helped to recruit new wrestlers".

Presently they are doing administrative work but as the season progresses they shall carry out various duties at the actual matches such as keeping score, and keeping time.

The managers are: Karen Noymer, Kathy Fallon, Heidi Berenson, and Jan and Jane White. They will be present at the first home meet which will be Dec. 1 at home in the auxiliary gym at 7:30.

They have become such a part of the team that as Amato said, "I couldn't do without them".

Men's Track

Indoorsmen eye successful year

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

The men's indoor track team should have one of its best campaigns ever this season because of excellent front-runners, depth, coaching and an excellent team attitude. But the runners schedule, if not the stiffest and the hardest in the last five years, should make for an interesting season.

The Yankee Conference crown should be between UMass and UConn. But coaches O'Brien, King, and Morse expect steep competition against Boston College, Northeastern, and UConn for the New England title.

UConn is the first real test for the runners to open the season with. The Huskies are led by superstar Darrel King, who was conference champion in the 600. According to coach King, they are extremely strong in the distances with one of New England's best milers in Bruce Clark. Clark became New England's best miler last spring by beating Keith Francis in the mile with a 4:00.6 time." UConn is as strong in every event as we are," said King.

Northeastern, is UMass's arch rivals. "They will be looking for us," said UMass cross country captain John McGrail. The Huskies are led by distance stars Jon and Bob Flora, Bruce Bickford, super half-miler Mark Lech and an excellent long and triple jumper in Ron Chambers.

Lech, New England's number one half-miler with a time of 1:47 just missed the NCAA finals while Chambers is indeed one of the best long and triple jumpers in the East with marks of 24'6" and 51'6" respectively. Kevin Dupont, one of New England's best shot putters and described by coach King as a "moose", is a super performer in the weight events.

The second meet features Seton Hall, one of the top teams in the East and one of the best indoor teams in the country. They have an outstanding, well balanced team. They are equally strong in the field and running events. In a dual meet competition, Seton Hall will be the toughest challenge for UMass.

Dartmouth will host a 40 college invitational meet for UMass' third meet of the season. Dartmouth is expected to contest for the best team with good personnel in the distances, polevault, the shotput, and high jumpers. "They are on a par with us," said King.

URI and Harvard round out the dual meet competition for the runners before the Yankee Conference, New England's, IC4A's and the Nationals.

"Our goal this season," said coach King, "is to send eight of our people to the IC4A's and a few to the Nationals. We didn't send anyone last year but this year we are greatly improved and our personnel is rich."

Head coach Ken O'Brien feels it will be an interesting season from a coaching perspective. "We have some really great individuals and some definite weak spots. These weak spots will challenge us as coaches, but I think we have made tremendous progress so far in the 35-pound weight toss and hurdles. Right now these events are question marks and we might be hurt in championship meets. Our depth in the other events might make up for it.

"Our team this year," said King, "is a year older, a year wiser, and a year talented. We are a relatively young team with excellent potential. Our people realize their ability and are psyched for a top season."

King said that several individuals including 600-yarder Joe Martens, long-jumper Ken Adamson, three-milers John McGrail and Mike Quinn, the mile relay of Martens, Richards, Thompson, and Fraser, and half-miler Jim Hunt are seeking to break records and have a good chance of doing it.

"Overall, our team is deep and strong and we are looking to become the number one track team in New England," coaches O'Brien and King said.

Women's Track

Fledgling squad awaits winter

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

With no great tradition of success preceeding it, the women's indoor track team will just have to lay the cornerstone for it and future teams to build on.

The reason no winning legacy preceeds the opening of the winter season at UMass, a school renowned for its track and cross country prowess, is that this is the first season ever that there will be a women's indoor program.

After having a successful season in its first outdoor campaign last spring, the team and coaches Ken O'Brien and Gary King are looking forward to a continuation of that success. The women were first in the New England meet last spring.

"We'll be taking this as a relatively low-key approach to the outdoor season," said King. "We'll get a jump on the outdoor season with competition on the way mainly as a springboard for the outdoors."

King pointed out that the team's strength will probably be in the distance events, where the recently completed cross-country runners will get a chance to shine.

"We'll also be strong possibly in the quarter-mile, and will be trying to build a national class mile relay team," King said. "We're questionable in the field events, though, and that's what this winter season will shape up for us."

The event program for women is slightly different than that of the men's team. Indoors the women compete in the long jump; high jump; shot put; 60-yard low hurdles; 60 and 220-yard dashes; 440 and 600-yard runs; the half mile and two-mile runs and the one and two mile and distance medley relays.

These events differ from meet to meet, but basically that is what is contested.

Four meets are definitely scheduled so far, with three of them being held at Dartmouth College. January 15 will be the US Track and Field Federation Invitational; January 29, the Green and White Invitational; February 19, UConn and St. Johns, at UConn and March 12, back to Dartmouth for the Easterns. There is also the possibility that other meets will be scheduled, with several developmental meets scheduled for Amherst College the most certain of these.

Women's track, like cross country, is growing rapidly. UMass will probably not win the New Englands as easily this winter as it did last spring, but this winter season will surely help them to get a head start on achieving that goal.

New coach, swimmers set season's goals

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's swim team kicked off its 76-77 season earlier this week with a tri-meet at Mt. Holyoke. Under the capable leadership of head coach Eve Atkinson, and diving coaches Doug Forsyth and Dennis Sullivan, the team entertains hopes of matching or improving upon last year's 10-2 record.

The team is in an independent league, with swimming powers like Maine, UConn, Yale, Southern Connecticut, Springfield College, Harvard, and Boston University on the agenda.

At an initial glance, the outlook is not very good for UMass. But the team possesses some fine swimmers, and Atkinson will be the first to tell you so. More so, swimming at UMass and just about every other college is "an individual sport, with individual goals," according to Atkinson. "Winning is not as important as achieving goals, individual and for a season."

UMass women swim for personal satisfaction, not because of any monetary incentive. They receive no scholarships. One does not swim 5,000 yards per day with the hopes of selling swimsuits for DIOR, or bringing back the swimming movie, a la Esther Williams. It never has been that way, and probably never will be.

For Atkinson, her professional objective has always been to become a women's physical

"When a person achieves their personal goals, that's a winning swimming season," Atkinson said. A UMass rookie swimmer is not told she must swim under two minutes in the butterfly the first day of practice. They are there as much for their own self-improvement as for winning meets.

education instructor, and a coach at the collegiate level. Her official title at UMass is "Director of Aquatics." She has taught at the high school level in basketball, hockey, lacrosse, and swimming. Head swim coach at the college level is not unknown to Atkinson as she was '75-'76 head coach of swimming at Temple University.

Atkinson was a member of the 1972 championship team of the Women's Intercollegiate Swimming and Dining Nationals at Westchester State College. She has also been on numerous college field hockey, lacrosse, and volleyball teams.

A National Collegiate Champion, a Dean's List student, and an All-American swimmer from 1972-74, her outside interests include music, reading and writing, and camping.

Alix Denhartog, a sophomore swimmer, comments on the team: "We should do really well. Our times are really strong for this early in the season. Right now we're practicing the shorter distances, striving for quality."

The UMass swim team practices every day at the NOPE gym, from 4-6 p.m. The diving team consists of coaches Forsyth and Sullivan, and swimmers Karen Mastrobattista, Linda Schuld, Patti Sheering, and Suzy Strobel.

Forsyth is a former coach at Bucknell University and Sullivan dove at St. Johns and placed 40th in the Nationals. The divers feel they are fortunate to have the two coaches, the first they've ever had.

Other team members include: Roxanne Balducci, Mary Ellen Butler, Alix Denhartog, Maryann Elias, Lisa Hembrough, Martha Kegeles, Lynn Lutz, Nancy Maffucci, Dianne Perry, Deb Schwartz, Ellen Stafford, Mary Ann Totin, Theresa Totin and Jane Welzel. Managers are Beth Stearns and Betsy Willis.

A veteran, Lynn Lutz enjoys swimming for UMass "because of the opportunity to use the pool everyday, with professional coaching. It gets you in really good shape," she said.

Concerning upcoming meets, Lutz said "I don't let the competition get to me. Besides, it would get boring if we just practiced every day."

Men's Swimming

A challenge faces men

By ARNOLD WARSHAW
Collegian Staff

Bei Melamed is in his fourth year of coaching the UMass men's swimming team. The best team which he has coached to date, was last year's, which had an 8-5 season in dual meet competition, set records in 10 of the 11 events, and tied a record in the other.

The possibility of this year's team improving on or even equaling last year's record is rather doubtful.

"I hate to predict bad things, but I don't think we'll do as well as last year," Melamed said.

Like its predecessors, this year's team lacks in members; a problem because there is less freedom in choosing who participates in what events. And more importantly, it lacks some of the more talented members from last year.

Co-captains Joe Hebert and Ron Boucher, and diver Jeff Crouse graduated. Heberts holds the record for the 100 yard freestyle, shares the record for the 200 yard butterfly, and was a member of the record setting 400 yard medley relay and 400 yard freestyle relay teams.

Boucher was a member of those relay teams and also holds the record in the 50 yard freestyle.

Two other good swimmers from last year whom Melamed did not want to name, came out again this year but have indicated they may be quitting.

Mike Kerwin, who swam in the sprints and the relays, is sick and will not be able to compete this season.

There are some new swimmers on the team, but they will probably not figure in the outcome of any meets. "We have no new scorers," Melamed said.

The team has not lost all its top performers though. Senior co-captain Ben Crooker and junior Russ Yarworth, who between them hold or share in seven records, will probably be the two top performers on the team. Both swam exceptionally well last year, and Melamed feels that they could still get better.

Crooker is the long distance specialist who holds records in the 200, 500, and 1000 yard freestyle.

Yarworth's speciality is the backstroke, an event in which he holds a record. He is also the best all around swimmer on the team, and holds the record in the 200 yard individual medley.

Co-captain Dave Boucher, a senior and younger brother of Ron, will be the top man in the breaststroke, an event in which he holds a record.

For the most part, Melamed is unsure as to who will be swimming in what events. He's not even sure about who the personnel will be once the season starts. "I don't like it" he said, "but that's the way it is."

The team's schedule will be lighter this year, having dropped MIT and Wesleyan. They will be competing in 11 dual meets and the New England's.

The team has only two divers, junior Jim Antonino, who fared well last year, and a freshman, Dan Conley who Melamed feels is promising.

Well, even if there is a lot of uncertainty surrounding the UMass men's swimming team, one thing is for certain — poolside at Boyden is hotter than hel..

Boucher, Crooker lead water crew

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

The 1976-77 edition of the UMass varsity men's swim team will be plunging into its winter campaign with the aid of two well experienced senior co-captains in the persons of Ben Crooker and Dave Boucher. Both are beginning their fourth season on the Minuteman squad and are expected to bolster a team that has been hit by an epidemic of quittings in the last few weeks.

The 6-5, 215 lb. Crooker is a senior in the Physics curriculum and currently sports an excellent 3.9 cum average. Crooker says that swimming two to three hours in the afternoon helps to prepare himself for his studies. He claims that his four-year career here at UMass has been a rewarding experience in that it has given him a chance to meet a lot of different people, and to travel a little and get away from his demanding studies.

Crooker started his swimming career at the age of 11 while attending 6th grade in his hometown of Amherst. "It pays off to start swimming when you're young" said Crooker, who currently holds four school records. Among these are the records in the 1,000, 500, and 200 yard freestyle events and as a member of the record holding 400 yard freestyle relay team. When asked if he would continue swimming after his graduation, Crooker replied "I'll probably go on to grad school and not remain active in competitive swimming although I will remain active in water polo to get into the water once in a while."

Although Crooker insists that it had nothing to do with his decision to go into competitive swimming, both of his parents were members of the UMass men's and women's swim teams.

Crooker's outlook for the Minutemen's season is optimistic as he expects the team to have at least a .500 season with a chance for some great individual efforts in the New England Tournament. He also feels that the swimmers deserve a little bit more recognition and exposure.

While majoring in Chemical Engineering, the 5-10, 163 lb. Dave Doucher has followed his brother, last year's captain who just graduated, into the swimming spotlight. Boucher thoroughly enjoys swimming and competes on the AAU level during the off-season, and continues to swim all year-round. Boucher comes from Seekonk, Ma. where he started swimming at the age of 11 after trying several sports and finding that swimming was an area where he could excel.

He apparently picked the right sport as he boasts records in the 100 and 200 yard breaststroke events and is a member of the record-holding 400 yard medley relay team. Like Crooker, Boucher believes that his swimming helps him to relax psychologically, and prepares him for his chemical studies.

When talking of the sport in general, Boucher says that "the first two weeks of practice are the toughest; after that it's a little easier and there's more to look forward to". He went on to say that he regrets the fact that swimming does not share the spotlight like some of the other major sports and thinks that the public is not too well informed about swimming due to the small amount of exposure that they've received in past years. "It's sort of frustrating to see half of a page in a newspaper devoted to a football game and then see one small article about the swim team at the bottom" said Boucher as he talked of the lack of recognition that the swimmers have received during his career at UMass.

Men's —— Skiing —— Women's

A fine past sets example

By MIKE WITOWSKI
Collegian Staff

The plaque's on the wall, of coach Bill MacConnell's office, tell the story, of the UMass men's ski team over the last seven years. During that time the Minutemen have captured either the Osborne Divisional Championship or the New England Intercollege Ski Championship, and in some years both.

The season will not start until January, but an organizational meeting was already held last Wednesday. Coach MacConnell informed all candidate's for the team that the try-out day will be held at Haystack Mountain on December 11th.

From now till try-out day, the skiing hopefuls were advised to participate in dry land training. This is simply physical exercising to prepare the body for the intense skiing practices, which will be conducted after the try-out day and establishment of a roster.

The size of the roster is set at ten skiers. According to coach MacConnell, about 35 or 40 men will be trying out for the team. "The most important thing for the men to do right now is get in shape, because during our try-out day we'll be skiing all day long," he said.

During this coming intersession, the team will ski everyday during the week and then have weekends off. This structure will be interrupted in early January for the Can-Am Collegiate Races to be held January 4-9 at Collingwood Mountain in Quebec, Canada.

The schedule this year takes the Minutemen to such New England Mountains as: Jiminy Peak in Hancock, Mass.; Dartmouth Skiway in Lyme, New Hampshire; Mt. Snow in Dover, Vermont; Cannon Mountain in Plymouth, New Hampshire; and Mt. Whittier in Ossipe, New Hampshire.

There are five returning lettermen in the running for spots on the team. Junior co-captains Dale Maynard and Geoff Doherty head the list of returnees which also features John Allard, Scott Prindle and David Cooke, who is coming back after a knee operation.

CORN SURFACES: The team will practice primarily at Haystack Mountain, but all members will receive season passes to Haystack and also Berkshire East, in Charlemont. Massachusetts .

Work before the snow

By LAURIE WHITING

Coached by new-comer Steven Tonelli, the UMass women's ski team started its official season yesterday with an organizational meeting of fifteen hopeful candidates.

According to Tonelli, the returnees have been doing dry land exercises to get into shape since early last month. Up 'til now those exercises included running and bicycling, but with the recruitment meeting, the women will be starting isometrics and weight training. Tonelli will trim the fifteen prospects down to an eight or ten member squad December 11-12.

This team will spend the weeks from December 20 through intersession at "Winter Camp" at practice area Haystack Mountain in Wilmington, Vt. From camp, the women plunge into a five meet slate against Harvard, Merrimack, UConn, and BU. The Canadian-American Invitationals precede and follow the season meets, with Eastern and National championship meets wrapping things up. According to Tonelli, BU will be the roughest competition as they have been in the past. As for the other teams, Tonelli is unsure, being "unfamiliar with the league."

Tonelli, a four-year veteran of the men's ski team here at UMass, has worked with the women's team before in intersession workouts, but never had much to do with the women's league. He calls the league much less structured than the men's, with an emphasis on creating good competitive experiences for all the skiers. He also cited the league's goals as one of an educational nature — developing the women's sense of aggressiveness and competitiveness.

Organized team workouts before the snow arrives will consist of running, isometrics, and weight training. The women will be working with low weight and high repetition drills to increase their power (ability to do work quickly). When December 20 rolls around, hopefully with some snow, the team will move onto the slopes of Berkshire East and Haystack Mountain to get their skiing legs back with a bit of free skiing. Following, the team will run gates and work on building stamina and a good carve turn. A carve turn is the smoothest turn possible around the gates with the least amount of breaking. According to Tonelli, it takes much practice to perfect and to "really feel the snow".

Of the final cut team, Tonelli is sure of five members, all of which are returning skiers. Two co-captains chosen last semester are Kathryn Shinnick and Catherine Donovan. The rest of the returnees that will see action are Nancy O'Hare, Nancy Hayden and Ann Delaney. The rest of the team will be determined from a group of transfer, exchange students and a few freshmen, according to Tonelli.

Tonelli sets a team goal at the Eastern championships in early March. He feels that the team will do well in the championship as a top power in the WISC league. To win the WISC championship, a team's total percentage for the season (minus the lowest) must top the rest.

The UMass skiers' season certainly will not be all downhill if they uphold the tradition of past winters.

Some info for those not aware

By LAURIE WHITING
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's ski team has been virtually invisible as a varsity sport here on campus because of the unique qualities of this sport on snow.

As it is, skiing being a (minor?) sport and all, it hasn't gotten as much exposure as the more popular and more "spectated" sports. Also, the women spend almost a month practicing behind the scenes without snow, getting into shape by running and bicycling. This dry-land training has been mostly on an individual basis so far this season, with organized team practices just now getting under way. Once the season is in full swing, the women will be traveling to far-away Canada, Vermont and New Hampshire — mountain country.

But not only is the sport basically inaccessible to all but the most dedicated fans, it's probably the least understood. What kinds of races go on at these meets? How big is the league? Where do the skiers practice? All of these have been slighted or misunderstood in the past.

Actually, the ski schedule is fairly simple. The women belong to the WISC (Women's Intercollegiate Ski Conference) League. It's a small group of only five schools including UMass, Boston University, Merrimack, UConn and Harvard-Radcliffe. Each meet is a mini-invitational in which all the WISC teams compete, usually at the host team's practice area. This season, besides the five basic meets, UMass will compete in the Can-Am Invitationals — one in Quebec at the beginning of the season, and a return invitation to the Canadian teams at Wildcat Mountain in New Hampshire.

Each meet is held on a weekend with one big race on Saturday, and another on Sunday. The combination of races is predetermined by the WISC coaches before the season starts. The main ingredients are always some combination of slalom, giant slalom, downhill, and dual slalom, however.

Each race is a speed test of the racers' ability to get through the gates to the finish as quickly as possible. The difference in the events is the number of gates (or turns) and the distances between them. The downhill tends to be the fastest run with the least amount of gates. The giant slalom has more turns and tends to be a bit slower because of it. The slalom has the most turns of all, being the "slowest" of the fast runs. A double slalom refers to two identical courses set next to each other with two competitors pit not only against the clock but (visually) each other.

Only five skiers compete from each team in one race. At the end of all the runs, the top three times from all the competition are added up and equal 100 per cent on a percentage scale. From here, each team adds up ITS own top three times and converts them to a percentage according to the 100 per cent standard already mentioned. So a ski meet score is likely to look like: BC 89 per cent, UMass 84 per cent, etc.

Awarding prizes has been all but banned from the ski winners by the WISC coaches. When prizes are awarded, they are useful articles that the women can utilize, or they come in the form of a wine-lodge get-together for all the competitors. According to ski coach Steve Tonelli, the reason for this is to de-emphasize winning and structure and to focus more on a "sense of good competition".

Ozdarski takes over hoop helm

By JOHN LOWNEY
Collegian Staff

Queens, Southern Connecticut, Providence, St. John's — these are just a few of the powers the UMass women's basketball team must play this season. So in her first season as coach, Mary Ann Ozdarski will be facing the most difficult season in the history of Minutewomen basketball.

Mary Ann Ozdarski, the new women's basketball coach at UMass, was at the airport this summer, practicing for her private pilot's license when she met Minuteman football coach Bob Harris. He told her that coach Carol Albert had left UMass, leaving an important opening in the basketball program, and urged Ozdarski to apply. Well, she did, and now she's got her hands full.

Carol Albert uplifted the women's basketball program considerably in her two years at UMass. The Minutewomen now play the toughest teams in the East, including such powers as Queens and Southern Connecticut.

She recruited the players who achieved an 11-7 record last year, five of whom have returned this season. She also recruited freshmen standouts Sue Henry and Sue Peters, who should provide backcourt strength for the Minutewomen.

Albert is now working for her doctorate in orthopedic study at UManitoba in Winnepeg, so Ozdarski assumes the difficult role of forming a team from players she didn't previously know.

Ozdarski has had considerable experience in playing and coaching basketball. She has also participated in softball, tennis and field hockey. (She was JV field hockey coach at UMass this fall.) More importantly, she's been a winner from her high school playing days in Greenfield through her high school coaching days in Vermont.

Ozdarski grew up in an athletic family. Her father played for a professional basketball team in Boston, and her brothers and sisters were all active in high school sports.

She commented on her introduction to sports: "My brothers and I played numerous pasture games, or what you might call street games, when we were young. Then my father put up a hoop and taught us how to shoot. I started to understand the game with exposure in high school."

Ozdarski "understood" basketball, field hockey and softball well enough in high school to be voted Greenfield High's outstanding girl athlete. That was no minor achievement, either, with those three teams all undefeated in her senior year.

In her senior year Greenfield High had the distinction of winning the first girl's high school basketball tournament ever held in Massachusetts. This was the Grafton Tournament, in which Ozdarski was voted MVP.

After high school Ozdarski played for numerous semi-pro basketball and softball teams in the area. The basketball teams participated in AAU and international tournaments, traveling throughout the Eastern seaboard and Midwest.

Ozdarski returned to school, then attending Greenfield Community College and Lyndon State College before earning her bachelor's degree in education from Keene State in '72. Because she was working at the time, she did not play ball in college.

Upon graduation from college Ozdarski's role changed from player to teacher and coach. Her teams were just as successful as in high school.

She taught at Brattleboro Union High in Vermont, where she coached both women's basketball and tennis. The basketball team made the state tournament every year she was there, losing the class I state finals by a mere two points in her final season. The tennis team didn't do badly either. It has an estimated 80-5 record during coach Ozdarski's years at Brattleboro.

Mary Ann Ozdarski has known nothing but success in her athletic endeavors. Of course, leading a growing women's basketball program at UMass is a big step.

Ozdarski pointed out the reasons for this growth: "The growth of women's basketball has occurred through the exposure of Title IX, but also through the abilities of young women who need the challenge of a program to show their talents. Women have made a conscientious effort to participate in good athletic programs. This has led to the realization of the administration to offer scholarships to women."

It has also led to the need for strong leadership in a sport which has been growing more and more competitive. Carol Albert built the UMass women's basketball program to its present status. It's Mary Ann Ozdarski's job to perpetuate this growth, so that UMass can eventually be recognized with the top women's basketball teams in the country. If past experience speaks, then Coach Ozdarski should have no trouble at all.

Ricketts finds a home

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

The middle cubicle of the basketball office located on the second floor of Boyden is occupied by a new face this fall. With the departure of assistant Ray Wilson last spring, head coach Jack Leaman was forced to scour resumes, and recruit another basketball tactician. The search ended this summer with the addition of Ray Ricketts to the UMass basketball coaching triumverate.

Originally from Pottstown, Pa., Ricketts was attending graduate school at Springfield College obtaining his masters in Education with a concentration in Physical Education, when he heard of the job opening and decided to apply.

"I went back home at the end of the school year," said Ricketts, "just hoping I would hear from somebody."

Unlike many recent college graduates, Ricketts was able to find opportunity for work, and by the middle of the summer he had been contacted by two schools seeking his talents. The choice was between Delaware and UMass, but the decision never really seemed in doubt.

"I'd seen UMass play a couple of times while I was in school, and was impressed," said Ricketts. "Plus I went to school around here for two years, and really enjoyed the surroundings. Massachusetts is really nice, so I decided on UMass."

The ruggedly built 24 year old Ricketts is no stranger to the sports scene, for while in high school he excelled in all sports, and was a letterman in football, basketball, and baseball. He was an All-League safety in football, and MVP of the basketball team his junior and senior years. Upon graduating from high school, Ricketts decided to attend a small division 2 school in Reading, Pa. - Albright College.

"Although it didn't have the major I wanted, Physical Education, it was the only school to offer me a full scholarship so I really had no choice," said Ricketts.

While at Albright he continued to excel at athletics, although narrowing his talent to just basketball and starting at guard for four years. In 1974, his senior year, Ricketts was rewarded for his efforts by being named to the All-Middle Atlantic Conference team, and being placed on the All-East Division 2 team. By the time he had graduated from Albright, Ricketts was the schools fifth all time leading scorer, having produced 1588 points over his four year career.

This will not be Ricketts first shot at the coaching ranks, for while attending Springfield he coached the freshman team to a 12-6 record. Now at UMass, Ricketts has a varied degree of responsibilities, ranging from head coach of the JV team, to scouting, and recruiting for the varsity.

His main responsibility is as coach of the JV's, a post he has been working at since the tryouts for the team began late in October. The 10-man final squad has been practicing since November 1, and they've learned first hand what type of coach he really is.

"I believe in conditioning, and team play," said Ricketts. "No one or two individuals make a team, we'll be a hard working hustling team. I like to fast break, and play man to man defense, so they're going to have be in condition if they expect to play. We're just learning the offense now, but we'll be ready for the season opener on December 1."

The JV's are a group of seven freshmen, and three sophomores all looking for a shot at the varsity. And with only two weeks of practice its been tough for Ricketts to evaluate the team thus far.

"I haven't made up my mind yet on the starting squad, but I have been impressed with the play of Bob Berman at guard, especially in his play making ability, said Ricketts. Also in the rebounding of Andre Fruneaux, Ernest Coleman, and Herb McKnight. We're going to try and play everybody, I averaged nine men a game at Springfield, and I see no reason why I can't do the same here."

There are some drawbacks to being the JV coach, such as only playing a nine game scheudule, and having to share the minimal facilities of the Cage.

"It's tough trying to keep a team motivated when it has stretches of ten days off at a time, I'm going to try and combat that by giving the players a couple of days off during those stretches," said Ricketts.

Because of the limited facilities the Cage offers, the JV's are forced to practice after the varsity, from 6-8 at night, prolonging an already long day for Ricketts. Many days Ricketts arrives on the job around 9:30, and isn't able to call it a day until after the JV's finish practice.

"The Cage is an ideal place for a home game, but it would be better if we had two courts, and were able to carry on both practices similtaneously. Its tough on the kids, too, since their education comes first," Ricketts said.

The first year coach has also been lending a hand at the varsity practices, but his real behind-the-scene duties won't become effective until after the season begins.

"I'm going to be doing a lot of scouting," said Ricketts, "preparing the pre-game plan, and thinking about the matchups of players on the court. I'll also be checking up on the players making sure they're going to classes, and doing well in school."

For a man whose eventual ambition is to become a major college head coach, UMass is the perfect proving ground, "I'll learn as much as I can for the next four or five years, then we'll see what happens."

JV Hockey

Kidd molds his troops

By SUSAN FAY
Collegian Staff

On December 3, the UMass junior varsity hockey team will open its season against a formidable Harvard team in a "home" contest (played at Amherst College's Orr Rink).

Coach Ross Kidd and his troupe of icemen have been preparing for that game for the past two weeks. If that doesn't sound like much time, it isn't. Coach Kidd is still in the process of sorting out players and trying to mold together three solid lines amidst problems with ice time, sickness, and untimely exams.

Despite the confusion, there are standouts in all positions that are making Coach Kidd's job a little easier. Leading the pack for the forwards are freshmen Johnny Johnson and Rich Riccioli. Johnson, who hails from Barnstable, was his team's leading scorer last year and Riccioli played for Malden Catholic. Also impressive is Dan Scavone, out of New Prep. "He's a big strong kid who's had good training." Returning from last year's JV are sophomores Tom O'Shea and Joe Nelligan, both of whom Kidd describes as "knowledgable hockey players." Rounding out the forwards are freshmen Scott Alexander, Doug Aylward, Andy Wilkie, Mike Sherakawa, (who, interestingly enough, it originally from Japan), Doug Limone, John Santisi, and John Ryan. "Most of the top players, the high scorers, were centers in high school. I have to make wings out of some of them," commented Kidd.

Defensively, Kidd assumes that he will get help from the varsity. Varsity coach Jack Canniff is currently carrying eight defensemen on his squad. But, Kidd does have several players working out regularly with his JV defense that are looking good. Big Jim Phelan is a sophomore with JV experience from last year. Freshman Jim Benelli, out of Deerfield Academy (who also doubles as catcher on the baseball team), is another top prospect. Especially impressive is Dean Liacos, from Peabody, who's currently skating with the varsity, a "heckava defenseman" in Coach Kidd's words. Another standout is John Powers, of Archbishop Williams, who can also play up front.

Although Kidd is still carrying five goalies, two freshmen, Frank Cifrino and Tim Haggarty, seem to have the best shot at guarding the nets for the JV's this season. Cifrino played for Milton High before attending Mt. Herman. "Cifrino is a heckava goalie," commented Coach Kidd. "I've known him since he was about 14, because he's played with my sons."

The JV's play a tough schedule. "We look for the best competition possible for our team," said Kidd. "In many cases we play over our heads. We play a lot of Division I teams and we scrimmage some Division III varsities (and do well)."

One problem that may affect the team is last year's decision to eliminate hockey scholarships. "There were 3 or 4 players last year, but this year we have no freshmen on scholarship," said Kidd. This could be a big disadvantage in light of the fact that most of the Minutemen's competition (teams such as Harvard, Yale, and RPI), have scholarship programs. But, Kidd doesn't seem to be too worried at present. "This year's team seems to be somewhat on a par with teams of the past. I'm not too concerned. But, at this point, there is much more work to be done than with some of the teams of the past."

Basically, the JV team serves as a farm club for the varsity. The main goal of the JV players is to eventually make the varsity team. "The JV program provides an opportunity for more guys to play hockey," stated Kidd. "But the basic reason for the JV hockey team is to feed the varsity." Most of the players are deficient in one aspect of the game nd just need more development before they can skate with the varsity. If a player comes to UMass from a school with a poor hockey program or has been stifled by poor coaching, the Junior Varsity is the place for him.

Women's JV

By MEL WEBSTER
Collegian Staff

A lack of height will be the major problem facing the women's JV basketball team and coach Pam Rietschel this year. Rietschel, a graduate student, hopes to have a very competitive team in her first year of coaching.

The team will play an eight-game schedule this year, an increase from past seasons. There are not many games due to budgetary reasons, and many schools dropping their JV programs", Rietschel said.

The emphasis of the JV program, according to Rietschel, "is for everyone to learn to play basketball as well as they possibly can, and to be prepared to play varsity ball.

"Winning is also great, but being competitive is just as important," she added.

Rietschel plans to have a running team that also uses a great deal of running defenses. This is due to the fact that her tallest player is 5'9".

"Elaine Howle has looked good in the strong forward spot, and freshman Nurit Rechnitz has shown great improvement in the backcourt," she said.

Karyl Resnick and Lynsie Wickman, both sophomores, and Pat DeCaire, a freshman, have shown marked improvement since the beginning of practice. The rest of the squad includes sophomores Joanne Davis and Andy Godin, and freshmen Robin Jennings, Chris Kelley, Cindy Martin, Toby Mead, Beth O'Connell, and Laura O'Neil.

Coach Rietschel has yet to decide on a definite starting lineup, but said, "Using a running game and a pressing defense will mean everyone will see a great deal of action".

She added, "We won't lose anything from our game by substituting freely".

The team opens its season on December 14th with a home game Central Connecticut College; Rietschel and her squad will be ready.

Fire guts apartments

By ELIZABETH S. KENT
and ANN TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

A fire erupted last night in Apartment 362 at the Crown Point Apartment complex, 370 Northampton Road, Amherst, spreading to 11 other apartments before being curbed by firemen.

The apartments involved were destroyed in the two-alarm blaze.

"It went off like an atom bomb," one police official said.

Five fire engines and one hook and ladder truck from the Amherst Fire Department were at the scene. One engine from Hadley was also at the complex and the Northampton Fire Department was "standing by" at the Amherst Central fire station.

Amherst Fire Chief John T. Doherty said there were no serious injuries among the inhabitants of the burning apartments. Police said one woman was taken to the hospital with a sprained ankle, and another was held briefly by police for mild shock.

The fire was well underway when police received word of the blaze at 11:06 p.m. Flames were shooting from the roof of the building when the fire trucks arrived.

According to one fire official things were under control by midnight.

Police said they were 100 per cent sure no one was left in the burning building.

Firemen in the building were breaking windows to allow others with hoses on the ground to shoot water directly into the flaming apartments. Firemen said that smoke damage would be extensive in the buildings immediately around the fire and that water damage would also be heavy.

After midnight firemen were able to start throwing furniture and books out of the second floor windows. At that time, flaming cinders were shooting off the roof onto the surrounding grounds.

The fire could be seen from the UMass campus and attracted a large crowd.

"I came here ten minutes ago expecting to visit my friend," said one onlooker. "I'm very worried. I'd like to find her."

One woman said she was taking a shower when she smelled smoke. She threw on her bathrobe and ran downstairs. "I never went back up," she said. "All my grandmother's embroidery was in there." She said she has fire insurance.

At 12:15 a.m., Northampton firemen requested permission to leave the Amherst fire station to go the scene of a Northampton fire. Chief Doherty replied that two Amherst engines would be sent back to the Amherst station in 10 to 15 minutes.

When asked how he felt about entering a burning building an Amherst fireman said, "It's not often that one has time to wax eloquent on entering a building. I'm afraid that there isn't time to think about a whole lot."

Abraham acquitted; faces further charges

By ELIZABETH KENT
Collegian Staff

Former UMass School of Education Prof. Cleo Abraham still faces two indictments on 27 counts of larceny after he was found innocent on four counts of larceny in Hampshire Superior Court Friday afternoon.

Abraham was charged with stealing the money he had received after cashing four checks made out to two persons who were alleged to be consultants to the UMass Career Opportunity Program (COP) which is based in Brooklyn, N.Y. During the court proceedings, it turned out that neither of the consultants ever existed.

The jury, which deliberated for less than two hours Friday afternoon, consisted of seven women and five men.

The only witness for the defense, Abraham, admitted to endorsing and cashing the four checks but said he had sent the money to New York by courier in envelopes addressed to William L. Downey and Henry B. Jones.

Graduate student Mack B. Morant testified Thursday he had never seen Downey, Jones, or the money, even though he signed a statement in 1974 which said he delivered the money to both men.

Morant testified he had been told by Abraham a box of supplies he had delivered to the Brooklyn COP office contained an envelope with the money for the two men.

Prosecuting attorney Bernard Whalen suggested that Abraham had tried to cover up the missing money during an investigation in 1974 and that Abraham had been responsible for the preparation of false affidavits.

Whalen pointed out that the Social Security number given for Downey had the same first five digits as Abraham's own Social Security number and that the address given for Jones was the same as a friend of Abraham's.

Whalen, in his closing statements, asked the jury to judge the credibility of each witness. "Which was the most evasive, the most equivocable?" he asked. "I submit that it was the defendant."

Defense Attorney Jay M. Forgotson asked the jury if Abraham would be "dumb enough" to put the first five digits of his own Social Security number on UMass documents.

Forgotson also suggested that Abraham had been framed by persons at UMass who knew Abraham's habits, although he did not name the persons who might have done so.

Forgotson stressed that Abraham admitted to cashing the checks and said that the checks were cashed "in good faith. He made a mistake, but it was not a criminal mistake."

Forgotson added that "All of the witnesses had something to say consistent with the defendants testimony. There was no willfulness to be deceitful, no consciousness of guilt."

Mismanagement of School of Education funds from the U.S. Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare was first reported by the Hampshire Daily Gazette on April 20, 1976.

At that time, Dwight Allen was the dean of the School of Education. He subsequently resigned and is now a full-time professor at UMass.

Atron Genty, Earl Seidman and Cleo Abraham all resigned their administrative positions at that time. Of the four men who resigned, Abraham is the only one with no present connection to UMass.

Gentry and Seidman still hold teaching positions.

Last April, Cleo Abraham was found guilty in a U.S. District Court of stealing $28,875 from a federally funded program. He received the money by cashing a check in that amount. He was given a three-year suspended sentence and was ordered to work 40 hours a month doing public service.

The finding is being appealed according to Abraham's attorney.

Abraham faces another 27 counts of larceny which are presently pending in Hampshire Superior Court.

Music student Dawn Minaai:

'It's another world in there'

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

Dawn Minaai makes beautiful music. As a junior in the Music Dept., Minaai spends many hours a week perfecting her piano technique in a practice room in the Fine Arts Center (FAC). Nearly all her classes are located in the FAC and Minaai admits, "It's another world in there. Sometimes you forget about the world outside."

I followed Minaai through her day to discover the Fine Arts Center and the world of a music major.

In a section of the FAC nearest to the campus pond, footsteps echo down the cement staircase as you walk down to the bottom floors. Classrooms and practice rooms are located on the first floor. In room 157 the laughter flows as freely as the music. It is late morning in a music dictation class.

Minaai and a handful of fellow students sit at desks in front of a piano. The instructor plays a portion of a composition and the students copy notes as they hear them. Hands motion to the instructor; everyone wants their work checked. To the relief of some and the sarcastic protesting of others, the song is played again.

"Let's do something else," Minaai suggests after glancing at the clock, "there are only seven minutes left." More comments are made by others, laughter following. The instructor jumps from the piano bench to stand behind Minaai examing her notebook and glancing at a few others, he yields to the pleas to stop for the day.

The class empties quickly. Out in the hall, Minaai introduces me to some of the students gathered around to talk. "There are only 200 or so music majors," she says, "so we all know each other very well and can kid around a lot."

In the few minutes between classes, Minaai takes me down an adjacent hall. She motions to the designs painted on the brightly colored walls. "They were just painted last week," Minaai said. "Before that this place looked like an asylum."

Beyond the glass doors that dot the large halls are individual cubicles. Each practice room has a piano within its sound proof walls but occasionally one sees a violin player intensely playing before a music stand. Anyone can use these rooms although music majors have top priority for reservations.

Minaai attends a required music history class in another section of the Fine Arts Center. The walls are white, the carpeting brown and the atmosphere quieter, more reserved. We enter a large theater room, with a projector screen set up on center stage. "This is the recital room," Minaai says, "where students come on Tuesday morning to perform in ensembles or recitals." Anyone can come on Tuesday morning at 11:15 to hear student recitals.

As the professor of the class draws out an audio-visual image of the medieval age, Minaai whispers, "Ensembles are but another requirement we have to take. Music majors like myself are required to attend classes in music theory, music history, large as well as small ensembles and private lessons."

After class Minaai walks to the front of the class to retrieve a quiz. She has another perfect grade. Minaai takes almost no notes as she retains almost all of what she hears or sees.

Each week in music history a listening assignment sheet is handed out. Homework will be done in the music library of the Fine Arts Center. Where a science major may have to spend a night memorizing chemical formulas, Dawn Minaai will be listening to compositions such as Corelli's Sonata Opera 5 No. 2 for quiz material.

As we walk out of class Minaai confides that her favorite composers are French, such as Saint-Saens or Faure. For many assignments instructors request students to compose in the style of certain artists, in the same way English majors study the different literary styles of authors. Minaai's music concentration is on composition.

When asked if European composers influence her Minaai replied, "Europe is not thought of very much over here by the average person. My interests are primarily the people in this country. I want my music to be geared to their enjoyment, as well as mine. Classical music is excellent to study for disciplinary purposes and to foster a musical background from which to create."

Dawn Minaai transferred here this year after a semester on the Collegiate Exchange Program from her native Hawaii. Her background deeply affects her musical ambitions. "My music is what I am, it is an expression of what I feel. I would like to direct my composing toward popular music and try to combine Hawaiian sounds with the musical framework."

"It is still fairly early in the afternoon when Minaai leaves the FAC for a quick lunch at Franklin Dining Commons near her dorm in Central. She returns to the Center at 2 p.m. for a voice lesson.

"I do not get credit for that class. Senior voice majors must teach undergraduates before they can graduate. I take these lessons to help them but also to gain a better understanding of music through a different medium."

On the second floor of the FAC, faculty offices line the halls. In a large classroom, 20 students have gathered with their student teachers for a voice recital.

"Speech is the way we make our personality known. My voice is so much a part of me..." Minaai has a soft voice that she hopes to project a bit louder. "I try to enunciate more and increase my vocabulary," said Minaai.

She continued after class, "In Hawaii you are limited in some ways; it is a long trip to the mainland.

"Language can become restricted within the islands," she said. Minaai has lost much of what she calls her 'accent' over the months she has been in Massachusetts.

"Many Hawaiian words are still incorporated in my vocabulary" she said. "Being here and having voice lessons provides me with a greater opportunity for growth and development of creativity."

Her instructors and classmates know Minaai as an excellent student of music composition, but most of the campus knows Dawn Minaai as the attractive singles player on the UMass Women's Tennis Team.

She said she sees her athletic skill as a "physical and psychological alternative to the piano." Her love of people has created extra hours in her busy schedule to teach tennis to an older person who had never involved himself in any sort of physical activity before, as well as to spend time with an underprivileged minority child.

"I wish I could set up a tennis camp for all kinds of kids who cannot afford to go away somewhere exciting or who come from broken homes," she said, adding, "I want to help people as much as I can."

"There are so many things I want to do, with tennis as well as music. But mainly I am interested in children. If I could give them an appreciation for music, any kind of music, or start them when they are young on tennis, maybe it could help provide a pleasurable outlet for them," she said.

She said she doesn't know what she will do in the coming years. Stay in Massachusetts and work with underprivileged children; go to California and compose music or teach tennis back in her native town of Hilo, Hawaii.

Student phone directories finally hit stands

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

The Student Telephone Directory is finally out!

Students living in dorm rooms with telephones should have received them last week. Off-campus students or those who don't have personal phones can buy directories in the University Store for 26 cents each, including tax.

According to Robert L. Campbell, acting director of Residencial Resource Management (RRM), the delay was due to a combination of "people not getting information in quickly or accurately enough," problems with the computer, and concern about the implications of the Fair Information Act.

The 162-page directory includes the telephone numbers and addresses of all students at UMass at Amherst. If you wish to have your name withheld from the next edition of the directory, contact the Housing Office in Whitmore.

Putting the directories together is paid by the Telephone Trust Fund, which consists of a portion of the telephone service charge students living on campus pay.

There are 6274 rooms on campus, 5919 of which have phones. The RRM office published about 8000 copies this year and sold 1800 to the University Store at cost.

Paying the phone bill also entitles each room to an Amherst area phone book released by the New England Teephone Company. These are expected to be delivered to residence area offices at the end of the month.

New Faculty-Staff Directories are due sometime next semester, said Diane Bebo from the Personnel Office in Whitmore.

The current edition is two years old.

At an Oct. 21, 1976 Faculty Senate meeting, Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said the Fair Information Act had caused delays in the publication of the Faculty-Staff Directory because it restricted the kinds of information which can be collected for the directory.

The Faculty-Staff directories are traditionally sent out to offices all over campus, and are not available to students because of insufficient funds, according to Bebo.

Sylvan Government president criticizes area representatives

By BRAD GOVERMAN
Collegian Staff

Gail N. Syphers, president of the Sylvan Area Government, (SAG), said last night she had been considering quitting her position and criticized area representatives.

Syphers cited lack of participation of the area reps and her realization that very little business was being accomplished by the SAG in her remarks at their meeting last night.

"I was considering quitting," Syphers said to SAG members, "when I realized that you reps have been quitting your responsibilities for too long. I've been spending a lot of time lately trying to straighten things out and get things done on my own."

Syphers said she felt guilty about some of the allotments made this year including the buget grant of $2,000 to each of the three area dorms: Brown, Cashin, and McNamara. "But, she added, "I've spent a lot of time with the finance committee quabbling over accounts and I intend to work hard to get more money in the area."

Syphers asked any rep present that if he or she had any intentions to quit, that person do it now to let new and interested residents fill the vacated position. One representative from Brown House, Joe Holotka, resigned, citing lack of quality in the area government and his desire to pursue a seat on the Undergraduate Student Senate as his reasons for resigning.

Syphers said at the outset of the meeting, "This is the big night."

The remark opened what Syphers termed a "pep talk" directed to the elected representatives of the Sylvan Area.

In other business, Syphers suggested that area representatives think about ideas for social activities over the Thanksgiving break, bearing in mind the limited amount of money left in the operating budget for such activities.

It was agreed upon by all members of the meeting that James West, director of Northeast-Sylvan Student Affairs, be asked to attend the next meeting so that questions and problems concerning budgetary matters could be discussed.

Treasurer of SAG, John Jacobs, revealed to the government that $1996.36 represented the current balance of the monies available for use by the SAG.

Dallas cancels JFK services

By JAMES A. NOLLET
Collegian Staff

Today marks the thirteenth anniversary of former President John F. Kennedy's assassination. In Dallas, Texas, scene of the murder which marked the beginning of the tumultuous 60's, the formal city observance has been cancelled.

According to John Sissom, curator of the local Kennedy Museum, Mayor Robert Folsom cancelled the ceremonies because fewer than 100 people attended last year's observances.

However, democratic County Chairman Robert Kessler said the mayor's decision caused "about 500 phone calls", all protesting the decision.

"It's a strange thing," Sissom said. "The mayor cancelled the ceremonies because of lack of attendance and because the people didn't support it; now, they apparently want to continue it."

The mayor called on local churches to plan services in their individual places of worship. The executive director of the Dallas Council of Churches and a Dallas minister in turn announced plans to preside at a prayer vigil Monday evening at the downtown Kennedy Memorial.

In other assassination-related events, Rep. Henry B. Gonzaicz (D-Tex.), who rode in the presidential motorcade in which Kennedy was killed, said Sunday he no longer believes in the "full scope" of the Warren Commission Report.

"I would say that now I would have to believe in Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs and have that kind of gullibility to believe in the light of recent developments, the full scope of the Warren Commission Report," Gonzalez said on an Austin television program.

Police spokesperson Bob Shaw confirmed that the subpeona from the House Select Committee on Assassination called for Dallas Chief of Police Don Byrd to take the police department's assassination records to the committee Nov. 29 and verify that they are complete.

Shaw said the department has told the committee it will cooperate fully in the investigation.

Dallas Times Herald reporter Hugh Aynesworth, writing in Sunday's edition, said the Warren Commission "made several errors in judgement." Aynesworth is recognized by many to be one of the most authoritive writers on the Kennedy assassination.

Willoughby Sharp shocks art gallery crowd

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

The red letters screamed "WHO IS WILLOUGHBY SHARP?" The words were painted larger than life across the white wall of the Student Union Art Gallery. The star of the show sat on a bed at the back of the room. The bed had no mattress. The star had no clothes.

From Wednesday to Friday last week patrons of the arts were invited to witness a program entitled, "Interrogation." Willoughby Sharp was the star of the show.

Working my way through the crowd waiting to see the performance, I came to a table at the back of the ante-room. Two televisions sat beside what appeared to be a guest book.

Assistant Melanie Hakim greeted us and bid us wait before entering the other room by way of a black curtain.

Turning our attention to the video screens that monitored the adjacent room we saw on one what appeared to be a large white block with a piece of black tubing resting upon. Another screen showed the upper body of a man smoking a hand-rolled cigarette.

A crowd of some fifty persons protested the amount of time they had spent waiting to see the performance. A few admitted to "standing around here for two hours waiting to see this clown."

We stood at the entry way to what was more than three-fourths of the original Student Union Art gallery. At the opposite end a man sat on a bed frame. His right wrist was handcuffed to the white-painted headboard. His left hand was occupied with a marijuana cigarette. He was naked.

Collegian: "Are you Willoughby Sharp?"

Sharp: "I don't know, am I"?

The man laughed and continued smoking. I turned my head to the left and could not help noticing "WHO IS WILLOUGHBY SHARP?" painted in three-foot high letters on the wall. Three assistants hovered about shooting pictures with expensive cameras, others monitoring video recording machinery in the corners of the room.

Sharp was invited to UMass through the Student Union Art Gallery Program of which Russell Sumgrub, the name he gave, is in charge. A fee of $300 was paid from the Student Union Art Gallery Fund.

"Every student paid one thirty-thousandth of their tuition to have me here," Willoughby said, "and some of you are missing me. Hordes are waiting for me though, I hear. Hordes."

Willoughby gave his purpose of coming to the University as "Art is so personal, art resides in my within my potent aura... think of this gallery as a way to get across the news. This is anything you want it to be..."

When I asked Willoughby why we were being recorded on videotape, he told me, "Video is a new art medium. I am not concerned with the real art forms as they are known now."

"I am conceptual art," he continued. "Anyone who is using video now is a pioneer. I am a pioneer. Kit and John and everyone filming you are pioneers in the art medium."

"Video will generate a new medium to represent the symbolic art forms," Willoughby explained. "I generate within the aura of creativity in this room. The closed circuit TV color camera projects out to the fine arts building."

"I am energy," he said. "There is energy in this room. There is an electric eye around me now."

I asked Willoughy where the electric eye was and he answered, "In front of me, surrounding me. Cross it."

When I stepped through the electric beam running across the room, loud bells rang.

Willoughby said the films that were being taped are destined for the University Archives.

"You will never forget this experience. You may put it out of your mind for a while, but you will never forget meeting me. It will be forever videotaped upon your mind," he said.

Various people through the night went into the "Interrogation Room." Some were videotaped, some were not. Comments ranged from, "the man has a message on art ... " to "Well, we paid $40,000 for that hunk of metal in front of Fine Arts, so $300 for this Sharp character, sure ... "

Sumgrub said Sharp produces a magazine out of New York called, "Avalanche."

"The magazine brought to light many artists like Chris Burdon." Sumgrub said.

Burdon spoke last year at UMass and is noted for crucifying himself atop a Volkswagen as well as having spent over 24 hours lying on a floor holding two live wires surrounded by glasses of water, while people walked around him.

I told Sharp he had made my day. And he had, I still laugh every time I look at the souvenir poster he gave me before I left my interview.

Waldman: SUB, 12/3

By MELANIE JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

Wendy Waldman, one of today's most versatile women entertainers, will bring her talents to the Student Union Ballroom on Friday, Dec. 3, at 8:00 p.m.

A prolific composer, she accompanies herself on piano, guitar, and dulcimer, and writes her own string and horn arrangements.

Waldman established her formidable reputation as a contributer for Maria Muldaur and Linda Ronstadt, as well as through her own recordings. Her first album, Love Has Got Me, earned Waldman unanimous praise from the rock press. Three albums later, Waldman still dazzles her listeners with her varied yet disciplined vocal range and intricate harmonies.

Waldman's 200 songs encompass a broad range of moods. "I look at the world as a philopher, a painter," she says, "using the tools the world gives me. As many pictures and emotions as there are in the world, that's how many potential songs are out there."

Waldman describes her composing as a process of "painting pictures in song. It's a way to give the music the kind of colors that I see all around me. "She brings her images alive through her distinctive vocal treatments and her arrangements.

"My roots are arranging," she explains. "It's a healthy approach. I was born and raised in Hollywood and I believe that's a good way to make a record."

Waldman's lyrics reveal a perspective quite different from standard pop fare. "I'm just not gonna fall for that 'I'm suffering because I'm a woman stuff,'" she maintains. "The long range vision is the only thing that matters to me, ideas that reach inside another person."

Tickets for the Wendy Waldman concert are $2.50 in advance, $3.00 at the door, and will be available on the Campus Center Concourse during the next two weeks.

State trooper dies in car crash

BOSTON, [UPI] — Edward Mahoney, a state police officer who received the force's highest honor for pulling a woman from a burning car, was burned to death yesterday when his cruiser was rammed by a truck.

Mahoney, an an 18-year veteran of the force, had parked his cruiser on the east bound side of the Massachusetts Turnpike extention on the outskirts of Boston after pulling an auto over for a traffic violation, police said.

Michael Wilson of Quincy was pulled over around noon for a traffic violation. While Mahoney sat in his cruiser writing a summons for Wilson, the vehicle was hit from behind by a tractor-trailer rig also heading inbound, spokesmen said.

The impact of the crash sandwiched the police cruiser between the truck and Wilson's car. The impact of the crash exploded the cruiser's gas tank, police said.

Mahoney was pronounced dead at the scene.

Lifer gets holiday after 67 years

MICHIGAN CITY, Ind. [UPI] — The Thanksgiving holiday may be the last chance for freedom for Johnson Van Dyke Grigsby, 92, after 67 years in the Indiana State Prison at Michigan City.

The Guinness Book of World Records says Grigsby, who entered the prison in August, 1908, has spent more time in prison than any man in history.

Last year he was briefly paroled to a Michigan City nursing home, but was sent back to prison after experiencing adjustment problems.

Wednesday morning he will be released to spend the four-day holiday with a retired construction executive and his middle-aged son who live in central Indiana. The two men have long taken an interest in helping ex-convicts adjust to community life. If things go well, they will make their home his permanently.

Grigsby is arthritic and cannot read or write. He lives in the prison hospital and passes his time by watching the color television set singer Johnny Cash gave him. Cash recorded a ballad about Grigsby.

Grigsby is black. He stabbed a white man who hurled a chair at him during a tavern brawl in Alexandria, a town north of Indianapolis, in December 1907. The man bled to death. Grigsby was convicted of second-degree murder and sentenced to life in prison.

Entomologist is 'bugged' by sex

CORVALLIS, Ore. [AP] — Is there no end in sight for entomoligist Gary Daterman and the rest of the U.S. Forest Service research laboratory staff who have become moth sex symbols?

Will they forever be pursued by lascivious male tussock moths? Must they be further cursed by an aphrodisiacal touch?

Probably.

But for the moment at least, sexual promiscuity is waning in the world of the tussock moth. The males have mated for the year and died. But there will be more next summer.

Daterman's problem started in 1974 when he and other scientists developed an artificial sex attractant, or pheromone, for use in detecting outbreaks of Douglas-fir tussock moths. The critters have been known to virtually devour entire forests of Douglas fir.

About a year ago, Daterman was in a crowded football stadium in Corvallis when he noticed a couple of male tussock moths dancing around him in amorous frenzy. Naturally, he didn't encourage them.

And there was the night technician Linda Peterson noticed her cat, which she had petted a little earlier, was being bedeviled by a couple of — you guessed it — male tussock moths.

The pheromone is very potent and the moths aren't very discriminating. Even a thumbprint is enough to put a gleam in the eye of the stodgiest tussock gentlemoth.

"What happens is that you can be showered, shaved, and shorn and go outside and the moths will still find you," Daterman says. "We do know it gets into your clothes. They will attract moths even after having gone through a washing machine.

Teachers vote on union integration

NEW ORLEANS [AP] — The last two racially segregated statewide teacher organizations in the United States, one mostly white and the other mostly black, vote this week on whether to join forces.

At separate but simultaneous state conventions, the overwhelmingly white Louisiana Teachers Association and the smaller, predominantly black Louisiana Education Association consider a merger plan that has been in the works for a year.

Both groups are under strong pressure to approve the plan from the 1.8 million member National Education Association (NEA).

The NEA expelled the white group several years ago when it balked at an earlier merger, leaving it outside the sphere of influence of the nation's largest education organization. NEA officials have warned the same thing could happen to the blacks this time.

But blacks fear their 11,000 members may be swallowed by the 28,000-member white group.

"We've had difficulties in this state in the past when it comes to the hiring and displacement of teachers. There is a concern as to whether or not blacks will be protected by the new organization," said Edward C. Nelson of New Roads, La., president of the black group.

The proposed merger sets rigid black-to-white ratios for the combined group's government during the first six years. But Nelson said some blacks feel the ratios should be established indefinitely.

Outgoing Boston Police Commissioner Robert J. diGrazia(R) laughs as he is presented a pig by Boston Police officer Norman Halliday as diGrazia "was roasted" at a dinner hosted by the Boston Press Club. DiGrazia left his Boston post to become police chief of Montgomery County, Maryland. (UPI)

Gum factory explodes; dozens critically hurt

NEW YORK [AP] — An explosion and fire ripped through four floors of the Chiclet gum factory Sunday, injuring 55 workers and throwing some of them into the street four floors below.

Several victims were covered with hot gum and many were sent for treatment to burn centers in three states. An Army Reserve helicopter took five victims to the Crozier-Chester burn unit in Philadelphia. Other victims were taken by ambulance to hospitals in New Jersey and in the metropolitan New York area.

Some of those injured in the early morning blast and fire suffered burns over 90 per cent of their bodies. One was in grave condition in the intensive care unit of a hospital here.

"It was really horrible. I saw men with their clothing and skin burned off," said Chris Boggio, 19, a process helper in the block-wide, six-story building. "The blast threw me clean across the room."

Teddy Orzechowska of Brooklyn suffered burns over 30 per cent of his body. "I was in the middle of the flames. I didn't know where to run," he said.

Most of the damage was in the fourth floor of the American Chiclet Co. factory in the Queens section of the city. Casement windows reinforced with wire were blown out of several floors and a loaded cabinet weighing about two tons fell onto a car below, crushing it.

Witnesses said workers were hurled into the street by the force of the blast which sent chunks of concrete and shards of glass flying.

A strong smell of spearmint could be detected in the blast area. Firemen got hot chickle — the gum derived from tropical trees — over their boots while battling the blaze.

The blast occurred at 2:42 a.m. The flash fire that followed it was extinguished by 3:17 a.m.

The cause of the explosion was not immediately determined by fire marshals and bomb squad detectives who searched the debris.

U.S. report reveals dangerous Soviet research

[AP] — A newly declassified U.S. Defense Intelligence Agency report says extensive Soviet research into microwaves might lead to methods of causing disoriented human behavior, nerve disorders or even heart attacks.

"Soviet scientists are fully aware of the biological effects of low-level microwave radiation which might have offensive weapons application," says the report, based on an analysis of experiments conducted in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe.

According to the study, this research work suggests "the potential for the development of a number of antipersonnel applications."

Microwave beams are the electronic basis of radar and are widely used for relaying long-distance telephone calls. Other common sources of microwaves include television transmitters.

A copy of the study was provided by the agency to The Associated Press in response to a request under the Freedom of Information Act. The Pentagon agency refused to release some portions of the study, saying they remain classified on national security grounds.

The report made no direct mention of the Soviet microwave bombardment of the U.S. electronic intelligence-gathering equipment at the embassy.

The State Department issued an administrative notice on Nov. 12 declaring Moscow "an unhealthful post," but no link was officially drawn between this move and the radiation situation.

The Soviets have denied beaming any radiation at the embassy, contending that the microwaves are simply part of the normal background radiation found in any major city.

The Pentagon agency's report, distributed within the government last March, said that one biological effect which could offer antipersonnel uses is the phenomenon known as "microwave hearing."

"Sounds and possibly even words which appear to be originating intracranially within the head can be induced by signal modulation at very low average power densities," the study said.

The report concluded that Soviet research in this area "has great potential for development into a system for disorienting or disrupting the behavior patterns of radiation.

"One physiological effect which has been demonstrated is heart seizure," the report said.

It said that this has been accomplished experimentally in frogs by synchronizing the pulses of a microwave signal with the animal's heartbeat and beaming the radiation at the chest area.

military or diplomatic personnel; it could be used equally as well as an interrogation tool."

The report said that along with microwave hearing, the Soviets have also studied various changes in body chemistry and functioning of the brain resulting from exposure to microwaves and other frequencies of electromagnetic

Syrian troops invade cities completing sweep of Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon [AP] — Massive Syrian armored forces swept into Sidon and Tripoli yesterday to complete their occupation of Lebanon on the eve of its independence day. They were greeted by shouts of joy and wild shooting into the air.

"It's great," shouted a bearded Lebanese civilian riding down Tripoli's main avenue on a Syrian tank. "It's over, it's been bang, bang and death for almost two years."

Tripoli children, whose city 60 miles north of Beirut has been besieged by Christians since summer, clambered over the Syrian tanks and trucks in a carnival atmosphere. Thousands of rounds of ammunition popped into the air in a traditional Lebanese display.

President Elias Sarkis said later in a speech broadcast nationwide that Syria's "fraternal intervention" will end when "we have recovered our strength, ability, security and the will to live together as a nation and share the same destiny."

His remarks for today's 33rd anniversary of Lebanese independence from France held forth promise of political reforms, but without specific pledges, and pleaded for cooperations in rebuilding this shattered nation.

"I also look to the youth, especially the combatants, and tell them the homeland awaits them in other fields now," said Sarkis, a Christian.

More than 3,000 civilians also gathered to meet the Syrian occupation columns in Sidon, 25 miles south of Beirut. They greeted them with jubilation in the main Sidon square, where three Syrian tanks were destroyed in a bloody battle last June.

Palestinian guerrillas in both predominantly Moslem towns had retired to nearby refugee camps, clearing the way for Syrians moving in as the armed contingent of an Arab League peace force set up to end the 19-month Lebanese war.

The occupation of Tripoli and Sidon, Lebanon's second and third largest cities respectively, leaves the more than 30,000 Syrian troops here in control of all Lebanon save a narrow strip along the border with Israel.

They took over Beirut with similar ease Nov. 15, ending nightly battles and savage shelling of residential quarters. Col. Ahmed el-Haj, the peace force's titular Lebanese commander, issued orders for the first time Saturday night barring arms from Beirut streets.

Yesterday's occupation, which included the central Chouf Mountains, also gave Syrians control of Lebanon's two oil refineries, one just north of Tripoli and the other just south of Sidon.

The Syrian takeover in the Chouf paralyzed the military potential of Lebanon's top leftist leader, Kamal Jumblatt. The Jumblatt family fief, which he rules from an ancestral palace, lies in the middle of craggy slopes populated by tough Druze Moslems.

Only the border area remains an active war zone in Lebanon, with sporadic shelling between Israeli-aided Christian forces and Palestinian guerrillas returning from the northern battlefields.

Officer kills rape suspect

HILLSBORO, Me. [UPI] — A Jefferson County sheriff's officer early yesterday shot and killed a suspected rapist as he held a woman to the ground with a gun pointed at her head.

Police said two women said the man, identified as Andrew Howard, age about 27, had raped them earlier.

A 23-year-old West Memphis, Ark., woman said Howard abducted her at gunpoint late Saturday in her hometown. The woman said the man, who told her he had recently escaped from prison, forced her to drive her boyfriend's car north toward Missouri.

She said when they reached New Madrid, Mo., Howard ordered her to pull off the road and then raped her.

The woman told authorities Howard stopped to pick up two teen-aged girls hitchhiking near Perryville, Mo. The girls, aged 17, and 18, were from Cleo, Mich., and apparently were enroute to Columbia, Mo.

The Arkansas woman said Howard let her out of the car shortly after they passed Perryville and she walked several miles to a service station where she called authorities.

Carter attends church with black reverend

PLAINS, Ga. [AP] — President-elect Jimmy Carter and the Rev. Clennon King attended services yesterday at the Plains Baptist Church one week after the congregation voted to allow blacks to worship and seek membership there.

The Rev. Mr. King, the black nondenominational minister whose attempts to integrate the church led to the church's racial policies being brought into the open, said quietly, "Praise the Lord" as he entered the church, and took a seat in a front pew.

After the services, Carter approached King and the minister from Albany, Ga., 50 miles away, bowed to the president-elect. Two witnesses and the Rev. Mr. King said he kissed Carter's hand.

Carter was to leave Plains last night for Washington, where he was to meet today and tomorrow with President Ford, the secretaries of defense, treasury, and health, education and welfare, and with congressional leaders of both Democratic and Republican parties.

Carter was briefed on foreign affairs Saturday by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger in Plains.

Throughout yesterday morning in the white clapboard church there were brief references to the racial controversy prompted by King's attempts to attend services there three weeks ago.

Carter led the Sunday School class in the opening prayer. The basement classroom was filled, but only about half of the 50 to 60 persons there were Plains residents.

During the section of the service when new members are invited to join the congregation, the pastor, the Rev. Bruce Edwards, said that the Rev. Mr. King had applied for membership and that his application was being referred to a "watch care" committee.

When the congregation met a week ago and voted to allow blacks to worship and join the church, it set up a committee to review membership applications. The church members must vote by next Sunday for the members of the committee and Edwards said later that it would be several weeks until King is notified of any action on his application.

In addition to King and the black Secret Service agent who accompanies Carter, a black cab driver from nearby Americus, Ga., Linda Simmons, attended the services.

Hookers complaining about police harassment

BOSTON [UPI] — The Prostitutes Union of Massachusetts says "honest, hardworking" streetwalkers are being harassed by police in Boston's "Combat Zone" because of recent violence in the sleazy downtown area of strip joints, bars and x-rated movie houses.

Two women, who identified themselves as "Babe" and "Virginia," held an impromptu news conference on the Boston Common near the downtown adult entertainment district Saturday to protest the arrests of at least 16 hookers in the past week. Both women wore T-shirts bearing the union's name.

"Honest, hardworking prostitutes are being forced into the subculture as criminals. We are not criminals," said Virginia.

"Robbery, assault and killing are crimes. Providing pleasure at reasonable cost shouldn't be. The market is there. It wants us," she said.

'Bikey' gangs clash; three hospitalized

VOLUNTOWN, Conn. [AP] — An attack by one motorcycle gang on another left eight people injured Saturday night, three of them hospitalized, state police said yesterday.

The incident occurred at the Village Inn when members of the "Huns" allegedly attacked members of the "Vigilantes", according to state police.

Two Massachusetts men, Richard Gibney, 26 of Oxford and Stanley Brown, 27, of Spencer, were shot and were reported in serious condition at Backus Hospital in Norwich. A third victim, Gary Dorsett, 26, of Voluntown, was reported in satisfactory condition at the hospital with head injuries. The other five victims all suffered cuts and bruises and were treated and released.

State police said no arrests had been made as of yesterday afternoon, but the investigation was continuing.

Runaway youth killed by police

CROSSVILLEE, Tenn. [AP] — A 15-year-old youth runaway from Pelham, N.H., has been killed in a gunfire exchange with police that paralyzed one policeman from the waist down and wounded another.

Police said James Allen, son of Mrs. John Batchelder of Pelham, N.H., ran away from home Monday and was killed Friday while being transported to Pikeville on a car theft charge.

Allen was shot once in the chest by Patrolman Raymond Gist, police said, after the youth grabbed Gist's revolver and began shooting from the back of the patrol car.

Gist managed to fire a single shot from his partner's revolver after he was shot in the spine by the youth, authorities said.

His partner, Ricky Tinch, 23, was shot in the pelvis by one of four bullets fired by Allen, police said.

Both patrolmen were hospitalized.

Union of Utopia

"What time has been wasted during man's destiny in the struggle to decide what man's next world will be like! The keener the effort to find out, the less he knows about the present one he lived in. The one lovely world he knew, lived in, that gave him all he had, was, according to preacher and prelate, the one to be least in his thoughts. He was recommended, ordered, from the day of his birth to bid goodbye to it. Oh, we have had enough of the abuse of this fair earth! It is no sad truth that this should be our home. Were it but to give us simple shelter, simple clothing, simple food, adding the lily and the rose, the apple and the pear, it would be a fit home for mortal or immortal man."

Sean O'Casey,
Sunset and Evening Star

A lot of men have tried to build utopias, a lot of men from the beginning of time. Ideals are set and tried to be put into motion. There are ideals which sometimes can and sometimes cannot be a reality. But still, someone is there — trying — dreaming.

Utopias can be set anywhere — a town, a city, a nation — a college campus.

About three years ago, the Undergraduate Student Senate set up its own dreams — the union dream — the dream that real power could answer all of their problems and more — the world's. And to meet this union dream, the Senate began the Student Organizing Project feeding approximately $50,000 a year to it from then on.

First housed in Southwest, the Project then moved to the Student Union Building, its "heavies" hovering over that balcony mixing with the Senate "heavies" and infering opinion at the Senate meetings. The heat was on. They were in the dorms organizing. They were something you read about — almost daily in the Collegian. But where are they now? Is SOP dead, alive ... or just sleeping?

I remember reading about it in Time Magazine the summer before I came here as a freshperson. "Union fever" and a moratorium ... echoes (almost) from the sixties, I thought.

December 3, 1975 and 200 students on the eleventh floor Campus Center beating against the doors to a Trustees meeting singing "the Union will make us strong." It was bizarre. The Trustees voted to up tuition anyways, despite the 200, despite whatever Ellen Gavin had to say. It was a media fanfare.

Then April, this time 800 out around the library in a circle: "the Union will make us strong." And 100 on the 25th floor. The elevator door opened, Trustee Chairperson Healey frightened as students tried the hurl themselves onto the elevator car. But the guards fought them off. Nobody was invited into the meeting and instead, angry, frightened terms were used to describe the students.

I went up, to the SOP office, last night — no one. Wouldn't have been that way last semester.

And I miss all those old faces, particularly Henry and Ellen, Peter Knowlton, Angela Guidice. And where have they gone?

"It hasn't died," said one SOP spokesperson. "It's just asleep."

And Knowlton said he's picking apples in Hadley.

"Had to clear your head?"

"Yes."

I didn't press.

"Why aren't you still involved with SOP? I asked another former counsel organizer.

"The work. I'm a student, too — and — well, I wondered if'a — if the whole thing would ever come off."

Union of utopia ... all of us dreaming ... that's what it means. At the Chicago "Hard Times" Conference, UMass was declared the clearing house for student unionization. What would they say now?

'When all other friends desert, he remains'

By TONY GRANITE

If only the author of "Stamp Out Pets" (MDC, Nov. 6, 1976) had asked his best friends, they would have saved him a lot of grief.

For some of us older heads in the newspaper game (and politicos, too) have learned long since that, like it or not, there are four taboos that are guaranteed to arouse the Tru-blue American to action.

Never disparage God, motherhood, country or dogs.

Bill Sundstrom (hereinafter referred to as B.S.) may have been only funning when he wrote that the way to punish inconsiderate owners (of pets) would be to take the pets away permanently. "And he may have had his long tongue in his cheek when he referred to "American pet-owners as a rather unbalanced lot."

But he went too far when he urged "decisive action to annihilate these unnecessary burdens (dogs) to society."

B.S. may not be old enough to remember that a dog was the only thing that saved Richard Milhaus Nixon's ass, when there were charges, back in 1958, that he had had his sticky fingers in the till holding campaign funds. For it was his dog, Chequers, who appeared with him on national television when he pleaded tearfully that he had done nothing wrong. His mentor, then President Dwight D. Eisenhower, forgave him, and the incident has long since been known as the "Chequers speech."

And the B.S. memory may not be long enough, either, to recall what a flap the late and unlamented Lyndon Bird Johnson caused when he picked up his hunting dog by the ears on the White House lawn. He did it before national television and newspaper camerapersons. Dog lovers protested who had never before written a letter to the editor. And, undoubtedly, their reaction was a major consideration when LBJ decided not to make the run for the rosy oval office, despite his explanation that hunting dogs expect to be picked up by their ears.

A more localized bit of evidence that may have helped B.S. as a commentator for MDC is that a dog named Michael once garnered seven per cent of the votes cast in a Sunderland town election. A disenchanted resident, apparently unhappy with the lone candidate for the town's top office of Moderator, dispensed write-in stickers for the eight-year-old tri-color Collie-plus who had been put up facetiously by its owner as a candidate against Richard Nixon in 1972.

Other evidence abounds that should have guided the B.S. article. Which proves that the newspaperperson who fails to research his material adequately and who neglects the reader he is writing to is on the path certain to oblivion.

If B.S. had consulted any one of the dog nuts who abound on the campus, he would have been offered proof of the sanctity of the dog as evidenced by the fact that "dog" spells "god" backwards.

And the high status of the canine need be examined no further than that the Queen of England rarely makes an appearance without her favorite pair of Corgies in tow. He should be informed, too, that there has never been a formal portrait taken of the Dalai Lama of Tibet without a pair of his favorite dogs, the Lhasa Apso, bred as sentinels for the royal palace.

But a simple telephone call to the neighborhood vet would have brought B.S. the ringing words of Sen. George Vest of Kentucky who, in 1870, offered a stirring defense of dogs in a court case in which his client was attempting to exact damages from a neighbor who had shot his dog on the claim that he had been killing the neighbor's sheep. Senator Vest won a unanimous verdict and his tribute to man's best friend has been treasured by dog-lovers, the world-over, ever since.

"The one absolutely unselfish friend that man can have in this selfish world," he told the packed courtroom, "the one that never deserts him, the one that never proves ungrateful or treacherous, is his dog.

"A man's dog stands by him in prosperity and in poverty, in health and in sickness. He will sleep on the cold ground, where the wintry winds blow and the snow drives fiercely, if only he may be by his master's side.

"He will kiss the hand that has no food to offer; he will lick the wounds and sores that come in encounter with the roughness of the world. He guards the sleep of his pauper master as if he were a prince. When all other friends desert, he remains.

"When riches take wings and reputation falls to pieces, he is as constant in his love as the sun in its journey through the heavens.

"If fortune drives the master forth an outcast in the world, friendless and homeless, the faithful dog asks no higher privilege than that of accompanying him, to guard him against danger, to fight against his enemies.

Dealing with racism in education

To the Editor:

Are you a potential teacher? Have you been accepted into a teacher preparation program? Does your program encompass courses or workshops on racism? Have you planned to off-set your teacher preparation courses with courses or workshops dealing with racism?

If you have answered NO to the last two questions, it is time to re-examine the very merit of your required educational requirements? Unless we as potential teachers make our needs of exploring our potentials as racist individuals known, all the literature on Piaget and the evils of teacher expectations will by-pass us as we fall back on our past teachers' methods of dealing with classroom inter-racial dynamics. And, we all know that past teachers and too many present teachers have failed to face the reality that we teachers have a problem in regarding race.

We must work on decreasing our racist potentials before we will be able to foster racial awareness in our potential students. Thus, the time is now to act and to demand educational change from our very own teacher-preparation programs by attending the all cluster faculty and student meetings on December 2 and December 16. Remember, needs that are not voiced will continue to be neglected!

Getting rid of the losers

I'm sure it's a common experience for all of us at the university — the dull, uninspiring, incompetent and possibly counter-productive instructor. UMass, and undoubtedly numerous other colleges, suffers from an over-abundance of dead wood faculty. The university often seems a refuge for "scholars", both young and old, whose teaching methods are uninteresting and obsolete, or who are simply incapable of getting their point across in any coherent fashion.

Why, when the market is glutted with bright young PhD's in almost every field, must we settle for inferior teachers? Why, when each year we and the state's taxpayers shell out massive quantities of bucks for "higher education", must we tolerate inept classroom bunglers? The answer, of course, is tenure.

After a faculty member has been at the university for several years, she or he appears before a departmental tenure board, which determines whether the candidate is worthy of receiving nearly unconditional job security. Once a person is granted tenure, she or he must exhibit an incredible inaptitude before job action (i.e., firing) is considered.

Generally what this means is that a professor who consistently lulls students to sleep and teaches them little or nothing is quite secure, as long as she or he makes no waves. Such faculty are a waste of our money, our time, and the resources of the university.

As it is students who must deal with instructors as instructors on a daily basis, it is students who are in the best position to judge the teaching competence of them. That, one would assume, is the purpose of teacher-course evaluations. But seldom if ever does one hear of a tenured professor being fired for perenially low student ratings. And after last week's administration decision to withhold the information derived from evaluations, we will have no way of knowing that our opinions have any effect whatsoever.

That move was a giant leap in the wrong direction. What is needed is a uniform system of evaluation applied to every instructor, such that repeatedly low performances would result in loss of employment. Professors who maintained a good record could be accorded the normal tenure privileges. The losers, however, should be gotten rid of.

The typical response to this sort of argument is that students are not capable of evaluating their instructors objectively and would end up seeking revenge on those teachers who gave them bad grades. This might be the case in a minority of instances, but for the most part students do know a good professor from a poor one and would evaluate as such, regardless of the grade received in the course.

And if the students aren't the ones to do the judging, who is? Other faculty members may well know their colleagues' abilities in research or writing, but they do not attend the classes. Only students in learning situations can determine if learning is taking place, and that is the criterion upon which instructors should be evaluated.

One might argue that at an institution such as this one faculty serve a role in research as well as in teaching, and thus should not be judged solely on the basis of student evaluations. Accommodations for this fact can and should be made, but would not detract from the importance of student involvement.

As students we have the right to expect the best possible education for our money and effort. We also have the responsibility to provide input in the decision-making process. Presently our power to do that is being denied, and we consequently obtain an inferior education. So follow the Student Senate's recommendation and boycott teacher evaluations in those departments that refuse to release the results. Perhaps you will make the administration stop and think a little about just what the goals of this univeristy are.

Perusing the Globe

By KEVIN KNOBLOCH

Good afternoon! Ahhh... time for relaxation after completing a long day of academia and yawns, time to settle back with my favorite local daily, The Boston Globe, sink my head into the pillow, munch out on Ritz and Stop and Shop brand peanut butter, and enjoy.

Scanning the front page, lazily picking out headlines with the most head (as they say in the industry), I discover FORD OK'S PRODUCTION OF 60 ADDITIONAL LONG RANGE MISSILES "to show our resolve" in the face of continued Soviet missile deployment.

I shudder.

RISK FOUND IN BIRTH CONTROL DEVICE leaps from the page informing me that women using IUDs are in much more danger than previously known.

I feel squeamish, and a little flush under the collar.

Further down the page the Spotlight team is exposing the loopholes in the state bankruptcy laws, a series that showed how several whoop-de-doo business men declared bankruptcy and still retained million dollar businesses.

My hands begin to tremble, shaking the thin newspaper pages in such a fashion that the skinny girl passing by my door happily waves at me. Retreat! Escape! Into the inner realms and pages. Swiftly yet awkwardly I flip to pages two and three.

CONDEMNED CONVICT GARY GILMORE DEMANDS HIS EXECUTION, ATTEMPTS SUICIDE UPON REFUSAL stares me right in the brown bombers, and below that EGYPT'S SADAT ASKS US FOR MORE NUCLEAR ARMS. I immediately feel my glands... yes... they are swollen and a habitual check of my forehead reveals a fever!

But nay, I shall not be defeated. My eyes force me on to the next page only to see SPRINGFIELD WOMAN, 21, SLAIN IN BOSTON and TWO HARVARD FOOTBALL PLAYERS KNIFED IN COMBAT ZONE, BOTH CRITICAL. Ye God, deliver me from all this! Ritz crumbs now decorate my bed as sweat forms streams down my temples. Onward, onward, no going back now, onward to pages far within! Surely the Living Section must offer temporary refuge from my torment, but upon opening to that section I realize, it is not to be so. Ann Landers gives advice to a child thrice beaten by a lone parent, a juvenile with VD, and an impotent adult. Erma Bombeck earnestly tries to make me laugh at the ills of child rearing, only in the end admitting total and complete failure. How miserable I am!

Sports! Aha! At last my vision is improving. So obvious, I ridicule myself for not thinking of this before. What can be so bad about a win here and a loss there? Oh, but Lordy, Lordy, say it ain't so, give me redemption from thy tortures! RED SOX TICKETS RISE FIFTY CENTS. Enough... enough... take leave of me Boston Globe, leave me to my misery.

But wait. If I had my druthers, what would I druther do? I druther turn to the comics! Surely a moment's enjoyment awaits in the comics. Wiping a tear from my swollen eyes I frantically turn to the final page, where opposite the TV listings that reveal the time slots of Serpico and Columbo the comics lie spread out anticipating my arrival.

What utopia, my nirvana, my heaven! I settle back and chuckle at Andy Capp, that lovable negligent husband, and Francis, the lazy, dependent, but cute son in Momma. The smile on my face grows wider at Motley's Crew, that comic strip making humor at unemployment and life during the recession. Further entertainment flows from Rex Morgan, M.D., as Doctor Brice Adams jealously breaks up a friend's happy marriage and prepares to commit adultery.

Relaxed and refreshed, I am now calm. My, what a pleasant life it is, what a fine society in which we exist!

I just don't know...

By JIM PAULIN

I just don't know.

Million dollar socialists and ten cent capitalists.

I just don't know.

But this I do know ... but this I do know. I love playing pinball and I love eating cheesecake and watermelon and vanilla ice cream. I don't know much, but this I do know ... that I love eating cheesecake and watermelon and vanilla ice cream and I love playing pinball. I know I'm better at eating cheesecake and watermelon and vanilla ice cream than playing pinball, but I still love playing pinball, but I just don't know.

I know that a lot of things are ridiculous, and I know that I listen to politics, left right, left right, until it sounds like a marching cadence, left right, left right, and I still don't know, and I'll probably never know, but I just don't know.

But I think I'll take a quarter out of my health, education and welfare budget, transfer it to my defense budget, play some electronic games on the campus center midway, torpedo some ships and if I hit enough of them I'll win extra time, but I just don't know.

I know I think I know a little about Jimmy Carter, and I know that everybody thinks they know a little about Jimmy Carter but they're still not sure and I just don't know if Jimmy's going to get us in a war or if Jimmy's going to get us jobs and I just don't know. I read all the newspaper and magazine articles about him and I still don't know. And who does know? And I think of Jimmy and I hear promises, promises, promises, and I think of every other politician, and they're all promising, promising, promising, and they all have potential, and they're all promising, promising, promising promising, and we're all promising, promising, and everybody at the university and everybody every where is promising, promising, promising ... maybe ... and I just don't know.

And I know that all politicians are for the people, but who are the people, anyways? And I hear that the people united will never be defeated, but what's going to unite them? Love? The metric system? Promises, promises, promises. I just don't know.

I know that the referendum made me feel like a politician, and I know that walking into the polling place made me feel like I was walking into a classroom to take a test, and I know how I scored, where I passed and where I failed, but I just don't know.

I know that politicians talk a lot, and I know it's hard to tell what is and what isn't, but I just don't know.

And I know that Massachusetts has a belt that was tightened by a sunbelt, or was burned by a sunbelt, but I hear it's warm down there, and I just don't know.

And I know what everybody says about politicians, and I know that journalese (sic) ticly speaking, hypocrisy is rampant, on all sides and in the middle, and I just don't know.

And I just don't know.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

'Attica' shown at Southwest today

The film "Attica" will be shown free at Mackimmie House in Southwest twice today — at 4 and 10 p.m. The showing will be in the main lounge, and is open to the public.

TOPICS referendum WMUA debate topic

Immediately following tonight's 10:00 news, WMUA (UMass radio, 91.1 FM) will broadcast a debate on the "TOPICS" referendum which will be held in Northampton tomorrow.

Tonight's live, open forum is being presented as a special feature of "Focus," WMUA's weekly public affairs series produced and moderated by Kenneth Mosakowski.

The controversial traffic improvement and safety program, known as TOPICS, has generated widespread public debate in the city over the last few years.

Interested listeners are invited to call in questions during the live debate between proponents and opponents of the TOPICS program.

Christian morality Reverend's topic

"Christian Morality of Sexuality" will be the topic when Rev. John Johnson speaks tonight at 8:00 at the Newman Center at UMass.

Johnson has been director of the Marriage Counseling Office of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Springfield for 18 years.

He will speak about sex and sexuality in light of modern Christian personalism and of the philosophy of Theilhard de Chardin as it applies to problems of sex and sexuality. de Chardin, a Jesuit priest who died in 1955, was learned in such fields as paleontology, biology, theology, metaphysics, and philosophy.

The talk, which is sponsored by the Newman Center Academic Committee, will be followed by a question and answer session.

Johnson has a master's degree in sociology from Catholic University in Washington, D.C., and a doctorate in theology from Gregorian University in Rome.

Law school exam is workshop subject

The Pre-Law Advisor's Office, CASIAC, and the Communications Skills Center at UMass are presenting a six-session credit-free workshop for students who are planning to take the Law School Admission Test Dec. 4. The workshop sessions will be held today, tomorrow, Nov. 29, 30, and Dec. 1 and 2. All sessions will be held from 7 to 9 p.m.

In order to register for the workshop, students must sign up for Workshop No. E064 at the Continuing Education Records Office in Hills House lobby. There will be a $15 fee for registration and materials. Enrollment will be limited to the first 30 students who complete registration.

Sorority begins toy collection

The women of Gamma Sigma Sigma, a national service sorority with a chapter at UMass, have joined the Marines.

Spokesperson Eda diBiccari has announced that Gamma Sigma Sigma will collect new and used toys that don't need repair, beginning today for the Marine Corps Reserve's 1976 Toys for Tots program.

DiBiccari said, "Used toys in good condition are suggested for donation since the Marine Corps does not have the facilities to fix the broken ones."

The toys will be distributed by the Marine's Company C, to children at the Belchertown State School and to needy children in the area.

"Gamma Sigma Sigma will also collect money to buy a useful and more personal gift for all of the Belchertown children," diBiccari said.

The major problem regarding the drive, diBiccari said, "is the lack of funds to promote better campaign publicity and to obtain wrapping material for the presents."

Collection centers will be located in the Campus Center, Newman Center, Photo Center, and the Dining Commons on campus; Friendly's on Route 9, and in Northampton.

The Marine Corps Reserve Company C of Springfield has been collecting Christmas toys for needy children since 1947.

Besides toys donated to the Belchertown State School children, others are distributed throughout Western Massachusetts.

bluebird forecast

Take a deep breath of fresh air, it's the start of a new season. The Sun and several other planets have moved out of swampy Scorpio and into sagacious Sagittarius. While we experience this sign of The Archer, we'll enjoy shooting our arrows towards a distant target. If we remain open to suggestions for self-improvement today we'll find opportunity for structured growth. Love won't come easily tonight unless we commit ourselves to practical goals and the joy of struggle. Otherwise it's a nice day.

FAC hosts 'Nutcracker'

The Fine Arts Center of UMass will host the Boston Ballet with their presentation of the traditional Christmas favorite, "The Nutcracker Ballet."

The ballet, featuring a cast of 150 dancers, singers, and actors, will be performed twice at the Concert Hall of the Fine Arts Center. Maestro Michel Sasson of the Boston Ballet will conduct a full orchestra for this presentation of the Nutcracker.

This presentation of the Boston Ballet and the Nutcracker under the direction of E. Virginia William, artistic director, is part of Concert Series B of the Fine Arts Center.

During its 13-year history, the Boston Ballet has become the sixth largest dance company in the United States. The ballet has a busy schedule which includes a holiday tradition of the Nutcracker, a Choreographers' series and a national as well as a New England touring schedule program.

The cast of 150 with full orchestra will be performing at the Fine Arts Center before their traditional performances in Boston.

The Nutcracker will be presented twice at the Fine Arts Center. The first presentation, a matinee special, will be at 4 p.m. Sunday, Dec. 5. The matinee will feature discount ticket prices for school children 12 years old or younger at $4, 3, 2.

The second presentation of the Nutcracker is Monday, Dec. 6 at 8 p.m.

Tickets are now on sale for these performances at the Fine Arts Center box office and all Ticketron outlets. Ticket prices are: general public $6, 5, 4; UMass students $4, 3, 2; other students and senior citizens $5, 4, 3. For more information, call (413) 545-2511.

Theatre series presents 'Equus'

The Fine Arts Center of UMass will continue its' Broadway Theatre Series Thursday, Dec. 9, with the presentation of "Equus."

A stirring combination of psychological suspense and mythic thriller, "Equus" is British playwright Peter Shaffer at his best. One one level, the play unravels the story of a young stable boy who has committed a hideous crime of blinding six horses with a metal spike. But on other levels, through the intense probing of the boy's psychiatrist, as played by Broadway actor David Leary, both actor and audience alike explore the forces at work in all of us — sexuality, guilt, worship and power. Other Broadway talent appearing in "Equus" include Bill Barrett, Lacy J. Thomas, Stanja Lowe, John Carpenter and Ruth Klinger.

First performed in London's National Theatre in July, 1973, "Equus" opened on Broadway in October, 1974, and became the first play to win all major awards. Among them are the Tony Award, the New York Drama Critics Award, and the New York Outer Critics Award — all for Best Play of 1975. Its director, John Dexter, won the Tony Award and the Drama Desk Award for the Best Director of 1975.

John Dexter, who is now director of production for the Metropolitan Opera, and Associate Director Brent Peek, have recreated the same artistic, captivating experience originated in the London and Broadway production.

Major critics have called "Equus" "one of the most powerfull and provocative theatrical experiences of our time."

Upon a specific contract agreement with the cast, the rule prohibiting cameras and recording equipment in the concent hall will be strictly enforced during the performances of "Equus."

Tickets are now on sale for "Equus at the Fine Arts Center box office and all Ticketron outlets. Ticket prices are: general public, $7, 6, 5; UMass students $5, 4, 3, and other students and senior citizens $6, 5, 4. For more information, call (413) 545-2511.

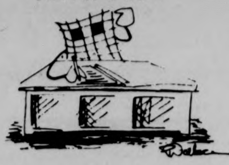
NETWORK



Network is a resource column for the UMass community. We will attempt to answer questions on general interest and sometimes try and cut through the red tape which one may encounter, whether it be in Whitmore, classes or the Bluewall. Network will appear in every Monday's Collegian.

We welcome questions and problems from members of the community. All queries should be addressed to Network Collegian office, 113 Campus Center, UMass. Please include your name and campus or off-campus address in the cases where such information is necessary for us to solve your problem for you. Only initials will be used in the column, however. Questions may also be dropped off in person at the office, but we request no phone calls, please.

Q. I have not yet received my OSCAR pre-registration, but a lot of my friends have. What's the story? — P.A., Brittany Manor.

A. — We checked at the Registrar's office in Whitmore, and they do not have your off-campus address, so your form was sent to your parents' home. Go to the Registrar's Office and show your ID and pick up a form. To insure the delivery of other materials to your current address, go to the Housing office in Whitmore and report it. Remember your pre-registration form is due Wednesday.

Q. It seems that the escalators going from the concourse to the lower level of the Campus Center are running only when there is a conference or convention of some kind being held downstairs. Are there actual operating hours? — T.J., Montague

A. — Your observations are correct. According to Dudley Bridges, manager of Building Operations, the escalators are operated only when there are activities such as conferences and conventions going on below the concourse in those meeting rooms. There is no definite scheduie, mainly to save energy. Th escalators used to operate 24 hours a day.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Monday, November 22 — Born today, you are extremely sensitive to other people's moods -- so much so that you are actually dependent upon the high spirits of others to achieve high spirits of your own and, conversely, are plummeted into depths of despair when faced with the depressions of your associates. And this is true whether those associates be as permanent as coworkers or as transient as strangers met at a party. You have an orderly mind, an open heart, and an overt manner -- but you would do well to learn to gain more control over all three so that you could be your own boss, your own "man," as it were.

You enjoy change, movement, travel from place to place --but your chief enjoyment is attained when all of these bring you ultimately back home again. Your attachment to home and hearth, to close friends and family members is such that neither time nor distance can dull your feeling for them or lessen your concern.

You believe wholeheartedly in allowing others the freedom to make their own choices as to abode and associates; for your own part, you commit yourself only once to a place or a person, for, once committted, you do not change your mind, though you may, of course, enlarge your horizons.

Gifted with artistic talent, you may spend a good part of your lesiure time pursuing education and training along artistic lines. You will probably not consider yourself gifted enough to give up an established and lucrative career in order to follow your artistic "first love," however, and in this you may well be wrong.

Tuesday, November 23

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Domestic affairs take up most of your time today. Take another's criticism to heart -- but make up your own mind about your own future.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — The humor inherent in the present situation on the home front takes much of the sting away from certain failure late in the day.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Plain, wholesome food, whether for the body or the mind, serve you best today. You will regret any complications added to life today.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Express your own opinions as clearly and as succinctly as possible. Don't depend upon another to ungarble the garbled.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Successful people may be able to influence fate in your favor. You must, however, first make an agreeable impression on your own.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — A talented professional grants you precisely the kind of interview you've been waiting for. Take advantage of a lapse of memory.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Sensitivity must link with sensibility if you are to be able to take advantage of either. Direct your energy outward -- all day.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Combine business with pleasure to the advancement of both. A member of the opposite sex creates quite a stir late in the day.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Make every effort to act according to another's image of you -- but avoid overstepping the bounds laid out by your own principles.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Educational pursuits may not come up to expectations just now. Make it a point to express your viewpoint to one in authority.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Avoid any activity that will take more energy than you feel you have to give at this time. Delegate a major portion of responsibility.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Perfect your ideas concerning co-workers and their efforts to upgrade a new phase of an old pursuit. Call a brain-storming session.

New York Jets' wide receiver Jerome Barkum glances over his shoulder and hauls in a touchdown pass from Joe Namath. (UPI)

McCray hijacks Jet aerials; Patriots near playoff scene

NEW YORK [AP] – Safety Prentice McCray returned interceptions of Joe Namath passes 63 and 55 yards for touchdowns and quarterback Steve Grogan threw three scoring tosses to give the New England Patriots a 38-24 National Football League victory over the New York Jets Sunday.

Grogan's touchdown passes of 15 yards to running back Andy Johnson and 17 to wide receiver Darryll Stingley came in a 61-second span late in the first period after a pair of New York fumbles and wiped out the Jets' 10-0 lead. He also threw a six-yard TD pass to tight end Pete Brock with 3:29 to play ing the game.

After Namath replaced rookie started Richard Todd with 2:12 to in the first period, New England's secondary went to work, picking off five of Namath's passes.

McCray's 63-yard scoring run came with 4:42 to go in the first half. And after Namath hit Jerome Barkum with an 11-yard scoring strike late in the second period, McCray did it again, this time with his 55-yarder with 6:59 left in the third period.

The period thefts made McCray the 11th player in NFL history to return two interceptions for touchdowns in one game. Dick Anderson of Miami had done it most recently on Dec. 3, 1973 against Pittsburgh. With the victory, the Patriots raised their record to 8-3, one-half game back of first-place Baltimore in the american Conference East. The colts play in Miami Monday night. The Jets fell to 3-8.

New York scored 3:56 into the first period on Pat Leahy's 19-yard field goal seven plays after linebacker John Ebersole recovered running back Don Calhoun's fumble. Twenty seconds later the Jets made it 10-0 when defensive end Lawrence Pilleers stripped the ball from Johnson and linebacker Greg Buttle returned the fumble 23 yards for the touchdown.

Grogan's scoring pass to Johnson with 3:26 to go in the first period came seven plays after Jets' running back Clark Gaines fumbled. Then Louie Giammona fumbled the kickoff and two plays later, Grogan hit Stingley.

What happened in the NFL

That look of invincibility which the Dallas Cowboys fashioned through most of the early National Football League season has suddenly deserted them.

The Cowboys, 6-1 by midseason, seemed well on their way to a breeze first place finish in the NFL East and were being tabbed as likely Super Bowl repeaters. But then, inexplicably, in what should have been the "Cake" portion of their schedule, the Cowboys began to show some warts.

First there was the 9-3 "scare" from the New York Giants — a victory accomplished only by a last minute goal line fumble by the Giants. Then there was an equally narrow 17-10 win over lowly Buffalo last week.

Sunday, the Cowboys fell from the brink.

The 3-7 Atlanta Falcons, bottled up in their own backyard for three periods, erupted for all of their points in less than five minutes of the final period to upset Dallas 17-10. However, the Cowboys, now 9-2, maintained first place in the NFC East when St. Louis Cardinals was upset at home 16-10 by Washington.

An interception by Ray Brown at the Atlanta 45 started the Falcons on their way to their winning touchdown which came on a one-yard sneak by quarterback Scott Hunter with 6:53 left in the contest.

Rugged ruggers romp; ruffle Eagles plumage

By BRIAN KELLY
Collegian Staff

The UMass rugby club, periodically plagued by a perturbing paucit of point production, pounced upon the Boston College Eagles, routing the visitors 29-0 Saturday afternoon in its season's finale. The game was not as close as the score seemingly indicates; "It could have been in the fifties, our pack totally dominated", commented mentor Robert "Doc" Laurence. The B squad triumphed 15-0.

Graduating senior Terry Kinneen, in his final game for the Minutemen, played inspired ball as he scored two tries. "Kinneen was a man possessed — a wildman — he was not to be denied", enthused the revered leader. Hugh Chester Jones opened the scoring on a beautiful weakside break and later added a 20-yard penalty kick for a 7-0 halftime lead.

After intermission the UMass pack thrust its counterparts back across their own goal line where Kinneen stumbled upon the loose pigskin for the score. Resourceful veteran Jeff "Ginzo" Stefani, Brian Coolbaugh, Barry Stewart and Kinneen all scored in the ruggers awesome 22 point second stanza surge.

The loquacious Laurence cited the effort of his forward legions: Dan Georgiana, Dave Eckel, Mark McCabe, Tom Callaghan, Henry Brown, Chester Jones, Coolbaugh and Kinneen; "The pack showed continually improvement. In my opinion they were the best group of collegiate forwards in New England this fall." The backs on the other hand slacked off in their performance and were inconsistent, a disappointment.

The B team whitewashed a tough BC squad led by menacing Roger DaPrato 15-0. Jim Toohey sored the initial try on which Eddie Bender converted for a 6-0 lead. Bender booted a 25-yard penalty kick for a 9-0 halftime lead. Gary "Diz" Daviau capitalized on a play started by Paul Whitney to complete the scoring as Bender once again converted successfully. The play of fullback Doug Bayford, Daviau, Whitney and Toohey received rare reviews from the venerable chieftain.

The ruggers completed a highly successful 7-5-1 season with this conquest. Against college club teams they were virtually unbeatable compiling a 6-0-1 record and outscoring the opposition by a whopping 127-26 margin. This included the Yankee Conference Championship which the club won in convencing fashion. Only Harvard Business School which salvaged a 14-14 tie scored more than six points.

Final curtain has fallen for Luciani

Saturday's football game at Alumni Stadium with rival Boston College signified the last and final UMass performance of many of the football seniors.

But besides these players, UMass sadly bid an official adieu to one of the finest athletic units ever to step on Alumni Field.

World champion twirler Diane Luciani, along with fellow twirlers Anne Johnson and Diane Wiest performed their last halftime show before an estimated 14,000 spectators.

To this writer, the word athlete not only means football, soccer, basketball players or runners. Anyone who spends any period of time doing exercise and displaying discipline, diligence,and hard work, combined with a good mental attitude deserves to be recognized as an athlete.

Although this commentary espcially honors the twirlers, Luciani, Johnson, and Wiest, it does not mean that these performers are more important than any other band member.

It is true that those senior band members, whose names are too numerous to mention, who have spent four years out on the Intramural Fields at 6 p.m., either marching, twirling, or playing music in the rain, snow, or cold deserve special recognition.

The director of UMass bands, John Jenkins, said that Luciani, Johnson and Wiest are the finest twirler UMass ever had. The fact also remains that audiences as far north as Orono, Maine to Kingston, Rhode Island, have stood up and applauded the twirlers and the UMass band for not only their technique but showmanship.

The director of ABC football television said that Diane Luciani was the most outstanding twirler they have ever seen following the Harvard-UMass football game two months ago.

"There is not an ounce of prima donna attitude in these women," said Jenkins. I have never worked with such people who had a special talent but still were able to fit in with a large group."

Jenkins said that in a band stressing individual committment, it is easy to see why everyone in the band responded so favorable to them. "They made no demands but wanted to help the band in whatever way they could," Jenkins said.

"If we screw up on the field," said "Lucky Luciani", "we don't screw up for ourselves. It reflects on the band and likewise if the crowd cheers, it's not for us but the band."

Diane Luciani, probably the finest individual athletic performer UMass has ever had besides basketball's Julius Erving, is nationally known and recognized.

She could have easily gone to a big time school such as Texas, Alabama, USC, UCLA, etc., but the Revere, Mass. resident claimed it was UMass' academic quality and her wanting to be close to friends and family which prompted her decision to come here.

But what makes Luciani, Johnson, and Wiest, that much more the special kind of athlete is their willingness to help anyone in the band.

"I have seen some people who let their talent go to their head and think they are the best performers and everybody else is inferior to them. But this is certainly the case with these three," Jenkins said.

"These women have worked together as a unit, helping each other out. There is no jealousy, or no outdoing each other. They have worked together, been applauded together, and have had their ups and downs together as a group and not as individuals," he said.

Luciani, Johnson, and Wiest, were featured in Saturday's halftime show of George M. Cohan's "Yankee Doodle Dandy." According to Jenkins, the thunderous applause given by the 14,000 frost bitten fans, many of whom stayed through the UMass.-B.C. fiasco just to see the halftime show measured up to the standing ovation the band received during the Multibands concert in the Fine Arts Center a month ago.

"I hope the fans realize how much the band put into their halftime shows this semester," Luciani said.

"I also hope the fans realize how hard it is to have these kids day in and day out memorizing the continuity sheets and memorizing the shows is really a tremendous effort by the kids themselves. It's unreal how they can turn out a game in one week," she said.

The "no jealousy, I am better than anyone else's attitude" that these athletes do not display is a credit to organized athletics. It is a refreshing spirit that is on the decline today. And if more athletic units showed it in both college and professional sports, maybe sports wouldn't be the money hungry, greedy, "me and the no one else" disposition that is prevalent today.

Eagles cash in on 'gifts'

By RON ARENA
Collegian Staff

The one factor which gave UMass any hope prior to its tilt with Boston College was the inconsistency of the Eagles this year. Sure, this sometimes-powerful Boston College team had beaten Texas, a team rarely mentioned in the same breath with UMass football. Sure, this was a BC unit with an advantage in size, power, speed.... But this was the same Boston College team which flopped its way to three defeats with an error-prone offense.

But alas, it was UMass' own inconsistency and mistakes which did the Minutemen in and paved the way for three "gift" touchdowns for the Eagles to send the visitors away with a 35-0 victory before 13,300 chilly fans Saturday at Alumni Stadium.

The three most glaring errors for the Minutemen, an interception and two fumbles, upped a 7-0 Boston College lead to 28-0 in a span of three minutes midway through the first half to seal an early victory for the Eagles.

The loss was UMass' fourth in its last five games as the Minutemen, once 4-1, ended their season with a disappointing 5-5 record. The triumph for Boston College, now 7-3, kept the Eagles in contention for the Independence Bowl at Shreveport, La. Dec. 13.

Late in the first quarter with the Eagles up by a touchdown, UMass quarterback Brian McNally tried to hit John Cladchuk with a quick out. The ball landed in the arms of BC's Byron Hemmingway, and the surprised defensive end raced 27 yards unscathed for the score.

The ensuing kickoff proved to be equally disastrous for UMass as Dennis Dent found a quick hole close up even quicker than it opened and fumbled. The Eagles' Bob Thayer recovered on the UMass 25, and with four running plays, capped by a 17-yard sweep off an I-formation by Paul McCarty (brother of UMass' Peter), Boston College led 21-0 in the opening seconds of the second quarter.

Just to satisfy any doubts that UMass was not outclassed by the Eagles on this day, UMass faced a third and seven following the BC kickoff when McNally hit tight end Moses Williams for a gain of 11 only to have Williams cough up the ball after being hit.

The Eagles offense, probably tired of being on the field by now, (at this point they had run 27 plays to UMass' 10) wasted no time as Melchiorre raced 37 yards on the next play to give BC a 28-0 lead at 1:30 of the second period and leave UMass fans wondering if this just might be another one of those 70-8 jobs.

"We just can't play football like that," a dejected UMass coach Dick MacPherson said after the loss. "Our players came and were ready to play. They really wanted it," he added. "But we make those mistakes and we just really hurt ourselves."

It was the mistakes which brought the score to the lopsided margin it was, but it was total Boston College domination throughout which gave BC the win. In the decisive first half, the Eagles rushed for 178 yards to 24 for UMass and had 11 first downs to UMass' two. At one point late in the third quarter with the score 35-0, the futile Minuteman offense still had but two first downs, to BC's 17.

Final stats epitomized Boston College's dominance as it totaled 373 offensive yards to the Minutemen's 120. Bill Coleman led the UMass ground game with 35 yards, while the brutal BC land attack had five backs gain 35 or more, paced by Melchiorre's 79 yards. UMass never really came close to scoring, and never penetrated beyond the BC 34. Its longest offensive gain of the day was 22 yards on a pass interference call.

The other Eagle touchdowns were produced by sophomore McCarty (his first of two) and Capriola. McCarty capped a 19-play, 80-yard opening drive by BC with a 12-yard TD pass from quarterback Ken Smith. UMass had won the coin toss, but decided to take the wind rather than the ball. The wind didn't affect BC much as it kept the ball on the ground for 17 plays, with Melchiorre and Glen Capriola bulling their way for four and five yards at a clip. The drive consumed 9:23 as Smith threw just twice, completing both.

"We gave BC the ball so we could have the wind and establish some offense when we got the ball," MacPherson said. "What you saw on that drive is what they (the Eagles) are. That's exactly their game," commented the coach on the BC running game.

The initial march was one of only two long drives in the game, the other coming after the second half kickoff when the Eagles drove 60 yards in 11 plays with Capriola scoring on a five yard run. But with safety Ron Harris (who set a New England career record for punt return yardage) and defensive end Dennis Fenton both coming up with some big plays in their final game, the UMass defense played much better than the score indicates. But it was a tough BC defense which kept UMass at bay.

"This BC team is the best defensive BC team we've faced. There have been better offensive teams by BC, but their defense is superb."

Quinn, McGrail in Nationals

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Sophomore Mike Quinn and senior John McGrail will seek "All-American" honors at the national cross country meet to be held today at North Texas State in Denton, Texas.

The first 25 Americans, in the field of 250 runners, to cross the finish line will be deemed All-American status by the NCAA.

If Quinn and McGrail achieve the honors of All-American, it will mark the second time in UMass cross country records that two UMass runners in the same year have achieved the title. If Quinn, becomes an All-American, it will be the first time any UMass runner achieved such a high honor in their sophomore year.

The last time two UMass runners achieved the honors was in 1974 where Randy Thomas and Bill Gillen became the first runners under the coaching of Ken O'Brien to win the title.

John McGrail became the third UMass runner, under O'Brien's tutelage, to achieve the position by placing 52nd but under the 25 American-born limit in 75's Nationals.

Quinn, by placing second in the New Englands and McGrail by taking 12th in the IC4A's last Monday, were invited.

Quinn, during the season, won 4 out of the 5 dual meets, finished 1st in the Yankee Conference championships, second in the New Englands, and is thought of by almost every coach in New England as the number two runner in New England behind Providence's John Treacy.

McGrail, winning the All-Americans last season finished this season 3rd in the Yankee Conference, 11th in the New Englands and 12th in the IC4A's.

"John has been improving in every race this season and last week ran his best race of the season. He is looking sharp and should even run better this week," said O'Brien.

Quinn has improved his health over the previous week.

Merwomen win third

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

Maybe nobody is going to accuse sophomore swimmer Alix Denhartog of being another Jimmy the Greek, but she did state (before the season started) that "we should do really well; our times are really strong for this early in the season."

Thus far she hasn't been wrong. UMass trounced the University of Vermont this past weekend to the tune of 99 to 32, and extend its winning streak to three (3-0) and dispel any doubts about a "shaky" season for the womem swimmers.

Poor Vermont. A total of fifteen events were scheduled, and UMass took first in 14 of them. Coach Eve Atkinson was very pleased with the overall performance which saw three swimmers (Mary Ellen Butler, Deb Schwartz and Mary Ann Totin) win all four of their individual events, which is called quad winning. Double winners were Theresa Totin and Lise Hembrough.

The meet was never close, as the final score indicates. Individually, many of the swimmers met or bettered their previous-best personal goals. Butler posted a 2:09.6 in the 200 yard freestyle, a 27.4 in the 50 yard freestyle, a 1:06.6 in the 100 yard freestyle, and she won the 200 yard freestyle-relay with a 1:50.9 time.

Not to be outdone, Schwartz posted a fine 1:07.9 in the 100 yard medley, a 30.0 in the 50 yard freestyle, a 5:44.7 in the exhausting 500 yard freestyle and a 1:50.9 in the 200 yard freestyle-relay.

Totin's totals read as follows: a 2:03.9 in the 200 yard medley relay, 34.9 in the 50 yard breast stroke, 1:07.9 in the 100 yard butterfly-freestyle and a 1:17.1 in the 100 yard breast stroke.

In the diving, Linda Schuld was a single event winner off the I meter board, and Karyn Mastrobattista won on the three meter diving board.

Other single event winners were Nancy Maffucci with a 2:03.9 time in the 200 yard medley-relay, and Roxanne Balducci, who registered a fine 1:50.9 time in the 200 yard free style relay event.

Skaters snap Lowell's hex

By SUSAN FAY
Collegian Staff

History did not repeat itself Saturday night when the UMass hockey team won its second game of the season, pulling out a tough, 3-2 victory over the University of Lowell in a game played at Tyngsboro, Mass. In the past two years the Chiefs have been the Minutemen's downfall, handing them second game losses each year. But this year the Minutemen took the lead and didn't give it up as they pushed their record to 2-0 following Wednesday's 9-3 trouncing of New England College.

It was a game that saw the Minutemen score three-unanswered goals before the Chiefs came back to score two and threaten to tie it on numerous occasions. The Minutemen were saved by the heroics of goalie Dana Redmond, (as well as the rest of the UMass defense), who made 31 saves and stood up under the pressure applied by the charging Chiefs in the third period.

The Minutemen skated off at the end of the first period with a 2-0 lead following John Peter's power play goal at 12:04 and Mike Merchant's deflection of a Chris Lamby slapshot. Despite several penalties and one fruitless UMass power play, the period belonged pretty much to the Minutemen, who outshot the Chiefs, 13-7.

What turned out to be the winning goal was scored at 6:10 of the second period when Carl Burns skated down the left side and put a shot behind Lowell goalie Mason Leggee. But, when Lamby went off at 12:45 for holding, the Chiefs took advantage of the situation, as Barry Yeadon scored from close in at 14:31 to make it 3-1. When the Chiefs' John Riley scored three minutes into the third period the already boisterous Lowell fans (known as the Wildmen), became even more so and the Chiefs began to play inspired hockey. The last four minutes of the game were hectic ones for the Minutemen.

Penalized at 16:09 for tripping, they faced the Lowell power play that was responsible for its first goal. But the Chiefs' late game surge was all to no avail, as Redmond made big saves on Yeadon, John Costello, and John Riley.

They withstood a final moment of jeopardy when Lamby exited with six seconds left for delay of game as he covered the puck with his hands after a particularly heated Lowell assault.

Lackluster the game wasn't, as each team had several chances to score on breakaways. Goalie Leggee made a fine save on UMass' Bob White's backhand attempt, and Redmond also turned away several Chief attempts. But what won the game was defense.

"The defense was the key to our win," stated head coach Jack Canniff. After the offense had produced the necessary goals, it was the defense that held on to the lead and helped to make Dana Redmond's job somewhat easier.

"The win was a team effort," commented coach Canniff, "and I don't like to single anyone out, but our '10th man' Kevin Sullivan has been doing a great job for us killing penalties and filling in. He always gives more than 100 per cent.

The Minutemen "will have their hands full" in the words of coach Caniff, when they travel to New Hampshire Tuesday to take on St. Anselm's. Last year St. Anselm's defeated UMass, 5-3 and they have the same type of team that Lowell has. "We're sky-high over this win," said Canniff. "We'd love to win this next game."

A Revolutionary Black Cultural Festival

Sonia Sanchez

Alive ... real ... dramatic, warm, sense creating, mind moving, all of these limited words I use daring to try and capture even a split of the magnetic atmosphere, which dwelled in the Lumumba Room of the New Africa House, Friday night.

The program opened at around 8:00, with Brother Chaka giving an overview of what was about to take place, to the already attentive audience.

Brother Akbar Muhammad linked the chain by delivering a very enlightening message to the audience, the them of which was, "How we got where we are. The last half of his message presented and seemed to invite the people to true culture.

Handing the stage over to Sister Sonia Sanchez, a physically small woman with the amazing and incredible ability of melting an audience into her own thoughts. The atmosphere in the Lumumba Room stood at attention, seeming to wait for command as Sister Sonia walked quietly onto the platform, wearing a consistent look of inner serenity across her face.

Sonia Sanchez, (Laila Mannan), the name given to her by the Chief Minister of the World Community of Islam in the West, is truly an amazing and obviously very talented poet.

A few of the beautiful poems she shared with her audience were entitled, "Homecoming," "Black Magic," "Summery," "Malcolm" and a poem from, "Love Poem." Sister Sonia once taught in the Black Studies Program at UMass, which assisted her in providing her with the advantage of being able to come back and relate to the present UMass students.

The Bill Saxton Quartet smoothed out the last of the program, adding to the sensitivity of the atmosphere.

A time for dwelling in one's own thoughts.

A time for moving from mind to mind

Oh ... what a night.

Black culture as an expression of revolutionary consciousness, was clearly demonstrated Friday and Saturday night at the "Revolutionary Black Cultural Festival" in the New Africa House and Malcolm X Center.

Presented through the collective efforts of the New World Center Afro Am Society and Third World Center, the festival presented a wide spectrum of poetry, music, theatre, martial arts and lectures, focusing on the role of Black culture as a revolutionary force and the responsibilities of the black artist to the community.

In this spirit Poet Sonia Sanchez articulated much of the reactionary strategies of the U.S. toward Black America and Africa, and chastised the Black Community at Amherst for failure to organize unified resistance to this oppression.

The Bill Saxton Quartet conveyed the median of black music as a form of consciousness raising, their sounds ranging from classical jazz Brazilian rhythms to their own innovations of Blackness.

The second part of this two day festival began with Saladin Muhammed's analysis of some of the weaknesses of the revolution of the sixties, pointing toward a more effective direction in the seventies. The African institute of Martial Arts physically demonstrated what Afro Americans must know in defense against racist assaults on members of its community.

Askia Muhammed Toure read poetry of political protest and praise of Anza niae's liberation front while the Guerilla Street Theatre performed two one-act plays by him. One of them depicted the destruction of the pusher, pimp, hustler in the Black community, while the other was about the white man losing his control over Black people.

The success of the messages in the Festival are apparent in its effect upon its viewers. Judging by the enthusiasm it evoked from its audience the "Revolutionary Black Cultural Festival" was a huge success. Let's help to have more festivals of this kind.

An Interview With Paul L. Puryear

Paul L. Puryear

By Nummo News Service

Mr. Puryear is the latest Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs and Provost. He is new this school year. He is from Florida State University. In 1970, he assumed the post of professor of government and director of the urban research center at Florida State University in Tallahassee, where he secured about $490,000 in research and training grants. In January, 1974 he was appointed provost of the division of social sciences and law at Florida State, a position he held until his appointment at UMass.

Mr. Puryears' personality was of concern for the Black community here at UMass, and this interview will reveal some of his feelings of his position as a UMass administrator, and a Black.

Q. How would you asses your position at UMass?

A. My job is essentially to coordinate all the academic programs on campus, and to maintain a special relationship with the deans and faculty in the maintenance and development of academic programs?

Q. Why did you come to UMass?

A. I was primarily interested in a wider scope of administrative responsibility and I liked the reputation of the University for academic innovation.

Q. Do you feel any different treatment here in the North than in the South?

A. The North-South differentials we are accustomed to historically have pretty much erroded over the last ten years...Attitudes towards race are pretty much the same everywhere in the country.

Q. What would you say would be the most common factor alienating Third World students from Academic values?

A. One obvious kind of problem many Third World students have on many campuses is that they operate in an environment that has only recently become pluralistic in nature...Its an environment that whites have tended to dominate...So that in some sense there is the feeling that the environment didn't fully anticipate their presence and hasn't made all the appropriate kinds of adjustments to make that presence meaningful...In comparison to other campuses I am knowledgeable about, the University of Massachusetts has made some long strides toward amelioration of the problems. One of the responsibilities I share with others is to see that we build effectively upon the initiatives already begun.

Q. I tend to feel that the uncomfortable feeling Third World students have coming into this environment tends to excite their minds, and it tends to alienate them from really thinking about their work in the right perspective, and I tend to feel that this has some bearing on their work?

A. I think to the extent that people feel less than comfortable, to that extent, it may have a negative effect on their academic performance. But it can also have an opposity effect. My own experience, educationally has been pretty much in a hostile environment. I grew up in the public schools of Newark, New Jersey. There were about three Blacks in the school and very little concern for the learning of Black kids. I fortunately had a good mother and father who motivated me to develop my mind despite the hostility of teachers and students.

Q. Do you feel some how detached from the problems of Black People?

A. I've never been detached and frankly it's probably impossible to be detached. I think my record speaks for itself. As a college professor and university administrator I've always been involved in the welfare of blacks and other minorities. I was also very active in the civil rights movement during the sixties.

Q. I feel there is a strong need for Third World unity if there is to be any kind of self satisfaction. What kinds of things to you suggest we do within the university?

A. Use the cultural and educational institutions that are available on campus for Third World students. There are a number of organizations and programs that are designed to help. The development of some kind of interest group focus is important for a lot of positive reasons...At the same time it can also work negatively if students use their racial or ethnic identy as a way of opting out of larger campus concerns. Ultimately, we must all learn to deal effectively with a society which is multicultural.

All in all Mr. Puryear expressed his awareness of the black problem and his new aquaintance in seeing that problem manifested here at UMass. He invites more interviews, or meeting in the future when he is able to more fully understand his relations and his proper with the Third World community here at UMass.

Black Women Struggles

By MARGARET JONES

Preface:

We are involved in a struggle for Black liberation: a liberation from the exploitative and dehumanizing system of racism, from the manipulative control of a corporate society; from the constrictive norms of "mainstream" culture, from the synthetic myths that encourages us to fashion ourselves rashly from without (reaction) rather than within (creation).1. Our protest and dialogue no longer springs from the impulse to entertain, or to indulge or enlighten the conscience of the enemy; white people, racism, sexism, or chauvinism: America or imperialism ... depending on your viewpoint and your terror. Our energies now should be to invest in a determination to define ourselves and our goals as Black women.

If we are to get basic, then surely the first job is to find out what emancipation for ourselves mean, what work it entails, what benefits it will yield. To do that, we might turn to various fields of studies to extract materials, data necessary to define terms in respect to ourselves. I note, however, all too quickly the lack of relevant materials.

Psychiatrists and the like, while compiling data on personality traits and behavioral patterns, tend to reinforce rather than challenge social expectations on the subject of women; they tell us in paper after paper that first and foremost the woman wishes to be attractive, cared for companion of man, that she desires above all nothing else but motherhood, at her sense of self is nourished by her ability to create a comfortable home. Hollywood and other dream factories delight in the notion and reinforce it, and it becomes the social expectation. The woman who would demand more is "immature," "anti-social," or "masculine."

And on the subject of her emancipation, when it is considered at all, the "experts" (white males) tells us that "ohh yes she must be free to enjoy orgasm."2. And that is that.

When experts (white and black males) turn their attention to the Black woman, the reports get confused for they usually clump together Black men and Black women and focus on what white people have done to the psyches of Black folks, that what Black people have done for themselves is entirely overlooked, and what distinguishes the men from the women forgotten.

I don't know that literature enlightens us too much. The "experts" are still men, Black or White. And the images of women are still derived from their needs, their fantasies, their second-hand knowledge, their agreement with other "experts." But of course there have been women who have been able to think better than they've been trained and have produced the literature fondly referred to as "feminist literature" Simone de Beauvoir, Doris Lessing, and Betty Friedan, etc. And the question arises for the Black woman: how relevant are the myths, the experiences, the findings of white women to Black women? Our priorities, concerns, and methods are not the same, or even similar, so we cannot afford to depend on the new field of "experts" (white females).

It is rather obvious that we do not and that we as Black women have to turn to each other.

Throughout the country in recent years, Black women have been forming work-study groups, discussion clubs, cooperative nurseries, consumer education groups, work shops etc. There has been correspondence with their sisters in Vietnam, Angola, Cuba, Mozambique, etc., concerning the Third World liberation struggle, and a Third World women's alliance has been formed.

For Black women have never been those "silly little Christmas tree ornaments fragile and false of the Western woman myth."3. Through all generations, Black women have given a priceless gift which is all too often unrecognized.

One of the most positive results of the civil, human, students, and women rights movement has been the increased awareness which has brought to the American public that many Americans are still being inaccurately and inadequately portrayed. The American Black woman, frequently discussed, but rarely treated objectively, constitutes one such group. The degree to which this misinformation and confusion surrounding her are intricately woven into the fabric of American society as seen in the following: called Matriarch, Emasculator, Hot Mama, Pretty Baby, Auntie, Girl, unwed mother, welfare recipient and inner-city consumer. The Black woman has had to admit that while nobody knew the troubles she saw, everybody, his brother and his dog felt qualified to explain her, even to herself.

Generally, the image projected of the Black woman has been a negative one.

The negative manner in which others see the Black woman parallels her real status in just about every phase of American life. For many reasons (genocide), Third World people are the first to be medically experimented on, and the Black woman's health for the most part is very poor. Where as the wage scale for the white male is $6,704; for the Black male it is $4,277; for the white female it is $3,991; yet for the Black female it is $2,861."4. Although she has been on the American scene since 1619, she is usually ignored or treated tagentially when the American and Black stories are told. Although she has always been in the labor and cultural forces, her contributions are seldom noted. As have other Americans, she too has been a writer, painter, sculptor, illustrator, and composer.

There are many other indications of the Black woman's status and the contradictions about who she is. Seldom is she seen in a positive light.

I am not saying we should shift our focus from the Black men to Black women; no to the contrary I am stating that all segments of the Black community should be examined, which is critical to our Black existence in our Liberation struggle.

SOWETO 1976 - The Struggle Against Apartheid

By JENNIFER DAVIS

On June 16 South African police fired into a peaceful demonstration by protesting students in Soweto — the totally segregated black area, 14 miles outside Johannesburg. During the following week violent confrontations shook many of the ghettoes in the Witwatersrand triangle, which encloses the largest single concentration of industries and coal and gold mining in South Africa. Violence flared also in distant country areas, involving students in at least three widely speareated Bantustans, as the reservations (reserves) assigned to Africans are called. The official death toll was 170, 2 white, 168 black. Africans on the scene reported 1,000 killed and many more wounded, beaten and arrested.

The immediate spark that fired the current explosions was black student opposition to the use of Afrikaans in the teaching of history and mathematics. Afrikaans, the language of the ruling white Nationalist Party, is identified as the language of the oppressor, and the Government has always had great difficulty in forcing Africans to accept it. But using it in the schools is only a symbol of the whole system of "Bantu education," which has been a focus of black resistance ever since its introduction in 1953.

The purpose of Bantu education, which essentially establishes a separate educational system for blacks, was described quite openly by Hendrik Verwoerd, the predecessor of current Prime Minister Johannes Vorster: " ... education should stand with both feet in the reserves and have its roots in the spirit and being of Bantu society .... There is no place for him (the African) in the European community above the level of certain forms of labor." The Africans fought its imposition bitterly, dubbing it "education for slavery." There were school boycotts and parent protests; hundreds of teachers were thrown out of joos for joining in the fight against it.

In turn Bantu education is only one element in the complex apartheid system that has been constructed to produce white privilege at the cost of black dispossession.

Press reports have consistently referred to the June events as riots led by "tsotsis" — young hooligans — with the implication that they are simply isolated eruptions of mindless, directionless violence. It would be more accurate to see them as part of a new phase in the African struggle for liberation, a period of increasing militancy and resistance after a long lull. There has been African resistance to white conquest and appropriation of wealth and power since the beginning of colonization 300 years ago. The brutal repression of the post-Sharpeville 1960's, the banning of black political organization, and the arrest and-or exile of black leaders slowed the process; now it is growing again and with rapidly increasing momentum.

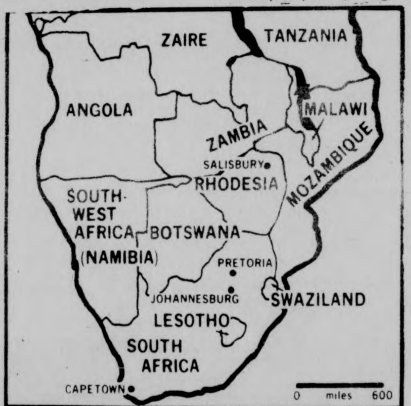
This thrust has been stimulated by a coalescence of forces, including the victory against colonialism of the people of Angola and Mozambique, the coming of age of a new generation able to pick up the political leadership inside South Africa, and the increasing tensions bred by the contradiction between simultaneous industrialization and economic growth and intensified "retribalization" and oppression.

There have been many signs of the new move towards active struggle — a dramatic wave of strikes among African workers, the formation of a black student organization (SASO) firmly dedicated to bringing about radical political change, and a growing number of political trials of so-called terrorists.

The mass uprisings of June belong in that context. The South African Government has blamed "outside agitators" and "Communists" for the violence. The press talks of "tsotsis" intimidating the general population into joining the crowds in the street. But the real causes of the confrontation lie elsewhere — in the intensifying oppression of the blacks by white South Africa and in the spreading militant mood of the black population.

Almost 1.5 million Africans live in Soweto (South Western Township), an area artificially created in the 1950's by the forcing of thousands of black families from their homes in segregated enclaves inside the "white" city to what was seen as a less threatening location 15 miles away. The ghetto was deliberately built to be easily isolated and controlled — placed in an open flat area (easily accessible to planes and helicopters), circled by a ring road, with few major exits.

As a place to live, Soweto is both a product and a victim of the apartheid system. It has an official population of 800,000 but an actual population of close to 1.5 million. The difference is accounted for by over half a million men, women and children who live, work and hide illegally in the area.



Life Under Apartheid

The political system that protects white privilege in South Africa has laid down that blacks have no permanent rights in the "white" urban areas. They are defined as temporary sojourners whose permanent home is a Bantustan — the particular Bantustan depending on the person's supposed ethnic origin. Thus, by definition, Africans are dispossessed of all political and economic rights in 87 per cent of South Africa, the "white" area, in return for the doubtful privilege of citizenship in a bit of the remaining 13 per cent, the total black area.

The aim of the whole system is to provide the white-owned economy with a constant flow of cheap black labor and, as far as possible, to prevent the development of a large settled urban black population, which has always been seen as a threat to white dominance. So blacks may work in towns, but they must never regard those towns as homes; they are merely migrants in a white society.

At least 400,000 Soweto residents have no proper houses. Eighty-six per cent of the houses that do exist have no electricity, and few have waterborne sewerage, proper bathrooms or even running water. There are two cinemas, six gas stations, one bank; no supermarket, no pharmacy, no bakery, no savings bank, no car dealer, no department store. Small black traders run general stores; since 1968 each trader has been allowed one trading license and has not been permitted to conduct business "for any purpose other than that of providing for the daily essential domestic requirements of the Bantu residents." No black may own land or a house in Soweto or in any other town or city. Nor are they allowed to develop any economic independence; they must simply serve the white economy.

Some argue that economic growth and industrialization will automatically bring in their wake an improved life for black people. This argument is popular with US investors, who now have a $1.5 billion stake in preserving stability in South Africa. In fact, time has exposed the fatuousness of this belief more clearly than any argument could. There is intense poverty in Soweto: Authorities estimate that the current minimum income necessary foR a family of six for bare survival is 119.69 rands ($135) a month. The average wage a Soweto worker takes home every month is 80 rands ($92). White workers' wages, in contrast, average at least six times more.

The gap is not closing, for as black wages climb so do white wages. An 18 per cent inflation rate eats up the value of the increases.

If economic growth has done little to improve the relative position of blacks in the pyramid of South African society, it has done nothing at all to eradicate their political powerlessness. In fact, the tensions created by changing economic needs (the necessity, for instance, to allow black workers to acquire some technical skills) has brought with it intensified controls on the black population and an escalating attempt to oppose their demands for equality by a process of "retribalization." Current government policy is depriving Africans of the last few rights they had in "white" society as it pushes for the adoption of the "independent Bantustan" concept.

White towns in South Africa have independent elected municipal authorities, rather like the US system. But Soweto and other urban ghettoes near Johannesburg are all controlled by the West Rand Bantu Administration Board, a policing agency of the Government's Bantu Administration Department. All blacks have to have permission to live in Soweto; a wife may not automatically join her husband, nor a child its mother. Loss of a job usually means loss of the "right" to stay in the area, as does anything that causes one to lose favor with the local authorities. People are continually "endorsed" out of the area, back to the Bantustans. Every black person in Soweto is constantly threatened by a network of apartheid-enforcing laws, and every year one in four adults is arrested for some contravention of the pass laws.

Terrible Realities

It was this whole system that thousands were rebelling against when they took to the streets in June. Immediate targets for their anger were the offices of the Bantu Administration Boards, many of which they burned, thereby destroying the records by which their lives are so mercilessly controlled. The liquor stores and bars, all owned by the board, were also attacked, as were other symbols of the white government. But it was the police, not the people, who unleashed uncontrolled brutal violence. Outside

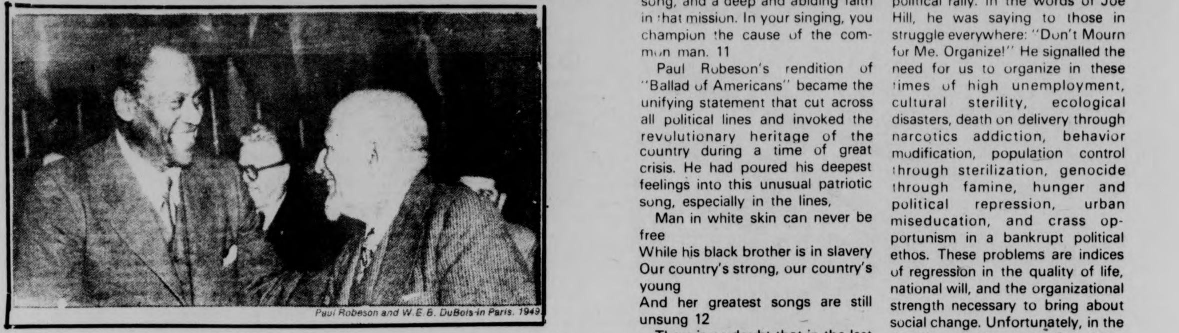
Paul Robeson: His Dreams Know No Frontiers.



Paul Robeson and W.E.B. DuBois in Paris. 1949

Today, as a result of the bitter and traumatic experiences of the sixties and seventies, we have come to realize the significance of Paul Robeson's "stand" and his clarity of thought on the dangers of contemporary American society. It is ironic, however, that when he spoke on behalf of the progressive developments in China and the Soviet Union, on behalf of the independence of Africa and Asia, and on behalf of world peace, he was so far ahead of his time that many Americans rejected his vision of the world. He was redbaited and labelled a "Communist," even though he testified under oath in 1946 before the Tenney Committee in California that he was not a member of the Communist Party. He once stated, and quite rightly so, "if they really thought I was a Communist, why didn't they try me for perjury, why didn't they put me in jail? Because they knew I was speaking the truth." 8

However, he always remained a life-long friend of the Soviet Union, China, and progressive people around the world, and an implacable enemy of fascism and racism. And yet, in the recent past, Richard Nixon has visited China in friendship, Henry Kissinger has toasted the historic significance of detente with the Soviet Union, and State Department officials have been busy scurrying around Africa counting votes on the Angolan question. All of this has taken place while Paul Robeson's prophetic statements have been shrouded with an iron curtain of academic and journalistic silence. Mr. Robeson's vision was based on truth, commitment and integrity in the same tradition as the slave songs and Negro spirituals, in the same tradition as the heroic people of Vietnam, in the same tradition as Joe Hill, in the same tradition as Amilcar Cabral and George Jackson. One is reminded of the beautiful poem of Otto Rene Castillo, the young Guatemalan patriot, entitled Before the Scales Tomorrow,

And when the enthusiastic story of our time is told, for those who are yet to be born but announced themselves with more generous face, we will come out ahead
    —those who have suffered most from it.
And that being ahead of your time
    means suffering much from it.
But it's beautiful to love the world with eyes that have not yet been born.
And splendid to know yourself victorious when all around you
  it's all still so cold,
    so dark.

This persecution has highlighted contradictions in the American political process, when on April 2, 1944, Paul Robeson, who had made impressive contributions to the war effort, was awarded a citation by the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties for "his outstanding contribution towards building international unity with our country and throughout the world." 9 On May 20, 1944, he was presented with the Diction Award by the American Academy of Arts and Letters. Since the Academy's creation of this prestigious award, only nine persons had received it between 1924 and 1944. He was warded the Spingarn Medal by the NAACP in October, 1944, for "his active concern for the rights of the common man of every race, color, religion and nationality. 10 Morehouse College conferred on him the honorary degree of Doctor of Humane Letters on June 1, 1943. Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, in reading the citation, stated:

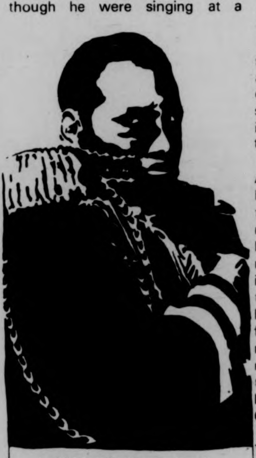
We are happy to be the first Negro college in the world to place its stamp of approval upon the leadership of a man who embodies all the hopes and aspirations of the Negro race and who despite crippling restrictions breathes the pure air of freedom . . . . We pay tribute to you for what you represent and for the contribution you are making to humanity. You have proved you have a mission in song, and a deep and abiding faith in that mission. In your singing, you champion the cause of the common man. 11

Paul Robeson's rendition of "Ballad of Americans" became the unifying statement that cut across all political lines and invoked the revolutionary heritage of the country during a time of great crisis. He had poured his deepest feelings into this unusual patriotic song, especially in the lines,

Man in white skin can never be free
While his black brother is in slavery
Our country's strong, our country's young
And her greatest songs are still unsung 12

There is no doubt that in the last lines of this song, Robeson envisioned new possibilities on the political horizon.

Paul Robeson has remained a living symbol of hope and freedom. He survived the fiercest repression and retired "undefeated and unrepented." 13 Ordinary people came to the funeral services at Mother A.M.E. Zion Church in Harlem, New York, to register that fact. He orchestrated the funeral services so well that it seemed as though he were singing at a political rally. In the words of Joe Hill, he was saying to those in struggle everywhere: "Don't Mourn for Me. Organize!" He signalled the need for us to organize in these times of high unemployment, cultural sterility, ecological disasters, death on delivery through narcotics addiction, behavior modification, population control through sterilization, genocide through famine, hunger and political repression, urban miseducation, and crass opportunism in a bankrupt political ethos. These problems are indices of regression in the quality of life, national will, and the organizational strength necessary to bring about social change. Unfortunately, in the decade of the seventies labor unions, national minorities, liberal and radical groups are still wedded to the status quo of high level consumption and the frightening possibility that the society is not producing creative leadership at all levels. Sterile mediocrity has become endemic in the body politic and the cultural apparatus. Consequently, the masses have been surrendering struggle for survival and freedom for non-involvement.



Robeson as the "Emperor Jones."

It is in this light, therefore, that the impact of Mr. Robeson's life and death must be understood. His legacy must be a source of inspiration to all progressive peoples and they must recognize that his dreams know no frontiers, for he served humanity well through the integrity with which he fought for the essential dignity of man.

Paul Robeson, as a proud son of Africa, spoke with eloquence of his love for his own people and the tremendous support which he received from them in his darkest hours. But, more importantly, he maintained with great pride in an interview in 1937, "Nobody can say that I betrayed the Negro. Everything I did, I did for the Negro, for the cause of his dignity and self-respect." 14 Thus, Paul Robeson remains for us, as African peoples, the epitomy of Sterling Brown's brilliant poem

One thing they cannot prohibit-
  The strong men...coming on
The strong men gettin' stronger
  Strong men...

the segregated morgue in Johannesburg, one week after the first shootings, John Burns of The New York Times talked with a Soweto undertaker, waiting with some families who had come to seek out their dead. He described three of the bodies he was preparing for burial as those of children aged 12, 13 and 16.

The bloody week has underscored many of the terrible realities confronting those who seek to bring about real change in South Africa.

First there is the intransigence of the Government, which even under pressure will not make serious concessions. Then there is the general white attitude: Very few whites protested, and most whites clearly will fight hard to preserve their privileged way of life and will in fact give the police uncontrolled license to kill, if that will help do the job. Then there is the brutality of the police. There has been not one allegation, by anybody, that the people were armed; no one fired at the police. The demonstration began peacefully, and even when the crowds were driven to attack they used only sticks and stones. Yet the police used their guns over and over again to terrorize the people back into subservience.

All these are serious problems for the people. But to these must be added another — the fact that immediately after these shootings Henry Kissinger saw fit to meet with Prime Minister Vorster in West Germany for what were termed friendly negotiations. Little has been revealed about the substance of the talks, but to those who have watched US policy in Africa consistently give support to the colonialists and the white supremacists in the name of "seeking to ensure peaceful change," the signs are ominous.

There can be no doubt that the struggle for freedom will be a long and harsh one. The blood spilled in Soweto will not be the last. The South African Government has armed itself physically with tremendous weaponry — guns, aircraft, etc. — and politically with a system of security laws that allows it to arrest and detain anyone, on any suspicion, for as long as it likes. It will use all these weapons in its attempt to crush the people as they seek the right to control their lives, the wealth they produce and the future of their country.

Those on the outside must do more than watch and wait; now is the time to ensure that the US does not once again embroil itself in giving increasing support to a government rooted in reaction. There is no way to improve apartheid; it must be abolished.

Speech Delivered by David Sibeko at the 31st General Assembly Session of the United Nations

South African economy was already in a bad state before the current national crisis. A leading American banker told the US Senate Sub-committee on African Affairs in September that problems for the South African economy were primarily caused by the boom which gave the country a huge balance of payments surplus in 1972. This was followed by an extremely high inflation rate, the money supply rose by more than 60 per cent in the only three years.

Intoxicated by the boom in 1972 the racist regime itself aggravated the economic situation by recklessly spending on para-statal projects like the development of harbours and the purchasing of war supplies; the military budget rose to $1.6 billion by 1975, twice what it was in 1973.

The slump in the price of gold on the international market from a high of $168 in July 1975 to around $112 at present dropped South African foreign exchange levels to the point where it was pointed out that the country had only three months of imports in hard currency by one of the opposition politicians last month.

This month it has been again confirmed that apartheid South Africa is having a difficult time trying to raise loans for imports. The giant American bank, CITIBANK, has been prominent amongst US banks lending South Africa over the past two years. But it is known that Citibank, like the Euromarkets from where South Africa has been struggling to raise a $500 million loan, is currently re-evaluating its loans to the apartheid regime in a downward trend. South Africa already owes Citibank $350 million.

Big business finds this situation intolerable and knows full well that in South Africa with more dramatic confrontations between militant Black demonstrators and the police coming up, and with the situation rapidly deteriorating into all out guerilla war, their businesses will be dealt fatal blows.

Which is why earlier this month the National Development and Management Foundation — representing top business and industry — called for an urgent scrapping of residential, business and job apartheid. Last week, a similar call was echoed at a conference of the Association of South African Chambers of Commerce. This was in defiance of a stern warning from Vorster that businessmen should keep their hands off politics, when he addressed them at the opening of the conference. These frantic calls by businessmen and moves by BOSS or the army are unrealistic and sadly out of touch with African aspirations. Neither a coalition supporting the calling of a national convention nor a coup replacing Vorster can meet the demand for African majority rule, the minimum objective of the Azanian national liberation movement in its entirety.

Like Namibia, like Zimbabwe and indeed like every country on African soil, Azania is an African country and nothing short of the African taking his rightful place at the helm of the country's political and economic affairs is enough to stop the national liberation struggle. The fighting is going to keep escalating until a full scale people's war covers all of Azania. And from there continue until the enemy is completely annihilated and a people's Azania is born.

The present national uprising is living proof that the Azanian people have the resolve and indomitable spirit needed to fight and win a war as great as that which has been fought and won by the Indo-Chinese people recently.

AFRICAN AND WORLD SUPPORT

At their last Summit Conference in Mauritius, the countries of the Organisation of African Unity openly stated that they recognise the fight of the Azanian people as a struggle for the seizure of political power. The mood of Africa at this time has been well articulated from this podium by speaker after speaker from Africa. Even those countries whose very independence is daily threatened by the South African racist regime, Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland, have boldy reaffirmed their committment to the national liberation struggle in Azania.

Perhaps the mood of African can best be judged by the declaration from the Commissioner of External Affairs of Nigeria, Brigadier Joseph Garba, which he made during this year's Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners, in the United Nations:

"Let us be resolute and determined, like those children, born in the wake of Sharpeville, now in the prime of youth, who are determined and prepared to shed their blood in Soweto, Langa and other South African townships in the hope of making tomorrow a brighter day for their generation and for those to come. Let us with unequivocal determination like theirs, muster all necessary support within our reach to their liberation and all the oppressed people of South Africa."

Once more the brotherly people of the Caribbean countries have also come forward and upheld Africa's just stand behind the Azanian people and their national liberation movement. And so have our traditional friends, the socialist countries, whose support dates from the time when there were very few African states who were members of the United Nations. Foreign Minister Chiao Kuan Hua of the People's Republic of China told this Assembly: "We firmly support the people of Zimbabwe, Namibia and Azania in their struggle against white racism and for national liberation... We warmly hail the powerful mass movements of the people of Azania." The enlightened policies of the Scandinavian countries towards our just struggle are once more in evidence during this session, we attach great importance to their support. The countries of Asia truly regard the struggle of the people of Azania as their own and the militant support pledged by speaker after speaker from the countries of this region augurs well for strengthening bonds of solidarity within the Non-Aligned movement and amongst Third World countries.

From South America, Guyana demonstrated in words and in deeds its unfledging support for the struggle of Azania, Namibia and Zimbabwe. After making two dynamic speeches here and in the Security Council, Foreign Minister Willis proceeded to present a handsome contribution of nearly $80,000 for the liberation movements of Southern Africa. We value the participation of Peru in the Special Committee against Apartheid and the solidarity demonstrated by other Latin American countries.

To be Young Black and Oppressed

It is the area of crime and violence that black youth are clearly implicated. The largest numbers of crimes against the person and acts of theft were committed by black males under the age of 24. A majority of all homicide victims in the United States last year were black and the perpetrator of the crime typically was a young black male between the ages of 20 and 24. Hence, it is of little surprise that the number one cause of death among black males aged 15-30 is homocide. In Detroit, the homocide rate among black males is so high that the average life expectancy rate among black males actually declined 2.6 years in the last decade.

Furthermore, there is little doubt that the black males committing these crimes are members of the underclass. In 1972 black inmates were 42 percent of the nation's jail population. Most of them were young, poorly educated, low-paid wage earners or unemployed prior to their arrest. About 59 percent of them reported an annual income of less than $3,000 a year. Some 51 percent were under the age of 24. Among those prisoners sentenced to death, 50 percent of them were black. Within that group of black death row prisoners, 35 percent of the blacks were under 24 years of age compared to only 9 percent of the whites. It is in these types of figures that we see the tragic result of America's exploitative economy and its effect on black youth.

While colonial America's chaotic and irresponsible economy is the primary reason for the consignment of Afro-American youth to the ranks of the underclass and the prisons, there are other subtle influences in American life which socialize black youth into violence. Among them is the media. The emphasis upon violence in the mass media is undoubtedly related to acts of violence among black youth. It is estimated that by age 12 the average child has witnessed 10,000 acts of violence on television alone. Since black children watch television more often then children from other groups, the impact of such violence is even greater. Although the number of blaxploitation movies has declined in recent years, they still feed black youth a steady diet of violence that far exceeds that in movies catering to white majority youth.

The black ghetto, moreover, is nothing more than a microcosm of colonial society. Violence is epidemic in the American social structure and America easily deserves its reputation as the most violent country in the world. Its homocide rate is twice as high as that of any other industrialized nation. While the victims of black violence are mostly other blacks, the white majority and its political leaders have set an example of violence for black youth by its historical acts of aggression against Third world peoples in the United States and throughout the world. As Fanon reminds us, it is the colonizer who introduces violence into the home and mind of the native. Colonialism is violence in its natural state.

High rates of crime and violence among black youth are also a function of their colonized status. Law enforcement patterns are partially responsible for racial differentials in juvenile delinquency rates. Many white policemen treat black youth differently because they dislike their belligerent behavior toward them. Lower class black youth living in high delinquency areas have a much higher risk of being discovered and adjudicated as delinquents. The police officer who observes a middle class white youth committing an illegal act will send him home while the Afro-American youth is more often detained for the same crime. In one study it was reported that only 33.6 percent of the offenses committed by white juveniles were referred to the court while 64.8 percent of the black arrests were disposed of by court referral.

Ghetto youth have some justification in their behavior toward policemen. Harassing black youth in white neighborhoods, breaking up groups of youth congregated on corners or in cars without provocation, the wanton shooting of young black males for petty crimes and arbitrarily searching them for weapons are acts calculated to produce negative attitudes. Young blacks learn early that the law symbolizes systematic and unpunished police brutality, judicial bias, governmental indifference and racial hypocrisy. The police represent the store and pawnshop owners, the landlords and other vested interests that live outside their community. At a very young age black youth develop cynical attitudes toward politics and the legitimacy of the system as it relates to them. The police are the most visible symbol of an illegal order.

DEATH AT AN EARLY AGE

Throughout colonial America Afro-American youth must struggle merely to survive. Their forms of coping with internal colonial rule are often nothing more than a slow death for them. One of these coping mechanisms is simply to become so narcotized that their subjugation under colonial rule is tolerable. The use of heroin, for instance, is estimated to be as high as 36 percent among black males between the ages of 20-24 in some areas of the internal colony. In New York City narcotic addiction is the greatest single cause of death of black youth, exceeding deaths from any other single cause. While hard drugs consumption has become pervasive throughout the United States, the addicts still come from the least educated and poorest segment of the black community. Heroin use is pure and simple a way of coping with a society in which young blacks see themselves as powerless and without any kind of future.

The ramifications of drug addiction are quite serious for the black community. In order to purchase drugs of the hard variety, black youth have to drop out of school to spend full time supporting their habit. Most will have to engage in illegal activity to buy the drugs. A majority of the crimes committed in black communities are drug related. And, it is often the most abusive of crimes due to the addicts desperate need for money to support his habit. They steal from their parents, the sick and elderly, young children and whatever other source that is accessible and vulnerable. One should not lose sight of the fact that drugs and narcotics are marketed for profit in this country and those who profit most from it live outside the black community.

Most of the victims of drug abuse will be young black men because they feel most keenly the despair and frustration of their lives under domestic colonialism. The problems faced by young black females will be somewhat different. The latest assault on their physical integrity is sterilization without their consent or knowledge. This practice was quite common in the South. One lawyer noted that these cases of sterilization were reminiscent of Nazi Germany where "mentally retarded" women were sterilized as part of the governments attempt to make pure the white race. The sterilizations appear to be part of a national policy aimed at young black females. In Alabama almost half the people sterilized in 1972 were black. And, most of them were members of the underclass.

Even without drug addiction, death comes to blacks at an early age. Between the ages 15-24, black males had a death rate of 3.1 to 1.7 for white males in the year 1970. But, even more important, is the fact that the biggest causes of deaths among white youth are accidents and cardiovascular diseases while it is homicides, suicides, drug abuse and accidents among black youths. These racial differences in causes of death only reflect the unequal life chances of black and white youth. They are a most poignant reminder of the tragic situation for black youth in this country. Since the youth are the future of a group, it is also an example of how internal colonialism is trying to break the back of the black liberation struggle.

The suicide rate and its characteristics reflect the subjective reality of many black youth. Among blacks in general their suicide rate is and has been lower than that of whites. For black youth, however, their suicide rate has long been higher than their white counterparts in certain cities such as New York and Washington, D.C. Death records nationally show that since 1960, blacks aged 15-20 kill themselves at a rate higher than that of the total population of all ages. In the age range 15-24 it is the third leading cause of death after homicides and accidents. It ranks number six among black females in the same age group. Overall, the black suicide rate is lower but the age differences in suicides reflect the variations in life chances by race. Whites kill themselves in the middle or later years after they have tried and failed to achieve their life goals. Blacks commit suicide at a very young age because they believe there is no use in trying to achieve anything in a racist society, that life will never be satisfying for them.

In recent years the suicide rate of black youth has increased dramatically. Among young black women, for example, it has risen more than eighty percent in the last twenty years. In California the 1970 suicide rate of black women between 20-24 years of age (30.2 per 100,000) far exceeds that of their white female counterpart (13.6 per 100,000) in the same age range. Many of these young black women were heads of households and hence had to carry out both domestic and economic roles in the family. Being placed in a double stress situation, i.e. being the sole breadwinner and parent, being young, black, female and oppressed, these are sufficient factors in their quest for resolution of their plight, the result being suicide.

Young black males may be spared these family responsibilities but life is no easier for them. A number of them take their own life because they see themselves as locked in a life and death struggle with a massive and basically oppressive system of laws, customs, procedures, and enforcers. In particular, many had encountered difficulties with the police or law courts. The police and courts were seen as the operant enforcer and as the symbol of white authority over black life. Just as many of them should be reaching the flower of their manhood, they find themselves in a society which has written them off and a future with nothing but roadblocks ahead. As Baldwin has written, "to be a black in this country and to be relatively conscious is to be in a rage almost all the time." One might add that to be black and young is a double jeopardy that only the strong survive.

THE FUTURE OF BLACK YOUTH

With the decline of America as a foreign power and its escalating domestic problems, a natural solution is to have peoples of color bear the brunt of the fallout from what are problems resulting from the internal contradictions of monopoly capitalism. Confinding problems of unemployment, poverty, and military conscription to that segment of the populace which is black and brown and powerless appeases the white majority proletariat. When issues such as school busing, crime in the streets, and welfare are interpreted as matters of race, the races become polarized and less likely to unite on the basis of their mutual class interests. One might take note of the fact that the recent immigrants to America have come from the Third World. And immigrants are traditionally given the lowest-paying and hardest jobs. All these factors illustrate the role of color in maintaining the state of class consciousness at a low level in this country.

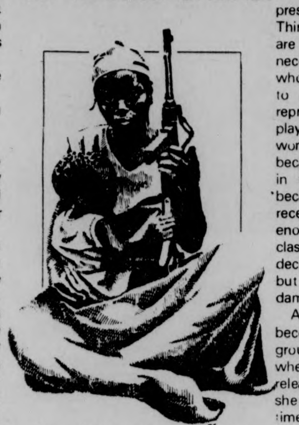
Within this political and economic context, black youth are destined to get the worst of both worlds. As the most dispensable members of the working class, their needs and problems will be given low priority by the colonial elite. At the same time the existence of a youth culture gives rise to the theories of a generation gap. The rebellious, anti-authority behavior of youth is attributed to permissive child rearing practices. Yet, it was this same rebellious behavior, when organized into a coherent social movement, helped impede the imperialist war in IndoChina, and fundamentally changed the character of the nation's colleges.

The two sided dimension of youth ehavior exist simultaneously. Their challenge to traditional authority and practices is often very revolutionary in character. But, much of it is misdirected and apolitical in form. There is no inherent virture in youth per se. Many black youth have become enmeshed in a web of machismo, narcotized and infantile behavior patterns which can isolate them from the adult black community. Yet, they contain the potential for revolution in their anti-tradition stance and with the current attack on their very existence by the forces of internal colonialism, they have nothing to lose.

AN INTERVIEW WITH ASSATA SHAKUR

Interview with Assata Shakur [slave name: Joanne Chesimard], Riker's Island, New York City [Women's House of Detention]

free assata shakur



WAP: How are you feeling about your recent acquittal in Brooklyn Supreme Court now that the trial is over?

Assata: Tired and mad that we were there to begin with.

WAP: How much longer do you expect to be in jail?

Assata: I don't know.

WAP: A lot of the women who came to your trial were deeply impressed by your strength, and wondered what gives you your revolutionary faith.

Assata: Strength outside of prison walls is different from strength inside prison. Many strong people enter prisons, initially strong, initially convinced that nothing could ever erode or contaminate their strength, but who eventually weaken and die. The prison system provides few choices for the inmate: You either live — physically, intellectually, emotionally, psychologically — or die. There are more demands on your strength when you are "in" than when you are "out." Prison is a pillar for creating a kind of strength. You don't have a choice. You either are strong or become an institutionalized robot. I don't intend for that to happen to me.

I am sad when I see what happens to women who lose their strength. They see themselves as bad children who expect to be punished because they have not, in some way, conformed to the conduct required of "good children" in the opinion of prison guards. Therefore, when they are "punished" they feel absolution has been dealt, and they are again in the "good graces" of the guards. Approval has been given by the enemy, but the enemy is no longer recognized as an enemy. The enemy becomes the maternal figure patterning their lives. It's like a plantation in prison. You can see the need for a revolution. Clearly.

WAP: But there are many women who see the need for a revolution but are afraid to fight back. It's not just women, whole populations are paralyzed by fear of the authorities. Yet you're not. And that's what makes women respect you. Do you know how to tell women how to lose their fear of fighting back?

Assata: I started out with a naive outlook on the world and everything. Once I realized my own stupidity, it became very important for me as a human being to look into things, examine them carefully, and always try to grow. The more you understand what you're dealing with, the stronger you get. People see fear as a bad thing. Fear is healthy when you're dealing with Amerika. But when fear controls you, when you're afraid to struggle — fear is a bad thing. I'm more afraid of what will happen if I don't struggle than what will happen if I do.

WAP: What do you think the role of women is in the struggle for Black Liberation?

Assata: Women are capable of doing anything men are capable of doing. I don't see women in a confined, narrow role. The special role we have is to destroy the definition of male-female aggressive-submissive patterns and to create an equal kind of relationship between men and women; and to destroy a lot of myths that men have about women in relation to those societal-oriented patterns.

WAP: How do you feel about the Women's Liberation Movement?

Assata: I think a lot of positive things are the result of the Women's Liberation Movement. I think, however, that the W.L.M. has not expanded to include working-class women and Third World women. We must understand, however, that this is because of many reasons; some of which include lack of understanding, communication and awareness of each other on both sides, that more effort on both sides might accomplish the togetherness needed. We must understand, however, that women cannot be liberated without liberation of the entire society.

WAP: There's been a lot of articles recently in the media blaming the Women's Movement for what they call "the increasing violence of women." To illustrate their point, they use you, the women of the S.L.A., the women who attempted to assassinate Ford, etc. What do you think of that?

Assata: First, I think that the contradictions in this society are more blatant than ever. And I think women have responded to that in many ways. But in terms of women being more violent, I think that's deceptive. It's a screen to avert us from seeing the violence of society as a whole. Women have been raped throughout history, and now when we fight back, now that we have the consciousness to fight back — they call us violent. To blame the Women's Movement for creating a violent monster is insane. The violent monster is the American government.

WAP: What do you think it will take before black women can trust white women?

Assata: Practice. So much that has happened to black people in this country has happened because of white racism. White women have been, historically, part of that oppressive necessity. How can black women not condemn white women for failure to exercise their own responsibility in eliminating racism?

It would be insane for black people not to have distrust of white people. The only way that mistrust can be replaced by trust is when we see white people struggling against the same enemy. If we all can say "I prefer death to controlled liberty" — then we can be one. Babies are not born racist, they're made to be racist. When the values of society are changed and capitalists can no longer profit by promoting racism, then forcing divisions between human beings will not be a necessity. But as it stands now, the rulers of this country can only continue to exist by fostering racism. The more racism there is, the more secure their empire is.

WAP: Do you think blacks in socialist countries are "freer" than in capitalist countries?

Assata: Yes. Definitely.

WAP: Do you think the road to black liberation is the road to socialism?

Assata: Socialism is the cure for a lot that ails us, but it's only a start. I think that the reversal of the capitalist economic structure is only one aspect of the revolution that we need.

WAP: What can women on the outside do to concretely help women in prison?

Assata: The first thing women on the outside can do to help women in prison is to organize other women, and to educate women not only in terms of the oppression of women, but in terms of the oppression of poor people, black and Third World people whether they are in prison or outside. It is necessary to educate women about who controls this country, and also to educate women about the repressive role this government plays in human lives. Most of the women in prison are not in prison because of some "criminal streak" in their personalities, but rather because of the oppression that they received in the streets. It's hard enough for a well-educated middle-class white woman to obtain a decent pay and a meaningful job, but for a poor black woman, it's damned near impossible.

Another way to help is to become active in women's prison groups and to form halfway houses where a woman can come after release from prison. Somewhere she can get her head together, have time to find something to support her, maybe get some skills. Because, as it is now, women leave prison with a few dollars and almost a guarantee of coming back.

WAP: The guards are coming. Is there anything else you'd like to say?

Assata: Yes. I want to thank the people who have supported me, and the people who have come to court for me. My message to them is: Keep on struggling. There are a lot of political prisoners who need support besides me. We all need you.

An Open Letter and Invitation to Black and Third World Students

Although I am not new to the University, graduate of the class of 1972 and currently a doctoral student, I am new to the Dean of Students Office. In September I became Assistant to the Dean of Students. In this position I see a great many students who are having general academic and personal problems, who are thinking of withdrawing from school, who are wondering where to turn for help, who have questions about University operations, who need a liaison between themselves and specific faculty or staff in order to resolve issues, or who simply need a neutral ear to hear out a concern.

As a black woman who has been through this institution and who has watched the University for some eight years one thing seems to remain constant, a kind of aloneness experienced especially by black and Third World students. My message in this letter then is really a simple one. There are faculty, staff, and support personnel here that can help you over the hurdles and who want your individual and collective experiences at the University to be highly beneficial. We are located in various parts of the campus. I am located in room 227 Whitmore. If you think I can help you please call on me.

Sincerely,
Janis Wertz

Voices of New Africa House Workshop to Commemorate Fifth Anniversary

With Appearances in Two Concerts

The Voices of New Africa House Workshop Choir, a unique vocal ensemble of over fifty voices from the University of Massachusetts and Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges, will appear in concert on Monday, November 29 and on Wednesday, December 1, 1976. On Monday, the annual Fall Concert will feature a performance of a group of songs composed especially for the Voices by local Black composers Dr. Frederick Tillis of the UMass Music Department, Dr. Floyd Williams of the UMass Mathematics Department, Mr. William Dargan, Music Director at Deerfield Academy, and Semenya McCord, whose songs have also been performed by Reconstruction and recorded by Archie Shepp. This concert will also include two groups of contemporary gospel songs and a group of popular soul songs.

Sulaiman Hakim

On Wednesday, the choir will perform with the University of Massachusetts Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Ronald Steele. The work will be Gospel Fuse, a cantata for gospel singers and orchestra composed by Mr. Carman Moore, a young Black composer from New York City. This work was commissioned by Seiji Ozawa, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and received its premiere in 1975 with the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra under Mr. Ozawa's direction.

William Dargan

Artists assisting the choir and orchestra will be soprano Cissie Houston, who sang at the premiere, soprano saxophonist Suliaman Hakim, organist David Jackson, pianist Dr. Horace C. Boyer, and a vocal trio. Both concerts will be at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall, University of Massachusetts, a 8:00 p.m. Both concerts are free of charge and open to the public.

The Voices of New Africa House Choir was organized in 1972 by the famous percussionist Max Roach, a professor at the University as a performance course in the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies. Accompanied by an instrumental quintet of piano, organ, drums, bass and lead guitar, the vocal ensemble performs in a wide variety of styles, including in their repertoire selections of gospel songs, blues, spirituals, jazz, soul, and slave songs such as cries, field hollers and shouts.

Since the choir's organization in 1972, they have not only appeared in solo concerts, but with such well-known artists as Max Roach, Ossie Davis, Reggie Workman, Archie Shepp, Paul Carter Harrison, Dorothy Love Coates, Dee Dee Bridgewater, the Famous Boyer Brothers and the Collective Black Artists Ensemble. One of the highlights of the career of the choir was a successful tour of several colleges throughout the United States. Among these were Lincoln University in Pennsylvanis, Virginia Union at Richmond, and Bennett College in Greensboro, North Carolina.

David Jackson

The choir is under the direction of Dr. Horace Clarence Boyer, Assistant Professor of Music at the University. Boyer, a professional gospel singer in his own right, teaches Music Theory and Afro-American Music at the University. Having researched and published several articles on the Afro-American Vocal Tradition, particularly gospel music, Boyer brings a unique and authentic touch to the performance of this tradition of vocal music, both from an academic and professional dimension.

Carman Moore has written compositions for symphony orchestra, ballet, modern dance, mixed media, theater, and film. Among the organizations he has been commissioned to write for are the New York City Ballet, the Anna Sokolow Dance Company, and the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, which permiered his composition Wildfires and Field Songs in January of 1975 under the direction of Pierre Boulez. Mr. Moore has also composed Drum Major (in memory of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.), for Brass Quartet, Percussion, and Tape; Africa Tears to dramatic poem by Kofi Awoonor for Instrumental Ensemble, 3 actors, dancer, and chorus; and musical score for the play JoAnne! by Ed Bullins. Mr. Moore is also a music critic and has written for The New York Times, The Village Voice, Africa Report, the Saturday Review, and other publications. He has in addition authored a book, Somebody's Angel Child: The Story of Bessie Smith. A founding member of the Society of Black Composers, he has received grants and awards from The Julliard School of Music, Creative Artists Program Service, New York State Council on the Arts, and the American Music Center. An educator as well as a creative artist, Mr. Moore has taught at the Yale University Graduate School of Music, New York University, Brooklyn College, and several other institutions.

Dear Brothers and Sisters,

I am writing these few lines in appreciation of your attendance of the first brother-sisterhood meeting. Some of you may think that nine brothers and sisters out of a population with you. It was a beginning, a strong beginning where the concept of brotherhood did flourish and grow. The Importance of brotherhood can never be estimated, but without it there is the absence of Unity and the loss of our collective power.

I am looking forward to having us meet again sometime in the near future. So until then, tell your friends about your concept of brotherhood, so that at the next meeting, they may have a desire to come and join with the other brothers and sisters. As of yet, the time and place of our next meeting has not been determined, but you will be notified well in advance. I've taken the liberty of including the addresses and telephone numbers of the brothers and sisters in attendance at the last meeting.

So until we meet again, I wish to thank you in behalf of you my brothers and sisters.

Thanks Again,

African Rhythms at Hampshire College

Randy Weston, Vishnu Wood and Azzidin Weston.

Thursday, November 18th — Africa rythyms was the title and theme of the concert which featured Randy Weston, Vishu Wood and Azzidin Weston.

The most distinctive feature or African music and indeed Africa itself — is rhythym. Rhythym is central to the lives and spirit of all Africa — from Morrocco to the Cape. In a colloquim that took place before the concert, Weston spoke of his experiences on the continent. He has played with many African musicians and learned from centain spiritual musical experiences. We spoke of the importance of Africa as a home base for Black artistic talent throughout the diaspora. African music is now International.

The concert that followed must have rivalled. The mystical and spiritual experiences that Weston had in Africa; Randy played a sensitive rhythymic, dynamic piano. Vishnu was most powerful and surprising with his creative rendering the bass. Assidin Weston released interesting African rythyms on his congos. His playing was unique because it was unlike the more familiar Afro-Cuban rythyms. Azzidin has studied with African master drummers.

This concert was inspirational and fulfilling.

A Mystical Merging of Sound

Chris Johnson, Luis Robledo and Sister Annie

"A Mystical Merging of Sound" was one of the many praises used to describe Sister Annie Carpenter and brothers Chris Johnson and Ruben Luis Robledo and their artistic presentation Thursday night at Van Meter Dorm.

Combining Annie's voice with flute and percussion they produced a smash ending to the Fine Arts Council of Central and Orchard Hills evening with four poets. The musicians produced a atmoshere of light and love through which Annie led the audience on a journey of her truths within her illusions. Wisdon took form and beauty had sound as the audience sat silent numbed by the power.

I will keep coming back to you
Even though your eyes drip

I will keep reaching out to

Even though you turn away
I will keep loving you

When I walk away
This time
I am gone to stay
But, if we should meet

Thanksgiving for Black Folks

We will gather together in one house or apartment dressed from casual attire to over dressed. Smelling natural or reaked with colognes, perfumes and after shaves.

The old people will reminisce of times twenty years gone by. Laughing and arguing about times gone by. They will drink and laugh loud and niggerish.

The children will play themselves silly as they show off knowing moms and dad won't smack them with relatives around. They will jump around grandma and grandpa for their apple pie or butter cookies.

The young people will gather in the basement or some back room with loud music or jazz intermingling with the old people's blues and they will smoke for their own particular reason, maybe to deal with aunt religious or brainwashed relatives.

The hawk will encourage everyone to stay indoors and party together young as well as old because

Regardless of our personal views we are all family.

From The Black Book

SHE CHOPPED THIS MAN TO A BLOODY DEATH

One day when an old woman was plowing in the field, an overseer came by and reprimanded her for being so slow – she gave him some back talk, he took out a long closely woven whip and lashed her severely. The woman became sore and took her hoe and chopped him right across his head, and, child, you should have seen how she chopped this man to a bloody death.

Too poor in his youth to own slaves, Stonewall Jackson made bargains with the slaves that belonged to his uncle. The servant was to furnish him with pine knots by the light of which he could prepare his lessons for the entrance examination to the military school he had selected. In return he agreed to teach the slave how to read and write. As soon as the black man was confident of his skill to compose, he wrote his own name to a pass and slipped off to the Underground Railroad.

Destabilization '76

(For Loida Figueroa)

It seems to be dark, all the time, now, at home, my love. Here, I've read where they're prising loose the quarry stones, which haven't had time to sink and meet,
so far, my love. Here, today, I was told they're pointing straight at your heart, which hasn't even settled the question,
yet, my love. Tomorrow, they hope to laugh.

It seems to be dark, all the time, now,
at home, my love. They laughed in Chile,
all day, yesterday, and all day, today,
after they'd put right the rearrangement,
there, my love. Tonight, they're planting shadows in the streets, taller than ghosts, a hemisphere of cobwebs covering your face,
soon, my love. in the morning, you're cold.

It seems to be dark, all the time, now,
at home, my love. The colder the threat the more your caring eye must try to find the light concealed at the back of your mind, quickly, my love. Go back out to the land;
listen to the sea; release the energies
shunted into sleep centuries of nights, ago, my love. Reconnect, and cut the claim!

A special meeting of the Distinguished Visitors' Program (DVP) was held last night in the Campus Cinema to reconsider the proposals not passed at their meeting last Wednesday to include more women and Third World speakers in its program.

In a press conference last Thursday, the DVP was charged by a goup of women with discrimination against women in its process of choosing speakers for its program. The press conference was held to protest the refusal to bring four women speakers to the campus by the DVP.

The speakers reconsidered by DVP last night were Yvonne Wanroe, a Native American convicted of murdering the man who raped the daughter of her babysitter, molested her son, and attempted to rape her; Martha Pitts, a member of the defense committee for Assata Shakur, a black woman in a New Jersey all male prison; Charlotte Bunch, a feminist leader; and Joy Marcus, a radical psychiatrist. Juan Mari Bras, who ran for Secretary-General of Puerto Rico, and T.H. Mashanini of the South African Student Organization were also under reconsideration.

In response to a presentation of Yvonne Wanroe and Martha Pitts, one woman said that what they have been through "is exemplary of the racism and sexism going on in this country.... There is a great deal of sympathy on this campus for a Native American speaker."

Ellyn Faber, chairperson of the DVP said, "This action has been brought by the womens' organizations on campus. There has been a lot of pressure from these organizations on women and the DVP in general to bring more women speakers to campus." She also added that the DVP committee is made up of individual members, each with their own views.

Of the proposals reconsidered, only one was passed. However, none of the proposals were defeated, due to a number of abstentions. The proposal passed was for Joy Marcus who will be coming to speak during the end of February.

Scheduled for Dec. 6 is Mashanini and for Dec. 7 is Peter Arnot, head of the Theater Department at Tufts University.

According to Faber, approximately $7000 is in the DVP budget. "This is an important factor in determining the future of the program," she said.

"The matter is not closed as far as the womens' groups are concerned. Some felt that it was not equitable the way X amount of money was spent on men and the way X amount was spent on women."

Faber went on to say that $5000 has been alloted for International Womens' Weeks in March and another $5000 has been alloted for Martin Luther King Week. "We have never allocated money for this purpose before," she said.

Faber said there will probably be an informal meeting tomorrow with the womens' groups. "They are angry. The committee is aware of the situation. The decision to choose speakers for the program is based on merit and the appeal of the speakers."

Chandler pushes educational change

By JANICE LEARY
Collegian Staff

Paul Chandler, a guest speaker in the Mao Tse-tung Memorial Lecture Series sponsored by the Center for Racial Understanding, said last night that education for change must be seen "first in the context of how best to serve the people."

Chandler, 30, a professor of Afro-American studies at Brooklyn College, New York, spoke before a group of twenty in the Moore House faculty apartment. "Change Structures Within Superstructures: A Challenge to Educators" was the topic of this third lecture in the series.

Chandler called Mao Tse-tung "One of the world's greatest leaders," and discussed education in terms of Mao's political philosophies.

In China, the educational system is totally different from the educational system in the United States. The purpose of education in that country is to serve the people, the "mass base", said Chandler.

According to Chandler, the educational system in the U.S. reflects the political views of the country. "We receive a capitalistic and decadent education because we live in that kind of society," he said.

"In reality," said Chandler, "Our educational system benefits the superstructure," or the ruling class. Values taught by the capitalistic superstructure include individualism, competition, the value of property over people, and education to make standards, to get a better job, he added.

"We live in a state of unconsciousness because it is uncomfortable to be conscious in this society, Chandler said. In contrast, he added, education in China brings about consciousness through revolutionary struggle.

According to Chandler, education does not take a neutral stand. "Everything is a struggle, so we cannot be neutral," adding, "You cannot be in a revolution unless you change."

He stressed the importance of studying and learning from revolutionary movements, not solely from books. He cited the "liberation struggles" of the Vietnamese, the Palestinians, and Native Americans as examples of these movements.

Chandler read from a book of poems by Mao Tse-tung and explained its relevance to the current struggles of oppressed people. "I see this poem as an inspiration, as a message to oppressed people, he said in reference to a poem written by Mao in 1963.

"There was great disorder in this country in 1963 — in Watts, Harlem things were falling down for the Imperialists," Chandler said.

People must learn to deal with education within the superstructure, and question its goals, according to Chandler. "We must cast away the illusions that a degree will transform things," and develop skills and creative thought,he added.

Chandler is a 1974 graduate of the UMass School of Education and is a former assistant director of the Center for Racial Understanding, according to Ken Hale, director of the Center. In addition, he was instrumental in the founding of the Che-Lumumba School, an alternative primary school for Third World children located in the New Africa House, Hale said.

Chandler also works with the New York State Department of Youth Services as an assistant director of a Halfway House for delinquent youth, according to Hale.

Health plan aids state workers

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

Two people walk into the infirmary. One has a cold, the other has fallen down a stairwell and twisted an ankle. According to Barry W. Averill, director of the University Health Services (UHS), the two people should receive care as soon as they would have last year in spite of the additional 450 persons placed under the care of the UHS Oct. 1, by the Valley Health Plan (VHP).

The program received $548 thousand in federal grants in the past three years for a feasibility study to implement the VHP. The plan is a health maintenance program for state employes, their families and others living in the Pioneer Valley providing comprehensive medical care at the University Health Services and Amherst Medical Associates.

According to Averill, students benefit from the program because of the wider range of services now provided, such as a resident allergist, physician, psychiatrist and internist, and the 100 per cent increase in hours for a visiting obstetrician and gynecologist. Averill said the UHS also hopes to add an ear, nose and throat specialist and a dermatologist in the future.

Another benefit, Averill said, is that the plan will add money to the infirmary budget, reimbursing $1 to $2 per head to the Student Health Tax Fund.

The Health Maintenance Organization (HMO) is staffed by a group of health professionals who contract with its subscribers to provice comprehensive health care.

The HMO makes a comperehensive set of quality health services accessible including unlimited outpatient services, extensive preventive services as well as hospitalization coverage.

The Valley Health Plan proposes to reduce the cost of health care to student dependents, faculty, and staff and their dependents, 20 to 30 per cent less than the cost of conventional health care. Averill said however, he expects that this savings will be reached within the first year.

The VHP now enlists 2500 members, 1500 who receive care at the Amherst Medical Associates and 450 who receive care at the UHS. Averill said the UHS had thought there would be more persons using the UHS, however, the lower number has enabled the UHS to provide the same service to students as before.

Averill also said the drop in students enrolled at the University has enabled the UHS to retain the same amount of staff. Last year graduate and undergraduate enrollment at the University added up to 25,000 dropping to 23,000 this year.

Last month, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis signed a bill making the maintenance of HMO's easier and implemention easier as well. Averill said he was delighted in this, saying that the UHS was a leader in this type of medical care through the VHP.

Greenough snack bar may be reopening

By ROSEMARY CONWAY
Collegian Staff

Greenough Snack Bar may be reopened next semester, said John Fisher, Economic Development Coordinator for the Student Government Association (SGA) at last night's meeting of the Central Area Government.

Food Services Director Arthur Warren answered representatives questions regarding dining commons food quality and the Food Services budget, and the explanation concerning the $15 increase in the meal ticket next fall.

Fisher, whose SGA position includes working on co-ops and other student-run services, informed the government that the Greenough Snack Bar currently has a deficit of $3,166.39.

However, Fisher sees the possibility of the snack bar being opened next semester to provide business to the area and to start working on the payment of the deficit.

"It's there, it exists, it can be used," Fisher said. "If we run it conservatively enough, it could work out," he said.

There are three groups who have a say in the re-opening of the snack bar. Central Area Government controls the equipment, Greenough provides the space, and the Undergraduate Student Senate determines Recognized Student Organizations' (RSO) funding. (The Greenough snack bar is its own RSO group, not a division of the Central Area Government).

A question was raised by Treasurer Anthony Burts as to how many people in Central Area would use the facility, since Greenough is near the top of the hill.

Fisher said that factor had been recognized, and that in the top-of-the-hill dormitories alone, there are 998 residents.

The snack bar, which will cost $9-10,000 to prepare for re-opening, will be open six hours a day, with a limited menu and staff.

Fisher said that the biggest problem the snack bar had faced was being on too large a scale.

The proposed plan for next semester is for the snack bar to offer items such as pizzas, subs, and ice cream.

Director of Food Services Arthur Warren told the government that the cost of living increases which will add $30 to the cost of a meal ticket next year will be used to pay for increased food costs and raises in employees' salaries.

Of the Food Services $7 million budget, Warren stated, "40 per cent goes to food, 40 per cent to staff salaries, and 20 per cent to pay off bonds for the facilities.

Complaints were voiced by various members of the government regarding food taste, and nutritional quality, as well as the actual operating hours of the dining commons.

Robert Stone, representative from Baker dormitory, asked Warren why prices were so high at the Munchy's convenience stores, especially after Warren said there was a $40,000 profit from Munchy's sales last year.

Warren said that high prices were mainly caused by the high vandalism and theft rate.

He said the $40,000 profits went back into the Food Services funds.

Director Warren said, "We make our share of mistakes. But some things we do well, and there is no outside corporation making a whole pile of money — it stays right here. There is no incentive to rip off students. You can do any thing you want to do with a meal plan, but it may then run into more money," he added.

In other business, the New World Cehter reported that they have spent $925 to date, and the Craft Shop reported expenditures of $1500.

OH agricultural revival discussed

By BETSY HARKINS
Collegian Staff

The Coalition for Alternative Agriculture and Self Sufficiency met with faculty members of the Stockbridge School of Agriculture and the College of Food and Natural Resources last night to gain support in reviving the Orchard Hill site as a productive area for growing fruit and vegetables.

The Coalition is desiring a plan that will allow students to use the land, which has been abandoned since 1965, as an educational resource for practical training as well as University graduation credit for students who are interested in agriculture and may not be able to have a similar opportunity in their UMass degree program.

The coalition is considering as an objective of the program to use the food produced for a more self-sufficient University community.

In a recent random survey conducted by the coalition of about 300 students, it was found there was a general interest in the coalition's objectives to use the orchard site for the growing of fruits and vegetables. The survey showed that 86 per cent of the surveyed students were interested in preservation and development of the orchard for educational, recreational and agricultural use. The survey also indicated a majority of students would be willing to pay an optional fee on their semester bill for this purpose.

At present the land is not available for use by students on the scale requested by the revival program. Permission must be gained by the UMass Board of Trustees before any action can be taken.

The issue of what exactly will be done with the land if permission is given for its use is not settled. The coalition said it would be best used as an educational experience, a chance for students to work the land and see through practical experience if the work is what they want to do with their life.

It will also serve as a chance for students not majoring in agriculture or a related field to learn to grow fruits and vegetables for their own use.

It is a "plan for the future," said Edward Pachico of the coalition, for the purpose of more self-sufficient agriculture in Massachusetts, which is presently importing 85 per cent of its food.

The coalition requested the support of the faculty to make possible a lasting program, as it would be difficult for students who are usually here a proportionally shorter time than faculty members to do this.

Hugh Davis of the Institute for Man and Environment said the continuation of the program must come from the faculty. He requested those faculty with the knowledge to make the program possible to support it.

Sanford Matathia of the coalition also asked for faculty backing so students could go into the orchard and "do it right.".

The need for more practical agriculture experience was expressed by both faculty and students. Students at the meeting argued that there were not enough "on the job" courses and those that were offered were usually restricted to students in that major.

Other possibilities besides the small fruit and vegetable gardens and the revival of the apple orchard, both which would concentrate in organic gardening, were budding and grafting techniques and trying-out growing different varieties of apples.

Students, faculty, and administrators met last night to discuss possible revival of the orchard for educational use. (Staff photo by Bob Salvucci)

Crown Point residents forced out

By JAY SARET
Collegian Staff

Director of Inspection Services Chester Penza has closed down the Crown Point Apartment building which suffered extensive damage in Sunday night's fire.

"It was unfit for human habitation. There was no hot water, heat or electricity," said Penza.

Firefighters are still investigating the blaze in one of five Crown Point buildings which burnt shortly before midnight.

The blaze, of undetermined cause, left 16 families and four students homeless.

Two people suffered injuries in the two-alarm blaze. Injured were:

Merle Barton, 56, who suffered a fractured ankle when she jumped from her first story apartment, where the fire originated. She was taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton where she is listed in satisfactory condition.

Amherst firefighter Lawrence Bowser, who has slight neck burns from flying sparks. He was also taken to Cooley Dickinson, treated and released.

According to Deborah Trumble, an employe of Crown Point, the homeless were forced to find friends and relatives to stay with. For six families unable to find a dwelling, the Windjammer Motor Inn provide free housing.

An inn employe said that by yesterday afternoon only one of the six rooms remained occupied.

The Crown Point Apartments were constructed in 1963, about two years before the Town of Amherst adopted a building code in January 1965, according to Penza.

"The code requires a firewall for every 3,000 square feet. That building didn't have any," said Penza.

Other Amherst area apartments that were constructed before the building code include Crestview Apartments and one building in Colonial Village. This, however, does not necessarily mean they have the same faults, he said.

An estimate of Crown Point personal property and real estate damage will be released this week. According to officials of the Simon Poverman Insurance Agency, the owners of the property. They said that renovation to the apartment will take months.

Neighbor aids lone injured

By JAY SARET

Merle Barton, 56, was the only resident of the Crown Point Apartments who was injured. The fire originated in her apartment, 362B.

She believes that the fire was caused by electric wiring in the walls of her kitchen.

Barton said she was sleeping at the time the fire began. Luckily for her, Joan Logan wasn't.

Logan lives in 362D, directly above Barton. She smelled smoke and ran down to Barton's apartment to check on her. The door to Barton's apartment was locked, so Logan began banging on the door. The noise awoke Barton.

"The smoke was so thick I couldn't see the door, so I jumped out the window," Barton said.

Her fall resulted in a fractured ankle. She was taken to Cooley Dickinson hospital, where she is listed in satisfactory condition.

Logan is staying with friends who live in another section of Crown Point.

GSS appoints, allocates

By GARY McWILLIAMS
Collegian Staff

Committee appointments and the allocation of senate funds occupied the Graduate Student Senate (GSS) meeting last night.

The senate voted to appoint Emily Rosenburg to the GSS Finance Committee upon the recommendation of Secretary Barbara A. Stack, and appointed Margaret Mauldon to the Faculty Senate Library Committee.

In other actions, the senate continued its involvement on the dispute over its allocation of $1,000 to the Graduate Student Employees Union (GSEU).

The senate is presently contesting the interpretation of University Counsel Arthur Menard that the funds constitute illegal state monies under state labor laws if granted to a group seeking bargaining rights, which is the present position of the GSEU.

Timothy R. Austin, GSS Vice-President, said the issue of the disbursement would be "bullied along" by the senate if a motion was passed demanding the release of the funds. The issue is held up by the University comptroller until the University and the senate determine the primary responsibility for the GSS funds.

The senate then voted to instruct the comptroller to "immediately" release the allocation to the GSEU.

Austin told the senate he expected Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery to abide by the decision of the University counsel as to whether the funds constitute University or student funds.

That decision has not been released by the labor counsel who was requested by Bromery to take a second look at the legality of the grant after a meeting between the GSS officers and Bromery.

Austin said the senate's responsibility in the drawing up of administrative withdrawal procedures was approved by the Associate Dean of the Graduate School, Eugene B. Piedmont.

Austin said he will be working to develop a procedure which is subject to the approval of the Graduate Council and the bursar's office, whose approval completes the process.

In further action the senate discussed the varying methods among Graduate school departments concerning the requirements for graduation.

Secretary Barbara A. Stack told the group in light of the differing procedures used in each department the senate should consider establishing a special meeting to review the requirements with an eye on the regulation of the stipulations.

Northampton votes today

By STEVEN J. POLANSKY
Collegian Staff

Northampton citizens will be voting on a referendum today to decide whether the town will improve it's downtown streets and sidewalks or not.

Downtown TOPICS Program, Traffic Operation Program to Improve Capacity and Safety is a $1.3 million project which if instituted will change the face of Northampton.

Mayor of Northampton David W. Cramer said, "This project has been in the works for the past six years and would include, if passed, new street lights, walk lights and repaving of some select downtown streets. Also, three present two way streets would be rerouted and changed to one way."

The project is strongly endorsed by the mayor's office and city council, but has come under attack by town merchants and citizens.

Cramer said that "safety comes first and that's what TOPICS is all about."

One of the opponents to the project, Robert M. Jordan said "This TOPICS program is fine for large cities like Worcester or Boston, but not for a small town like Northampton. The streets and sidewalks are in real need of repair, but with the institution of this program we stand to lose too much."

Jordan said "We are not in need of such grandiose plans, which include three one way streets and a new set of traffic lights to further confuse people. By all means we don't want to stop progress, but we don't think this is progress."

The plan would take prime downtown parking space and reduce it by 81 parking places. To offset this problem, Cramer said that two off-street parking areas will be made available, as well as room for 44 cars on Gothic street. TOPICS would also build two new parking lots, one such lot is now privately owned and the town will be forced to buy it.

Jordan said "We have a nice wide Main Street now and it would be inconvenient to have to park at the other end of the street when all someone wants is to run into a store to pick up a few items. This would prove to be detrimental to area merchants, as this would make going to the large shopping malls more desirable than downtown stores."

When asked why he was so strongly opposed to the TOPICS program Jordan said, "Why let the Washington bureacrats decide what is best for us? We want to be able to make our own decisions: It's our town.

Voting will be from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Teaching award field now at 45

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

UMass teaching awards for six will come from a field of 45 nominees.

The Distinguished Teacher Award (DTA) Committee will be constantly meeting now to decide who will receive $1,000 and a certificate of commendation each.

Annually, the 15-member committee meets to identify and honor distinguished classroom teaching particularly on the undergraduate level. The DTA committee operates out of the provost's office with input from faculty and students, according to committee member W. Brian O'Connor, a 10-year veteran of the Zoology Department and himself a previous winner.

The nominees came through letters submitted to Mary Ann Digiammo, DTA secretary.

O'Connor said, "A student can tell if the instructor has been nominated, if yellow evaluation sheets are passed out in class." These sheets are given out by liaison with the nominees department. The teacher is asked to leave the classroom while students complete the evaluation. The same sheets are used for both instructors and teaching assistants (TAs).

Evaluation sheets consist of six open-ended questions probing student opinion of how the nominee performs.

"All the committee is interested in, is how the nominee acts on a strictly teaching situation," O'Connor said.

Questions include: —Does the instructor stimulate students through challenging ideas and effective communication techniques? —Does the instructor show concern for students counseling needs? —And "my overall evaluation of this person's competence as a teacher is...."

Graduate students and alumni are also encouraged to participate. Non-classroom evaluation forms are available through the Provost's office. O'Connor believes that these blue forms are more valuable than the yellow sheets because they come from past students who have had more time to reflect on how the nominee's performance has affected their lives.

The first award was given out in 1962 to William H. Ross of the Physics Dept. For 1976-77, three teachers and three TAs will be chosen. Of the fund, $5,000 is donated by Amoco Oil Co and $1,000 from a trust fund given through the Provost's office.

The only criteria that a nominee must have taught at UMass at least three years. Teaching assistants-associates do not have to meet this requirement.

The DTA Committee is formed by past winners who serve two years, an undergraduate student selected by the Student Senate, deans of schools not represented by a DTA winner and a graduate student representative selected by the Graduate Student Senate.

Teachers can be nominated as frequently as peers or students consider appropriate but no teacher can win a second award.

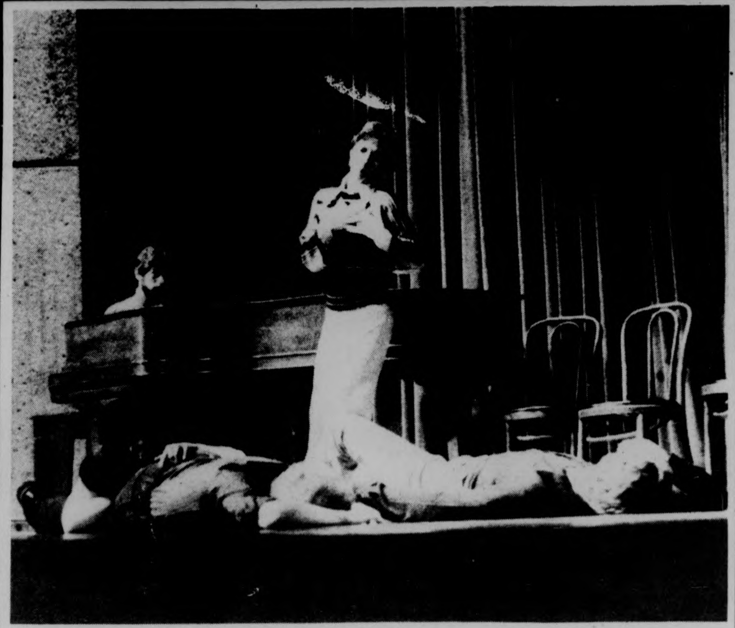
Student and faculty evaluations close Dec. 10. The evaluation will begin during intersession. Each committee member will compile and dissect the evaluations of three nominees, preferably three individuals whom that committee member does not know.

O'Connor hopes that the committee will have finished its deliberations by the end of next semester so results can be announced by commencement.

Elizabeth Martin of the Comparative Literature Dept. and one of last year's winners and this year's chairperson, said that winning the award is something that everyone in her department could be proud of because "it makes all of us look good that someone in the department puts an emphasis on teaching."

O'Connor called it a great personal award, a pat on the back from the students. "Getting recognition from the students is a good feeling and shows that the Provost's office is interested in teaching," he said.

Other previous winners include: Normand Berlin of the English Dept., Robert Livingston of Botany, Jeanne E. Sherrow of Leisure Student-Service and TAs Stephen Austin, Dennis T. Brown, Margaret Hagen and Stephen Bauer.



"The Proposition entertained a near capacity audience last night at the C.C.A. The group performed improvisational skits.

Hearst, awaiting appeal, may live in secluded castle

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — Patricia Hearst may live in a castle while on bail pending appeal of her bank robbery conviction, a mountain county sheriff said yesterday.

Sheriff Bud Taylor of Yreka, near the Oregon-California border, said his office had been contacted by a Hearst family representative about the possibility of Miss Hearst's staying at the secluded mountain retreat of Wyntoon, about 250 miles north of San Francisco.

The castle once was the target of a presumed terrorist bomb attempt.

Her father, San Francisco Examiner President Randolph Hearst, said it had not been determined whether she would stay in her family's heavily guarded Nob Hill apartment in San Francisco where she went last week after being freed on bail, or move to another family retreat.

He said any move would not be announced for security reasons.

Wyntoon is a replica of a Bavarian village in a vast woodland. It was assembled by Miss Hearst's grandfather, the late William Randolph Hearst, as a family vacation spot.

The estate consists of a large stone and timber castle, 'The Gables', and three smaller castles on the banks of the McCloud River surrounded by 200-foot fir trees. The smaller buildings were named by Hearst 'The Bear', 'Cinderella' and 'Angel House.'

On March 11, 1975, authorities found an explosive device and dismantled it at Wyntoon.

Miss Hearst's bank robbery trial resulted in her conviction and subsequent sentence by U.S. District Judge William Orrick Jr. to seven years.

Her serving the remainder of her sentence was delayed Friday when Orrick granted her release on bail of $1 million, $100,000 of it in cash.

By STACY BELKIND
Below the Salt Staff

The Mead Art Gallery at Amherst College is currently exhibiting the works of three outstanding American photographers; Diane Arbus, Walker Evans, and Lewis Hine.

The photographs are on loan from the Minneapolis Institute of Art through December 23.

The photographs of Evans and Hine explore the living and working conditions of the industrial worker in the first and second quarters of the 20th century. Both men examine and document life in the deep south, the mining towns of Pennsylvania, and other rural and city locations where life was never easy and the entire family had to contribute in order to insure the evenings's meal.

Hine (1874-1940), focused his camera on the American laborer whose fortitude and endless labors helped to shape our nation's industrial power. Many of these laborers were young children.

Before child labor laws were passed and enforced, young children spent long days in textile mills and coal mines while other children remained at home as "homeworkers". In 1908, Hine became an investigator-photographer for the National Child Labor Committee and exposed the working conditions of the child laborer.

It is in these photographs, that Hine has so eloquently captured the strength and endurance of these young workers in their daily routine. The very stark portraits radiate the serious and capable nature of the child laborer. In the factory portraits we can begin to understand how fast these children had to grow up and how important their contribution was for family survival.

Evans (1903-1975), was also concerned as a documentary photographer with capturing the social conditions that governed the life of poor rural workers in the second quarter of this century.

His photographs remain solid testimony of the harsh life, which is reflected by the shabbiness and frailty of the wooden structures. The monotony of life is personified by the repetition of wooden panels, chimney stacks, row houses, and railroad tracks that frequent so many of his photographs.

In 1935, Evans joined the historical unit of the Farm Security Administration. Within the next year and a half he paved the way for American documentary photography to become an important aspect of mass communication.

Arbus (1923-1971), is represented by ten photographs taken in the sixties. She photographs the more bizarre figures of American society. Her very honest and impartial eye has captured fragments of the lives of people that exist outside the mainstream of conventional society.

We are confronted with a transvestite in curlers as he prepares himself for the annual drag ball, the Jewish giant as he towers to the ceiling in his parent's Bronx livingroom and the elderly nudist couple as they relax in their home. Her photographs are not intended to shock the viewer, but rather meant to be viewed in the same objective light they were taken in.

Guerilla St. Theatre

The Afcom Guerilla Street Theatre was founded in May '76 by Poet-Activist Askia M. Toure, Jabali Wazuri and Ray Mahiri, all members of Philadelphia's Black community.

It was created in the tradition of "Theatre of Committment" developed in the late 1960's: the tradition of the various Black arts "Theatres", the "Third World Revolutionists", "Spirit House" of Newark and "Seeds of Blackness" of Philadelphia. These theatres were founded to elevate the political and cultural consciousness of the Black community, highlighting the positive values and exposing the negative forces preventing Black people from realizing self determination.

The theatre has performed throughout the Philadelphia area, at outdoor festivals, rallies and demonstrations. It has also performed at an Afro-Puerto Rican Festival in Trenton, New Jersey in late August. It has its own theatre center located at the Afcom Learning Center, where it has given many performances of highly original material by the playwrights and poets of the Black community.

All in all, The Afcom Guerilla Street Theatre has embodied the aspirations of the Black people, while capturing their political and cultural essence in dazzling images and language reflective of the dynamic, new generation of Afrikans in the United States determined to create a new life for Black people in this New World A Coming!

WASHINGTON: President Ford and Jimmy Carter ended their first meeting since the election with a pledge for a smooth transition of administrations. The meeting took place yesterday in the White House.

Ford, Carter meet in Washington

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford, meeting with Jimmy Carter for the first time since the election, told his successor yesterday it would be "very beneficial" for him to confer with world leaders soon after the inauguration.

Sitting beside a fireplace in the Oval Office, the two men discussed economic issues and other topics related to the transition that will put a Democrat in the White House for the first time in eight years.

Ford and Carter talked about the possibility of another international economic summit conference similar to those held in recent years in Puerto Rico and in Rambouillet, France. It has been widely speculated that a third meeting would be held in Tokyo.

Apparently discussing the budgetary process, Ford told Carter: "We are within reachable agreement, but we still have some agency differences to sort out." Budget Director James T. Lynn said earlier that Ford still was reviewing agency requests, and each agency had a right to appeal Ford's tentative decisions.

Senate investigates cause of Legionnaire's disease

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] — Nearly four months after the first victim became ill, "Legionnaire's Disease" remains a mystery and a congressional subcommittee wants to know why.

The subcommittee, chaired by Rep. John M. Murphy, D-N.Y., opens a two-day hearing today with 16 experts expected to appear to discuss the cause of the malady which resulted in 29 deaths.

The mysterious illness broke out after a state American Legion convention was held at the Bellevue Stratford Hotel July 21-24. Another 150 persons were made ill by the disease.

Murphy's subcommittee already has provided a background paper which was critical of local, state and federal health officials involved in the investigation of the illness. The report, leaked to the press earlier this month, prompted swift rebuttal from the criticized agencies and individuals.

Among those scheduled to testify are officials from the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, local and state health officials, Dr. William Sunderman Jr. of the University of Connecticut School of Medicine, and officials of the American Legion.

Murphy's subcommittee sponsored a bill on toxic substances which became law in October and provides for data collection on all toxic substances.

The background paper suggested the hearing should discuss how to improve the capabilities for dealing with future outbreaks which could be caused by a toxic substance.

OPEC denies price hike

[UPI] — The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries officially denied yesterday its Economic Commission will recommend a 20 per cent increase in oil prices at its ministerial meeting next month. Other reports indicated an increase of at least 10 per cent is likely.

"Reports about a recommendation for a 20 per cent increase are totally wrong," Hamid Zaheri, OPEC's chief of information said at the group's headquarters in Vienna. He said the commission has drawn up its recommendation, but it will not be released before the ministers' meeting in Doha, Quatar, next month.

Zaheri said the recommendation was "definitely not" for a 20 per cent increase, but he could not reveal its contents because "it would be misleading."

OPEC's Economic Commission met in Vienna last week to draw up the proposal for a new oil price to be decided by the oil ministers at their meeting, scheduled for Dec. 15.

In Beirut, the authoritative Middle East Economic Survey said at least seven of the 13 OPEC members will press for an increase ranging from eight to 25 per cent.

Iraq, a "hard-line" member of the oil cartel, has indicated it will seek a "minimum" increase of 25 per cent, while Saudi Arabia — the world's largest oil exporter — reportedly favors an increase of only eight per cent, the weekly said.

Israel sends defenses to Lebanese border

TEL AVIV, Israel [UPI] — Israel is sending tanks and troops reinforcements to the border with Lebanon to prevent Syrian and Palestinian forces from approaching too close to the frontier, military sources said yesterday. But all was reported quiet along the northern front.

The sources said the buildup underlined Defense Minister Shimon Peres' warning that Israel would refuse to let hostile Arab forces move into southern Lebanon.

Military analysts pinpointed the Litani River as the "red line" beyond which the Israeli government would not permit Syrian advances into southern Lebanon. Israeli officials have never identified the line publicly.

Romance revealed between Ike and wartime chauffeur

NEW YORK [UPI] — Dwight D. Eisenhower had a romance with his British World War II female aide according to the memoirs written by the woman and published yesterday in condensed form in the December issue of the Ladies' Home Journal.

The woman, Kay Summers — by now deceased, reportedly wrote the account of her relationship with Eisenhower while dying of cancer.

"The General is dead," she wrote. "I am dying. Twenty years ago, anything that could have been construed as a shadow on the General's character would have been seized upon as a political weapon.

Miss Summersby was, according to the Journal, a fashion model who became a member of Britain's Motor Transport Corps and later a WAC officer. She worked for Eisenhower between 1942 and 1945.

In the article Miss Somersby tells of how her relationship with Eisenhower gradually developed from friendship to love while she was his aide and driver in Britain and North Africa.

Miss Somersby's account included several instances of kissing and hugging between her and the general but no statement that the couple had sex relations.

"For over a year," she wrote, "Ike and I had spent more time with each other than with anyone else. We had worked, worried and played together. Love had grown so naturally that it was a part of our lives, something precious that I had taken for granted without ever putting a name to it."

Jai alai records success in seaport city

NEWPORT, R.I. [UPI] — Impressed with jai alai's first season in this historic seaport, Mayor Humphrey J. Donnelly thinks a gambling casino should be opened along millionnaires' row.

Donnelly plans to ask the City Council tomorrow to endorse the concept and seek a local referendum on the matter as legalized gambling continues to make inroads in the East.

"I am not looking for a Las Vegas atmosphere," the mayor said. "I would not settle for anything unless it would be a high class operation."

He proposes a high-class gambling casino that would be "beneficial" to the city. He suggested one of the city's mansions for a casino.

State Rep. James F. Mahoney, D-Newport, yesterday announced opposition to the plan. He said one isolated casino would not be economically feasible. Mahoney said the city's economic development program should be more broadly based than on legalized gambling.

Donnelly contends casino gambling is nearing New England, citing recent approval of casinos in Atlantic City, N.J.

"Newport would be a better attraction than Atlantic City," Donnelly said. "We would attract a tremendous amount of people who would otherwise fly to Las Vegas."

Jai alai ended its first season Saturday night in Newport after a slow start in June. Fronton officials said they expected the new venture would prove a moneymaker when final receipts are counted.

Report claims fewer convicts return to prison

BOSTON [UPI] — Fewer ex-convicts return to prison now than 10 years ago and the drop may be due in part to the success of the controversial furlough and pre-release programs, a Department of Correction report claimed yesterday.

Correction Commissioner Frank Hall said the findings "provide solid support for community based correctional programs," including furloughs and pre-release programs.

Hall said the 44-page study, prepared by DOC research specialist Daniel P. LeClair also revealed "there'll always be those people who don't make it on the outside," depending on their age, prior drug activity, prior criminal activity as a juvenile.

The commissioner called for expansion of existing furlough and pre-release programs and said he was confident the administration could "weather" annual legislative efforts to curtail furloughs.

Debate goes on over X-ray value

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Specialists at a national conference yesterday generally agreed about the value of x-rays in detecting breast cancer in women over 50 but there was considerable controversy about their use in younger women.

Expanding on an issue that has seen major debate during the past 18 months, Dr. John C. Bailar of the National Cancer Institute said he believes a low percentage of women under 50 have significant risk of developing breast cancer to justify x-ray examinations, called mammograms.

Bailar, a vocal opponent of the routine use of mammography, said he believes that for most women under 50 the risk associated with the radiation dose outweighs the benefits the x-rays give doctors in spotting otherwise hidden forms of the disease.

The benefits of mammography, however, were apparent in a report by Dr. Diane Fink, director of the division of cancer control at the NCI.

Fallout cloud circles planet

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The fallout cloud from the latest Chinese nuclear blast dusted the United States with only very low levels of radiation but will be returning later this week as it continues to circle the planet, the Environmental Protection Agency said yesterday.

The highest level of radiation from the cloud, which drifted east from coast to coast during the weekend, was picked up at Cheyenne, Wyo. That reading, 21 picocuries, was described as insignificant from a health standpoint.

EPA said the cloud has now stretched out and become more like a band around the earth, the leading edge of which will reappear over the West Coast about tomorrow.

Sex... it's all semantics

"Are you a turtle?" a friend asked the other day, as we sat in U.P. "A what?" I replied, wondering when our pizza would be done. "A turtle," she said, and proceeded to give me the Turtle Test. The second question of the Test is: What's a four letter word for intercourse that ends in "K"?

Obvious, right? Wrong. A four letter word for intercourse ending in "K" is talk.

Think about that for a minute. When has it ever occurred to any of us, unfamiliar with the Turtle Test that discussing this column with a friend is a form of intercourse. Say intercourse, and the first thing that springs to most people's minds is sex, and not even the kind of sex that involves two people caring very much about each other.

Another friend once mentioned that all the slang words connected with intercourse are also used in other, nasty connotations, as in "Go screw yourself". How, then, can you equate sex with tenderness, when you've just told someone to "Get fucked". The negativeness carries over from one situation to another.

In most sexual situations on campus, this kind of hard-boiled attitude about what name love-making goes under is a matter of complete indifference. What's the diff, if you "Lay a broad," or you make love to a woman? A big difference, because the question is more than one of semantics. One phrase conjures up one kind of image; the other phrase, an image of a completely different nature.

Once you start thinking in those images, you transfer them to the real situation you're in, and the real person you're with, and up go the barriers of distance and unconcern. The person that you're with is either thinking the same way, or realizes that you're thinking that way, and behaves accordingly. So, a vicious cycle is perpetuated. And somewhere along the line, someone who is trying for a little more, is bound to get hurt by this "harmless" acting out of language images. In turn, the one who is hurt will take it out on someone else.

In the end, we all become a little less open, a little less trusting, a little more cynical and a little more likely to stick with the game. That way, we don't leave ourselves open to hurt; we shield our vulnerability behind a wall of brief and unsatisfying encounters.

That we also remove the potential for love, and caring, and what can be a commitment to growing together and trusting one another is a casualty of hard-boiledness that gets lost in the shuffle.

commentary

Getting nowhere —fast

By BRYAN HARVEY

It is comforting to know that we still solve our problems by confrontation. I was afraid that all these books and professors and things were going to make us soft, to still the blood-lust inherent in every political controversy.

I saw a poster tacked up to the wall Thursday, exhorting all and sundry to attend a meeting of the "ad hoc Committee to Fight DVP's Blatant Sexism." Being a natural-born fool, I attended, for it seemed to me that there might well be a legitimate grievance here. While I have attended several events sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program this year, all the speakers I have seen were men.

It was established in the first ten minutes of the meeting that only one woman had been brought to campus by the DVP, while five men have appeared, with several more to come this semester.

The immediate issue, however, was DVP's rejection of four proposed female speakers at its meeting Wednesday night. The ad hoc Committee (a loose coalition, made up primarily of representatives of various women's organizations on campus) was demanding an explanation of this action.

Except that the people in that room weren't really looking for an explanation. They were looking for blood.

As soon as the meeting started, the threats began to fly around the room. The poster had spoken of the possibility of freezing the DVP's funds, and of perhaps occupying the DVP office in the Student Union. Considerable time was spent discussing the prospects of a suit against DVP under Title IX, a federal guideline prohibiting discrimination on the basis of sex in colleges accepting federal funding.

What depressed me most, however, was that all these threats were being made by students against other students.

The DVP is not an evil organization. It is made up of well-meaning, hard-working students who try to bring speakers of some educational value to campus. It is my opinion that the DVP has not done enough to bring women to campus, but some of the things said in that meeting were idiotic, and most of the rest were inappropriate.

It was clear from the beginning that the ad hoc committee was not primarily concerned with simply increasing the number of women brought to campus to speak. When one member of the DVP mentioned attempts to bring Congressperson Bella Abzug to campus, she was greeted with a chorus of snickers from those present.

Former Student Government co-president Ellen Gavin, apparently making a political curtain-call, challenged the DVP representatives to explain the difference between Abzug and one of the lesser-known speakers rejected the night before. The DVP person tried to explain that Bella Abzug could pack a large auditorium, while someone with a lower name-recognition would play to a smaller house. This argument did not impress the ad hoc committee.

My question is this: is Bella insufficiently female, or is it that she is insufficiently skilled as a speaker? I am in total agreement with those who wish to see more women speak on campus, but the DVP is funded by student tax dollars, paid primarily by white, middle-class students. If they turn out in large numbers to see Art Buchwald, or Mel Blanc, or even Eldridge Cleaver, then the DVP has an obligation to continue to meet those articulated desires. I may not agree, but what I think isn't worth two whiskers off a rat's tail.

At the same time, though, the DVP has a fundamental obligation to offer other viewpoints, and address the needs of those with less establishment desires.

But in the end, there are going to be more Art Buchwalds and Mel Blancs and Eldridge Cleavers brought to campus than outsiders; and the DVP is going to be more involved in recognizing fame than helping others achieve it.

There is no justification for turning the only tax-supported speaker program on campus into a political tool (although it is certainly true that bringing Mel Blanc to campus is political tool of the middle-class), and there is certainly no justification for students to attempt to intimidate other students.

We are highly organized on this campus; we have learned to demand much and raise the social costs of refusal to a high level. But brow-beating other students is at best counter-productive.

Sickening cynicism

To the Editor:

One of the positive things to be said about a University campus is that in it is provided the opportunity for people to be exposed to new ideas, new ways of thinking about and-or looking at the world, or expanding their notions of just what in fact the world is, and their position in it.

I'm sick of opening the Collegian Editorial-Commentary section to find Rick Gureghian's cynical, sarcastic, unneeded, and unreasonably thought out "commentaries".

Your ramblings are reflective of an already much too pervasive cynicism on this campus, and the way you choose to use your column space only reinforces, and in some cases may legitimize it.

Given that thousands of people read this paper everyday, you, as one of the few steadily visible commentators — i.e. you have an insured access to space, abuse your position and obviously deny the responsibilities inherent in that kind of a position.

In November 8th's column all the things you chose to comment on are of extreme importance to many individuals and communities on this campus. Your flagrant disrespect for them is not only appalling in its offensiveness to them specifically, but is so also in what it says about your disrespect for people in general.

You randomly criticize other people's efforts at dealing with problems constructively, and mock attempts at educating and motivating this college community towards responsibility to deal with and understand some realities in this world, that, by the way, effect US, and that means YOU.

To begin with, your treatment of the cause of the five Puerto Rican Nationalist Prisoners exhibits an extreme ignorance of the reasons for their actions, the seriousness of the Puerto Rican struggle for National Independence and Liberation, and your relationship to it as a citizen of this country whose government is in the business of colonialism. You reject Mao Tse-Tung in entirety because Chinese peasants were killed during the Revolution, yet you fail to acknowledge the murder inherent in the U.S. government's policy towards Puerto Rico [as ONE example]. American doctors are sent to Puerto Rico to sterilize the women, just as American doctors are paid by the U.S. government to sterilize poor woman of color in this country.

Your logic fails rather fundamentally. If you object to killing, then object to all killing; don't insult the intelligence of the people who read your column by trying to pass off sarcastic slander as thoughtful or serious argument. By making rash statements that have little or no foundation and are really nothing more than a reflection of your not having taken the time or care to investigate what you're talking about, you make a mockery of what it means to be a student, to say nothing about your responsibility as a writer on the staff of the most widely read campus paper.

I strongly object to the way you abuse the space available to you, and urge you to take a serious look at what you're doing. Consciously or not, you foster and contribute to the widespread ignorance of and disregard for the issues that affect us all. Your column serves to further delay any such understanding from taking place. I believe that what you are doing is wrong and deserves real thought on your part, not that which you try to pass off as such. Surely you'll reconsider. If not, you'll have made it clear that you don't wish to be taken seriously.

Evaluating courses

To the Editor:

Among particular strata of our society, secrecy has been manipulated to deny those without power certain basic rights. Currently, students must base their choice of courses solely upon information that is selective, incomplete and sometimes self-serving. Whitmore does not care to perceive the liabilities of this policy. The time has come for students to publish their own evaluation guide. "What we don't know will hurt us." If you have any questions or advice please contact us.

A friend...

Friendship is just a word to some people, but if you are lucky enought to know someone like I did, then friendship has an extra special meaning.

If you have a friend like I did, then friendship is a ray of sunshine, which is present no matter what the day is like outside. A friend is someone who will brighten your day with his smile, even if his day isn't going right. Sunshine also comes from within a friend, not just from the world outside.

Friendship means always having someone to turn to when you need support or when you are feeling down. A friend is always there, and he is never too busy, even if your problem seems minute compared to his problems. A friend always has time for you.

Friendship is showing a genuine interest in what a person has to say or what a person is doing. A friend always listens to you and takes your troubles to heart, as if they were his own. There is never a moment when a friend isn't trying to help you with a problem. A friend never turns to you and says, "That's stupid." He will always try to comfort you.

Friendship is taking the time for everyone around you; making everyone you meet your friend. A friend will meet people and find out everything about them. A friend will show a genuine interest in his fellow beings.

Friendship means never judging people before you meet them. All people have some good in them. It is our job to look for that good and let the good, no matter how small, outweigh the bad. To be understanding is to find they have more good then you imagined.

The last thing I have to say about friendship is that we never really appreciate our friends until it is too late. A friend is the greatest of all our possessions; not material possessions, but spiritual ones. If you are lucky enough to have a friend like this, don't wait until it is too late to show your love to him. Tell him now, for tomorrow may be too late.

Also remember, a friend like this will never die even if he is no longer physically present. A true friend moves his other friends to carry on his ways and to live life to its fullest. If your friend like mine is no longer with you, remember him with a smile, not tears, or you haven't really remembered him at all.

In memory of Peter Aumais.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

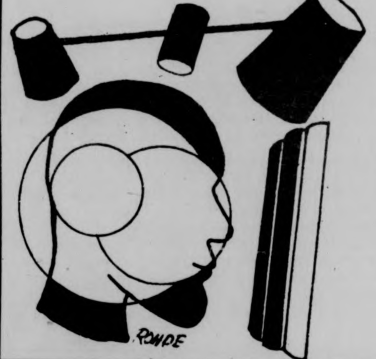
Sounds of silence

So much of our time with people is spent in silence. Rather than talk and listen to the people that we see everyday, rather than reach out and try to appreciate those who are different, we sit in silence, and shut out those whom we fail to understand, those whom we fear to understand.

This silence may not be readily apparent to all, as it takes many subtle and cruel variations. We often are not aware of our own silence, or the silence of others around us until it's too late; by then the bridge between the persons is forever destroyed.

One can find silence when people open up themselves to others, and find that their words, emotions, and dreams fall on deaf ears. Their companions sit there, quietly smiling and nodding, and show no reaction, little understanding, and often little sympathy. Worse yet, they can be misinterpreted and maligned because their companions refused to put a little energy and thought into the listening process.



Silence can then become a case of two persons who refuse to see the other person's view, who continually shout and attack each other. Although one might argue that these people can at least release their anger and frustration, they still fail to reach each other on the same level. These people, blinded by their own perceptions, no longer know that other cultures and values exist.

The other varieties of silence are perhaps the most damaging, the hardest to perceive, and the most difficult to overcome. Some people decide to conform with the norms and values of the surrounding world, and thus suppress their own values and beliefs. They try to look and act "cool," and desperately try to blend in with the all too familiar surroundings. They constantly worry if their image is on straight, and lose their own distinctive identity in the process.

These same people silence all the feelings of anger within themselves, and pretend that these feelings don't exist. They no longer try to explain their needs to the people around them; they no longer share their experiences and their values. And they try to forget how much they hurt.

Finally they retreat and go into hiding. They no longer want to have anything to do with those who have ignored them for so long. They quietly shut their doors and find some peace in the silence that envelops them. They cry, they scream, they ask what has happened, what have others done to them. They are still alone. As long as we continue to turn our backs, they will sit alone, misunderstood, and defenseless.

An amended bottle bill

The defeat of the Bottle Bill reminded me of one of the better lines from the musical 1776, occuring at the point when delegate Dickenson heckled the vocally choleric John Adams. When, contrary to his expected behavior, Adams said nothing in response, Ben Franklin filled the void by saying, "Congratulations, John, you just made your biggest contribution to independence — you kept your flap shut!"

My opposition to the Bill was well known to last year's Collegian readers. This year, because of the rancor the bill caused, to have written a column criticizing the bill might have been to spur greater support for it in the long run, because of the reams of rebuttal such a column would have caused. Now that the election is over, it is time to present specific objections to the bill and an amendment which would preserve its virtues while eliminating at least some of its sins.

The greatest advantage to the bill is the economic dislocation it would cause, which is why both the bottle industry AND the AFL-CIO opposed it. A national bottle bill would cost the industry $5 billion in retooling costs which someone, namely the consumer, has to pay for if the industry is to remain in business. Of course, if the industry declines, so do jobs, which explains the opposition of George Meaney.

The AFL-CIO feels that even if such a bill resulted in a net increase in jobs, it would be unskilled, low paying jobs created in the place of skilled, higher paying (and dues paying) jobs. Basically, opponents cite loss of sales, revenue, jobs, and higher prices for opposition, especially to a nationwide bill. Certainly, sales of soda in metal cans will almost disappear.

The two alleged virtues of the bill are energy savings and litter reduction. On bottles returning to the plant five times (a longtime industry average), supporters say energy costs would be halved. The savings are dubious since such bottles have to be built stronger, transported back and forth, and washed out with hot, energy rich water. Litter reduction is undeniable, for the bottle bill achieves this. But note; it is only a reduction, and not elimination. A bottle bill is not a total response to litter.

The environmental tragedy of bottle bills is their impact on modern solid waste recycling plants. Though most communities still simply dump their garbage, solid waste plants reconvert garbage into usable byproducts, and thus are an environmental wave of the future. They derive revenue by charging communities per ton for garbage, and by selling waste metal to interested firms.

A bottle bill would destroy these plants by lowering the garbage tonnage and revenue from their communities and by eliminating the inflow of discarded metal, currently the only substance they know they can sell off. These plants already process more waste than a thousand bottle bills, and yet they stand to be crippled by the implementation of bottle bills. Thus, bottle bills have the ironic effect of hampering the selfsame environment they are supposed to protect.

I have an amendment for the bottle bill which would preserve its positive aspects while eliminating most of its negative features. The proposal is simple: enforce deposits on all beverage containers as was the intent of the original bill, but instead of requiring re-use of containers, my amendment would forbid re-use, preserving the present one-way system. Litter would still decrease, as much as it ever would have with the present bill, but with this amendment, a minimum of jobs would be lost to the industry, the industry would not have to reconvert its machinery, and best of all, the solid waste industry would remain free to continue the really important work of cleaning up the environment.

How about it, MassPIRG?

Inferno

To the Editor:

Dante read this over the gate to Hell. Perhaps those of you who attend this school can identify another place where these words should be enscribed — Whitmore.

Through me you go into the city of grief,
Through me you go into the pain that is eternal,
Through me you go among people lost.
Justice moved my exalted creator;
The divine power made me,
The supreme wisdom, and the primal love.
Before me all created things were eternal,
And eternal I will last.
Abandon every hope, you who enter here. Dante's Inferno.

Hypocritical reporting

To the Editor:

Most people would agree that the primary function of any public newspaper in a free society is to report fairly and accurately any significant incidents or events that occur within the community it serves. Most would also agree that another important function of such a newspaper is to provide a forum through which individuals not associated with the newspaper's management can express private opinions concerning public events.

Regrettably, I must conclude that neither of these characteristics are to be found in the Daily Collegian. I refer specifically to the Collegian's refusal to report an unquestionably serious and newsworthy incident that occurred during a DVP sponsored meeting between students and Eldridge Cleaver prior to Mr. Cleaver's speech in the Student Union Ballroom. On the day following the incident, the Collegian printed a summary of Mr. Cleaver's speech which included a very brief and somewhat inaccurate account of the incident that occurred at the DVP meeting. No further effort was made to report fully and accurately the entire story, although during the next several days various editorial columnists made cryptic references to the incident.

It occurred to me that the university community was not receiving the information that it deserved in this instance, and that the sketchy treatment that the Collegian had so far given the affair would only serve to arouse confusion and misunderstanding. So, having attended the meeting and having witnessed the events that transpired there, I attempted to remedy the problem by writing a letter to the Collegian describing the events that took place. I concluded this letter with a brief commentary. I was informed that a similar letter had been written by another person who had also attended the meeting.

However, neither letter found its way onto the pages of the Collegian.

The reason given for the suppression of the letters was that their publication would increase racial antagonisms at UMass. This remarkable conclusion was reached apparently because our letters criticized the actions of a UMass professor who happens to be black.

I fail to see why an individual should be exempt from criticism because of the color of his skin. Moreover, I question the contention of the Collegian's Executive Editor, Joe Mahoney, that the proper way to avoid conflict is to suppress any issue that might give rise to it.

But the point to be made here is that the deliberate suppression of an issue — for whatever reason — constitutes nothing less than overt censorship. One can imagine my surprise, then, why I read Joe Mahoney's column in Tuesday's [11-14-76] Collegian. Mr. Mahoney wrote a pious condemnation of the network television news in which he complained that "televised news influences people with not only what is said, but even more from what is not said." Later he adds that "the media will be more responsive ... only when it's more democratically controlled" and "open access to media is a long way off." Mr. Mahoney is an unabased hypocrite. Incredibly, he villifies television news for the very same things that he himself is guilty of as the executive editor of the Collegian. Before we worry about "Tube Liberation" we must first liberate the Collegian, our only source for campus news, from the insidious hypocrisy of people like Joe Mahoney.

Southwest censorship board an infringement

To the Editor:

I am writing to express my concern over the Southwest Assembly's handling of the censorship issue in Southwest. The issue could have been settled if an open referendum had been held, but this was not the case. Instead, an inadequately publicized referendum was hidden away in Hampden Commons. If the Southwest Assembly really wanted to listen to the views of the majority of Southwest residents, the referendum could have been held in Berkshire and Hampshire Commons during dinner hours. If this was done, then maybe more than 243 votes would have been cast.

Now, a 30 member censorship board will be established to decide what films we may and may not see here in Southwest. I believe that the Southwest Assembly is infringing upon my rights as an individual.

Butterfield incident misrepresented

To the Editor:

This letter is a response to Angela Thomas' story on the so-called racial incident in Butterfield dorm. First, it appeared in the story that a group of mostly white people were watching a movie on television, when another group, mostly black, interrupted them with a discussion that was irrelevant to the group watching TV. The natural reaction by the group watching television would be to ask them to be quiet. The people watching TV not making any racial remarks addressed them as "you people". Is this so terrible? I think Ms. Thomas is out of line in considering this a racial incident.

I agree that there is a certain degree of racism on campus; but the story of the incident in Butterfield dorm was only an example of the overreaction of one person towards black-white relations.

Later on in the story she points out that only a small number of people watched a so-called "black" movie. This is an unfair contrast. Most people watch what they want, when they want, regardless of the color of the actor's skin or the racial implications of the plot.

I believe that Ms. Thomas, in making false accusations of racism can only deter her efforts to promote racial harmony on campus.

Human rights

To the Editor:

Recently there has been a lot of talk about individual rights. In the case of pornography a connection has been made that banning pornographic movies is an infringement of an individual's freedom of choice. Individual rights and freedoms are obviously important, however an individual does not have the right to infringe upon the rights of others.

Pornographic movies are seen as oppressive to men as well as women. But! What makes a pornographic movie exploitive and oppressive? When one considers what is being portrayed in these movies, two answers to the question become apparent. The people in these movies don't relate to each other through one to one equality, but instead the male is portrayed as dominant and aggressive, while the female is seen as complient and submissive. In other words, the male is in control of the situation [i.e. he has the power]. Until there is an equal distribution of power, pornographic movies will be exploitive.

The second problem with pornographic movies is the fact that people [usually men] say, "Hey, I would not mind being a sex object." People with this attitude should consider this, "The horrible thing about being treated as a collection of parts is that parts are easily replacable."

Does anyone want to be viewed solely on the basis of physical criteria? These movies reinforce the attitude that sexual exploitation defines an interpersonal relationship.

No one should infringe upon my right, or anyone else's right, to be thought of as a complete human being.

WHEN BOB WOODWARD of Watergate fame spoke with 3,500 students at Indiana University, this Fall, he recited an anecdote of the paranoia that accompanied his investigation.

A page one piece in the Indiana Daily Student quoted him as recalling that one morning, his partner, Bernstein, found a note in his typewriter that read: "Carl Bernstein, you better watch out. You went too far last night."

After a brief period of contemplation, the Dashing Duo realized the note had been left by a copy girl whom Bernstein had been dating and who had no connection with the story.
